Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, I have another amendment which lies on the desk, the effect of which might involve some controversy. I appreciate the cooperation of the Senator from Verment

One section of the bill provides that should the President of the United States find that at some time or other certain commodities from foreign countries may be coming in and flooding the so-called American agricultural market, regardless of the commodity, he may ask the Tariff Commission to make an investigation. For example, in the State of the Senator from Oregon or in my State the situation might involve fruit from Canada, which might glut the market at a certain time. It would not necessarily be an over-all glutting of the market; but particularly in connection with perishable commodities, fruit from other countries might come in and thereby ruin the economy of the fruit industry of a certain section of the country.

The committee has devoted much time and effort in an attempt to solve this problem. It has done so in a very decent way. In effect, it has tried to solve the problem in a long-range agricultural program without violating reciprocal trade agreements. That is a somewhat difficult maneuver. I think the committee has been very successful in its provision in the bill, which does just that.

However, these things happen so quickly that the Tariff Commission often does not act so speedily as we would like. I have before me a compilation of cases involving agricultural commodities which have been placed before the Tariff Commission for study. The compilation is too long to place in the RECORD. The Tariff Commission has been asked to determine whether or not the economy of certain agricultural products was being

Reading through the compilation, I find that the shortest time that the Tariff Commission has required to act with respect to any one product has been from 9 to 10 months. Some of the cases were pending for a very much longer period. I had suggested to the committee that probably the Secretary of Agriculture might be substituted for the Tariff Commission, that he could act more quickly, and therefore we might at least have information. However, I appreciate the problem of trying to tread between giving authority to the President to act upon advice of either the Tariff Commission or the Secretary of Agriculture, and violating our international agreements with respect to reciprocal trade. I wanted the RECORD to show that I hope that under the provisions of the bill, when those representing an agricultural commodity feel that such a thing is happening the Tariff Commission will show a little more speed than it has in the past.

So, Mr. President, I shall withdraw the amendment. If the problem is not solved under the Tariff Commission, I am sure that the committee will be with me in substituting the Secretary of Agriculture.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's amendment to the committee amendment is withdrawn.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. President, I call up the amendment to the committee amendment which I have at the desk, and ask to have it stated. I should state that I offer the amendment on behalf of myself, my colleague the Senator from Maine [Mr. White], the Senator from Idaho [Mr. Dworshak], the Senator from Colorado [Mr. Johnson], and the Senator from California [Mr. Downey].

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the committee amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 81, line 8, after the period, it is proposed to insert the following:

The price of any kind of Irish potatoes harvested after December 31, 1948, shall be supported at not less than 60 percent nor more than 90 percent of the parity price for Irish potatoes as of the beginning of its marketing season.

On page 81, line 10, after the word "commodity", insert "(other than Irish potatoes)."

On page 84, between lines 10 and 11, insert the following:

(c) Section 4 (a) of the act entitled "An act to extend the life and increase the credit resources of the Commodity Credit Corporation, and for other purposes," approved July 1, 1941 (U. S. C., title 15, sec. 713a-8), is amended by inserting after the first sentence thereof the following: "Notwithstanding the expiration of the period specified in the preceding sentence, the price of Irish potatoes harvested prior to January 1, 1949, shall be supported as provided in this section until the close of June 30, 1949."

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. President, this amendment contemplates that the 1940 crop of potatoes shall be supported at the existing parity, up to June 30, 1949, since in the Northern States much of the crop is harvested after January 1, and the only consequence of not having this provision would be that the entire crop, which would amount to at least 100,000,000 bushels, would be dumped on the Government on or before December 31, 1948, while the support price is still in effect. So I think there can be very little dispute about the wisdom of the extension.

The other provision is to take care of the potato crop thereafter at from 60 to 90 percent of parity. The potato producers of the country are quite content to accept the 60-percent provision, believing that it is not an incentive price, and that it will not result in overstimulating the production of potatoes, but will guarantee the producers against losses which might otherwise have a very disastrous effect.

I hope that the chairman of the committee may feel that he can accept this amendment. Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, ordinarily I should be reluctant to designate any of the nonbasic commodities or fix the level at which they should be supported. It was the expectation of the committee that white potatoes, which will keep during transportation anywhere, would be supported by the Department of Agriculture at 60 to 90 percent of parity, and we had so advised the Department.

It was also the expectation of the committee that that part of the 1948 crop not marketed before January 1, 1949, would be supported at 90 percent of parity, as promised by the Steagall amendment.

As I say, I am somewhat reluctant to open the gates. Nevertheless, if they were to be opened to any commodity, potatoes would undoubtedly be the first to come in.

It is only the remainder of the 1948 crop that would be supported at 90 percent of parity. After the 1948 crop, future crops would be supported at from 60 to 90 percent of parity. That is in accord with the belief of members of the committee.

There is some question as to whether or not 60 percent of parity is an incentive price for early potatoes. If it turns out to be, I shall be very glad to sponsor an amendment to the bill next year, or after it has had a trial, correcting any deficiency of that sort which may develop.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. AIKEN. I yield.

Mr. MORSE. I think the last statement the Senator from Vermont has made is very helpful to the problem I have in mind. As the Senator knows, he and I have had several consultations in regard to handling of the potato problem under this bill.

I now understand that with the adoption of the Brewster amendment, those of us who have a large constituency of potato growers will be in a position to tell them that this bill will provide them with 60 to 90 percent of parity.

Mr. AIKEN. The Senator is correct. It is my opinion that the Senator could have so advised them without the adoption of the amendment; but certainly he can so advise them with the adoption of the amendment.

Mr. MORSE. The Senator from Vermont has told me that several times; but I was not able to persuade the potato growers in my State that that would be the result.

I appreciate the acceptance of the amendment by the Senator from Vermont

Mr. AIKEN. I have noticed some considerable skepticism on the part of the potato growers toward the Department of Agriculture, and they were anxious to have this provision written into the law. Although it may not be just the thing to do, I do not know that it will do any harm, if the other 159 agricultural commodity producers do not object. I believe that potatoes are our sixth most valuable field crop.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, while I am on my feet, and while the Senator from Washington [Mr. Magnuson] is in the Chamber, I wonder whether the Senator from Vermont will permit me to ask a question concerning the Magnuson amendment, which has just been withdrawn by the Senator from Washington. We are moving at such a rapid rate that it is difficult to keep up with the amend-

This morning I had another very strong representation made to me-in this instance, by Mr. Klahre, who represents one of the large fruit holdings in my State, at Hood River. He urged upon me the importance of the Magnuson amendment because of the great delays of which the Tariff Commission has been guilty in the past in handling the problems of perishable products. He was very insistent that I do what I could to help secure the adoption of the Magnuson amendment. I told him I would.

I wish to be sure that I understand the situation. I now understand that the Senator from Vermont and also the Senator from Washington are of the opinion that the bill in its present form is such that under it the producers of perishable farm products, such as fruit, will have a quick remedy for and relief in their problems if we permit the procedure to remain in the hands of the Tariff Commission, rather than to transfer it to the Secretary of Agriculture; or at least the Senator from Vermont and the Senator from Washington think that under this bill that is worth a trial.

Is that an accurate statement of the Senator's position?

AIKEN. Mr. President, amendment-which was not offered by the Senator from Washington, but which was explained by him-has a great deal of logic behind it and has much merit. If we were not so near the conclusion of this session of Congress, but were nearer the beginning of the session, I might be tempted to try to do more with the amendment, which the Senator from Washington did not offer.

However, we have already adopted to section 22, amendments which have met with the approval of the State Department: and already we are providing in the bill, I believe, means for supporting the fruit growers, both citrus and acidulous, in such a way that we hope the fruit growers of the Northwest will not again or often find themselves in the predicament in which they found themselves last fall.

I think several pieces of legislation which have been passed by the Congress will be very helpful in keeping the fruit growers of the Northwest, as well as the citrus fruit growers, off the rocks, and keep them from becoming so despondent that they destroy their orchards. However, we know that this piece of legislation will come too late to help in connection with the 1947 crop.

Mr. MORSE. I understand the situation in which we find ourselves, and I wish to cooperate in that regard.

Let me ask whether I am correct in my understanding that both the Senator from Vermont and the Senator from Washington feel that with the changes already provided in the bill, and with this debate on the floor of the Senate concerning the grievances which the fruit growers of the United States have filed against the Tariff Commission as to its past handling of cases, we now have in the bill procedure by which the Tariff Commission can, if it will, in case there should be a recurrence of the problem which has arisen in the past, give the fruit farmers an expeditious handling of their cases.

Mr. AIKEN. The Senator is correct in his assumption; and I assure him that if the Tariff Commission fails to give expeditious consideration to matters of this kind, I shall be glad to join the Senator from Oregon and the Senator from Washington in trying to secure greater speed in arriving at such conclusions.

Mr. MORSE. As the Senator from Washington said, Mr. Klahre told me this morning that from 9 to 10 months was the minimum that was taken by the Tariff Commission in handling their Of course, the disposition of perishable fruit cannot wait for any such

Mr. AIKEN. The Senator will recall that this body passed, either yesterday or the day before, a measure requiring the Tariff Commission to act within 120 days in certain cases.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. AIKEN. I yield.

Mr. MAGNUSON. As a matter of fact, if the Tariff Commission wished to do so. it could act faster than the Secretary of Agriculture could. The Tariff Commission has more facilities and it knows more about the problem; and if it wished to do so, it could act faster on these matters than the Secretary of Agriculture

I am sure the Senator from Vermont will join with all of us in taking action if the Tariff Commission does not improve in its handling of these matters. When we come back in January, we shall either see that the Tariff Commission has changed its handling of them, or else someone should clean out the Tariff Commission with respect to matters

The Secretary of Agriculture does not have the facilities needed to do the job, and that is why he naturally turns to the Tariff Commission in that connection, for that is the Tariff Commission's job. But the Tariff Commission does not seem to want to do it.

Mr. AIKEN. I am willing to accept the statement of the Senator from Washington at face value; I have no doubt that he is correct.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. AIKEN. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. I have not been on the floor for the last few minutes, and I have not heard the amendment fully explained. Does the amendment provide a support price for all types of potatoes, or is it confined to stored potatoes?

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. President, the word "storable" is not included. The amendment covers all Irish potatoes, whether early or late.

The Senator remembers that he thought the payment might be an incentive; but I have before me figures bearing on that matter, if they will be of interest to the Senator.

Mr. HATCH. Yes, they will be.

Mr. BREWSTER. I took the trouble to obtain these figures on the question of incentive payments:

On the general situation, the figures are very impressive, inasmuch as they show that during the period in which we have been paying 90 percent of parity, the total acreage has declined from 3,-599,200 acres, which was the national acreage in 1934, to 3,239,000 acres, which was the acreage in 1943, when Steagall support became effective.

In 1947 the acreage is down to 2,111,-900, or a decrease of 1,127,000 acres, or 35 percent in 5 years while we were supporting potatoes at 90 percent of parity.

But I believed that those figures were not adequate, and I wished to know about the early potatoes, which are the ones which have given me concern.

I have before me the figures for the acreage planted to Irish potatoes by seven early-potato States. They show an acreage in 1941, of 490,000; and in 1947, an acreage of 407,000, or a decline of almost 25 percent in the acreage during the period when we were supporting at 90 percent of parity.

Therefore, it seems to me to be clear that a 60-percent-of-parity provision certainly cannot be considered as likely to prove to be an incentive.

Mr. HATCH. Of course, the Senator from Maine is familiar with the conditions existing and the wide publicity which was given to the great piles of potatoes that could not be stored or shipped, and had to be destroyed.

Mr. BREWSTER. Yes.

Mr. HATCH. It was very unfortunate publicity for the entire farm program, for the growers and everybody else. What I am interested in is, under the provisions of the bill, will a similar situation be created?

Mr. BREWSTER. Certainly not, under a 60-percent-parity provision. That is the proposal of the potato growers themselves, who recognize exactly what the Senator from New Mexico points out, and who have no desire to have anything that would be characterized as an incentive payment. They feel confident this would mean that the production of potatoes would be in the hands of the more efficient producers.

Mr. President, will the . Mr. THYE. Senator yield at that point?

Mr. HATCH. I yield. Mr. THYE. The Senator from New Mexico mentioned the piles of potatoes which were deliberately permitted to deteriorate. In order that there may be no misunderstanding so far as the consumer is concerned, that took place really in the year 1946, and it was the 1946 crop that created such a problem. It was not that the potato producer has planted a greater number of acres, but in general, throughout the Nation, there was about a 25-percent increase in total yield per acre for that particular year. The total increase throughout the Nation brought about a large surplus, and they were not prepared to cope with it. There was some deterioration and some loss. But last year, for instance, the crop year of 1947, whatever potatoes were in surplus, in areas where they were required to be bought to support the price, large quantities of those potatoes were processed so that they could be properly stored either as potato alcohol or as dehydrated potatoes. So, in general, it was only in the year 1946 that we actually had an embarrassing problem insofar as the price-support program was concerned.

Mr. HATCH. It was an embarrassment so far as the price-support program was concerned.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. President, who has the floor?

Mr. AIKEN. I had yielded the floor to the Senator from New Mexico. I think one of the most unfortunate incidents which has happened to our Government in recent years was the piling up of potatoes in the State of Alabama 2 years ago. They were photographed, and the photographs were allowed to be sent all over the world, showing how wasteful we

Mr. HATCH. If the Senator will yield, I was about to mention the fact that I saw pictures of those potatoes in foreign papers, scattered about as propaganda against our country.

Mr. AIKEN. As a matter of fact, the total cost of supporting potatoes in Alabama for the year 1947 crop was $1,800 for No. 1 potatoes, $82,300 for secondgrade potatoes, or only $84,000 in all. It is one of the smaller States, and the matter was very widely publicized.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. AIKEN. I yield. Mr. BREWSTER. I know everyone interested in potatoes felt most keenly, and I know all our growers were distressed beyond compare at the wastage of that food. It grew, however, as the Senator from Minnesota has pointed out, from the use of new discoveries incident to the war in the eradication of potato pests. The use of DDT and other insecticides accounted in some substantial manner for the extraordinary production in that year.

I should like to ask unanimous consent to insert at this point in the RECORD the two tables which I have prepared covering the reduction in potato acreage in recent years.

There being no objection, the tables were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Acreage planted to Irish potatoes in seven early-potato States

	1941	1942	1943	1944	1945	1946	1947
California	39	35	49	64	73	81	62
Oklahoma	27	32	44	27 86	20 72	21 83	15 72
North Carolina.	84 30, 6	92 28	110 32. 6		35, 4		29. 9
Alabama	54	52	51	57	47	46	37
Texas	58	50	67	56	50	54	43
Louisiana	43	42	57	61	43	42	32
Total	490	498	617	552	484	516	407

In answer to statements that 60- to 90-percent-of-parity support for Irish potatoes would be an incentive to increase acreage:

In 1934, in depression, the national acreage was 3,599,200. Steagall support was effective in 1943 and the national acreage was 3,239,000.

	Acres
In 1944	2, 785, 600
In 1945	2, 700, 200
In 1946	2, 598, 500
In 1947	2, 111, 900

This indicates a decrease every year in acreage, totaling 1,127,100 acres, or 35 percent in 5 years, during the period when potatoes were supported at 90 percent of parity.

Mr. HATCH. I understand both the Senator from Maine and the Senator from Vermont, as well as the Senator from Minnesota, are convinced that the 60 percent will not prove to be an incentive which would create conditions such as existed before.

Mr. AIKEN. If I may make a statement, I had the impression that 60 percent would prove to be an incentive price for the early-potato regions of the South; it may still be so. However, upon examination of the costs of supporting the potato price for the 1947 crop, I find that three-fourths of the cost was incurred in the States of Maine, New York, and New Jersey. I was rather surprised to find that, because I thought more of the expense was incurred in the South. Virginia was in fourth place. North Carolina came in for a substantial amount. I do not think the Department should be expected to support absolutely unmerchantable potatoes which perhaps would not keep overnight, but if they are potatoes which could reasonably be shipped, but could not be because of the lack of a market or the lack of transportation, which I understand was the case in the famous Alabama potato pile, then it appears to me there might be support. However, if 60 percent proves to be an unreasonable price, I would be willing to agree to try to change it.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I shall not delay a vote on the amendment. However, I would say some Senators have had to leave, and I have been asked to suggest the absence of a quorum after the amendment has been voted on.

Mr. AIKEN. Please do not suggest the absence of a quorum until after the amendment is voted on.

Mr. HATCH. It was my intention to suggest the absence of a quorum after that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. question is on agreeing to the amendment submitted by the Senator from Maine, for himself and other Senators, to the committee amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HATCH. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Ninetyone Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. SPARKMAN obtained the floor. Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Alabama yield?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I yield to the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. TYDINGS. I send to the desk on behalf of the junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. O'Conor] and myself, an amendment which I ask to have printed and to lie on the table for the present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment which I ask to have printed and will lie on the table.

SPARKMAN. Mr. President. there is on the desk a series of amendments which I wish to offer to the pending bill. I ask that amendment lettered "L" be stated at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the committee amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 74, line 15, it is proposed to amend the committee amendment by striking out the words "either" and "or."

On page 74, line 16, to strike out the word "without."

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. President, the purpose of this amendment is to bring the bill somewhat in line with the present requirement, and I am hopeful that the chairman of the committee will accept the amendment.

I may say that amendment lettered "N", which I also offer, is an alternative amendment to this. If this amendment shall be accepted, then it is not my pur-pose to offer amendment lettered "N." If this amendment shall not be accepted, then I shall offer amendment "N" and insist upon it.

Under the regulations which are in effect at the present time, cotton, both within and without the United States, is counted in computing the amount of the carry-over, the amount on hand at any one particular time. The effect of the amendment would be to exclude from the calculation cotton outside the United States, and if that is done, then a 30-percent allowance for carry-over will just about bring it in line. If that is not done, then the 40-percent allowance is necessary to bring it in line.

As a matter of fact, the figure that was placed in the bill by the committee is not realistic. It sets the amount of the cotton carry-over, according to the estimate I have before me, at entirely too low a

The purpose of these two amendments is to bring that figure somewhat in line with conditions as they actually exist.

Mr. President, that is about all I care to say about the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. question is on agreeing to the amendment submitted by the Senator from Alabama to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. AIKEN obtained the floor.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Vermont yield?

Mr. AIKEN. I yield.

Mr. FERGUSON. I find in the report, on page 6, the language "In the event of national need the Secretary of Agriculture may raise the support price of a commodity above 90 percent of parity." Can the Senator advise me as to the definition of "national need"?

Mr. AIKEN. I shall do the best I can

Mr. AIKEN. I shall do the best I can for the Senator from Michigan. That might almost have been written "national emergency," yet national emergency was not exactly what we meant.

It is provided that in the event we as a Nation desperately need certain farm commodities the Secretary may break through the 90-percent ceiling and establish a higher support level in order to get production adequate to meet the needs of the Nation.

We have only one example of that at the present time, and that is in the case of flax. As most all Senators know, the supply of flaxseed and linseed oil has been cut off from the United States. The world supply is very short, and what we can get is totally inadequate. It was necessary for the Secretary to offer a price-support floor of approximately 150 percent of parity to get enough flax planted in order to meet the needs of the United States. It is not expected that the Secretary would exercise the power granted by this provision except in cases which virtually amounted to an emergency.

Mr. FERGUSON. One difficulty we have encountered in the past 15 or 18 years has been that we have lived practically in a state of emergency, and I am wondering, if we leave this provision as wide open as it now is, whether it would be either wise or desirable. I am generally in favor of the bill, but I have several questions like this one upon which I should like to get some information. Particularly I should like to have it in the Record for the purposes of construction.

Mr. AIKEN. I am glad to reply to the Senator for the record. The committee considered that situation very seriously because we, too, were reluctant to grant any unnecessary power, yet, with the example which we had before us, we did not see any other course to take. We felt that an emergency might arise, or almost an emergency, anyway, when Congress might not be in session. Furthermore, it seems rather cumbersome to attempt to enact special legislation for each such commodity as flax.

I feel that any Secretary of Agriculture would be very reluctant to abuse the power, and it certainly is not the intent of the committee that he should exercise such power in any event short of a national emergency, or what was almost an emergency, but an acute shortage of linseed oil is probably a real emergency.

Mr. FERGUSON. Will the Senator yield for another question?

Mr. AIKEN. I yield.

Mr. FERGUSON. The emergency provision does not apply wholly to the six farm crops known as basic commodities.

Mr. AIKEN. That is true. Flax itself is not a basic commodity.

Mr. FERGUSON. I understand. Would it be possible to insert some kind of definition, for example, that the supply would have to go below a certain amount before the Secretary could go over the 90 percent?

Mr. AIKEN. No. I think he might have to encourage production in anticipation of a shortage. With the growing shortage in wool throughout the world, it has occurred to me that we might eventually have to make some unusual provision for the production of wool. Of course, that would not be an overnight matter because it is not possible to raise a sheep overnight.

Mr. FERGUSON. My difficulty is that it almost appears to me, as the bill is written, that there really is not a ceiling of 90 percent; it lies solely in the discretion of the Secretary of Agriculture; and while we use the 90-percent provision in relation to the six basic commodities, we use the floor there, but there is a ceiling in regard to the other commodities and no floor. I am wondering about peanuts, and why there is no provision as to some of the northern crops, why there is no provision for navy beans, for instance, which are grown in Michigan.

Mr. AIKEN. If peanuts had not already been in the list of basic commodities, we probably would not have put them in. To qualify as a basic commodity, the commodity must be produced in exportable quantities, and have long-keeping characteristics. Peanuts are well down on the list of field crops; I think they are eighteenth in value of the field crops which are raised in this country.

A question entered the minds of the committee as to whether we should designate certain crops which should be supported at from 60 to 90 percent of parity, as the basic commodities are to be supported under the requirements of the bill. Then we realized that there were 151 farm commodities which were not basic. We did not know where to draw the line. We expect that important commodities-and i include field peas, beans, potatoes, soybeans, barley, and oats-will be supported at the same rate as the basic commodities, which is 60 to 90 percent of parity. But there are other nonbasic commodities, such as summer squash, which we would not want to support even at 10 percent of parity. Then there are peppers and tomatoes. Producers of various commodities have come to me suggesting that the commodity they produce should be supported. There were mohair producers from Texas, honey producers from Iowa, Minnesota, and other States, and producers of hops. We felt we had to leave such products to the discretion of the Secretary, but it is the belief of the committee that commodities which correspond closely to the Steagall commodities should be supported at a rate of from 60 to 90 percent of parity.

Mr. EASTLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator from Michigan permit a vote on the pending amendment, and then resume his discussion with the Senator from Vermont? Mr. FERGUSON. Yes. I have no objection to a vote being taken on the pending amendment. Will the Chair state what amendment is pending?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Flanders in the chair). The amendment before the Senate is that submitted by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. Sparkman], which will be stated for the information of the Senate.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 74, line 15, it is proposed to amend the committee amendment by striking out the words "either" and "or"; and on page 74, line 16, it is proposed to strike out the word "without."

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, in arriving at a formula for determining what the normal supply of any commodity should be, the committee encountered a good many problems. When we came to the guestion of cotton we had to consider whether we would include the cotton which is produced in America but which is stored overseas. We finally decided to do so. The amendment would exclude the cotton which is stored overseas each year from the determination of normal supply. The net effect of the exclusion would be to raise the support level of cotton possibly 4 or 5 percent, but it would also make it more difficult. in my opinion, for cotton growers to vote quotas than it would be if the amount stored overseas were included in the total supply. About 1,700,000 bales a year are stored overseas. They would be included in the estimated amount of exports which also are computed in the definition of "normal supply." I hope I am getting this correct, Mr. President. We have had a pretty strenuous 2 days' siege here, and I reserve the right to correct my explanation if it is not correct.

Let me go a little further and say in regard to the other amendment, amendment lettered "N" of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. Sparkman] that whereas the committee first determined that 23 percent would be a normal carry-over for cotton in this country, we have already changed that to 30 percent. We would not want to accept the 40 percent which is proposed by the amendment. Personally I would not object to accepting the amendment lettered "L." I would object to the other two amendments which have been printed.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. AIKEN. I yield.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I call the Senator's attention to the fact that I said that if my amendment "I" is accepted I would not urge acceptance of my amendment "N." They are alternative amendments.

Mr. AIKEN. Under those conditions I can accept the amendment for myself, although I would have no authority to accept it on behalf of the committee, because the committee has not acted on it. I will vote for it if it is put to a question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment submitted by the Senator from Alabama lettered "L" to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. President, I do not insist on my amendment lettered "N." But at the same time, I should like to have my amendment lettered "M" stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 87, line 8, it is proposed to amend the committee amendment by striking out "70" and inserting "90."

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The

Senator will state it. Mr. BARKLEY. Was the first amendment offered by the Senator from Alabama agreed to?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The first amendment lettered "L," offered by the Senator from Alabama, was agreed to. Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, my I ask what amendment is offered now?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Senator from Alabama has offered his amendment "M"-"M" as in "Mary."

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, I would not be willing to accept the amendment lettered "M." The amendment would give preferential treatment which is unnecessary. I think the bill, with the amendment which has just been agreed to, gives very good support to the cotton grower, particularly in view of the fact that the revised parity formula would result in increasing the parity price of cottonseed about 20 percent.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. President, I should like to say that the amendment really has to do with the question of voting marketing quotas.

The effect of this amendment is to provide that cotton producers may vote marketing quotas whenever supplies are "normal" or above and the average farm price of cotton for three successive months does not exceed 90 percent of parity instead of 70 percent as provided by the bill and 66 percent as provided by the committee amendment. Bearing in mind that the proposed definition of "normal supply" for cotton, as modified by committee amendment, provides an allowance of 30 percent for carry-over, cotton producers should not be forced to wait until prices fall to 66 or 70 percent of parity or until they build up a tremendous surplus before voting quotas upon themselves. That is what the effect of the amendment would be.

Mr. AIKEN. I know the desire of the Senator from Alabama to help the poor cotton farmers, but it seems to me that there would be no injustice committed by not accepting this amendment, because I cannot conceive of the price dropping to 90 percent of parity unless the supply got up to that figure, which would permit them to vote quotas on a supply basis. I do not think there would be any injury done by rejecting the amendment. I think we have helped the cotton farmers by accepting the previous amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to amendment "M" offered by the Senator from Alabama to the committee amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. President, I offer an amendment-

Mr. WHERRY. I wonder if the Senator would withhold offering his amendment for a moment. May I inquire of the Senator from Vermont if this would not be a good time to recess until tomorrow? I do not want to interfere with the Senator from Kentucky, how-

Mr. COOPER. I shall be glad to have a recess taken now.

Mr. WHERRY. I suggest that the Senator offer his amendment, and have it printed, and that we then recess for today. I am satisfied we will make good headway if we recess now so we may go home and have a good night's sleep.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. For the information of the Senator from Nebraska, the Chair will state that the amendment of the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. Cooper] has already been printed and lies on the table.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I suggest that my colleague offer the amendment as it is now proposed, and have it printed.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. President, for my colleague [Mr. BARKLEY] and myself, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk and ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. amendment offered by the Senator from Kentucky will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 80, between lines 22 and 23, in the committee amendment, it is proposed to insert the

(5) Notwithstanding the foregoing provisions of this section, the level of price support to cooperators for any crop of tobacco for which marketing quotas are in effect shall be 90 percent of its parity price as of the beginning of the marketing year.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the junior Senator from Kentucky for himself and the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] to the committee amendment.

Mr. THYE. Mr. President, I should like to make a suggestion. The proposal which the junior Senator from Kentucky makes is rather extensive in many respects. I suggest that the Senator from Kentucky make the explanation for the RECORD and thus convey the message to all Members of the Senate, so that tomorrow we may act upon the amendment more intelligently. I hope that I can fully concur with the junior Senator from Kentucky in the proposed amendment, but I know that many Senators will not understand it unless it is explained.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, as I understand, the Senator from Minnesota suggests that the junior Senator from Kentucky make the explanation of his amendment now for the RECORD.

Mr. THYE. Yes.

Mr. WHERRY. May I inquire of the distinguished Senator from Kentucky how long he feels it would take him to make the explanation?

Mr. COOPER. Ten minutes. Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, the senior Senator from Kentucky might want a hand in the explanation, too.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, if both Senators from Kentucky and the Senator from Minnesota feel that we should have an explanation of the amendment in the RECORD tonight I shall be glad to withhold the invitation to recess until tomorrow until the explanation has been completed.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. President, it has been suggested to me that several Senators have left the Chamber, believing that the Senate was about to take a recess. So I shall wait until tomorrow to present my argument on the amendment

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I send to the desk and ask to have printed and lie on the table an amendment in the nature of a substitute, which I shall propose for the pending measure when it shall have been completed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment in the nature of a substitute submitted by the Senator from Georgia will be printed and lie on the table.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, this substitute is identical with the so-called Hope bill for the extension of the present agricultural program. That bill has already passed the House. It also includes an amendment continuing the soil-conservation law and the Commodity Credit Corporation.

FLOOD RELIEF IN THE NORTHWEST

Mr. CAIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent, from the Commit-tee on Banking and Currency, to report an original bill, and I submit a report (No. 1743) thereon. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the report will be received. The bill will be read for the information of the Senate.

The bill (S. 2877) to amend the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act, as amended, was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 4 (b) (2) of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act, as amended, be further amended by striking therefrom the following words and figures: "Section 4 (a) (1), (2), and (4)" and inserting in lieu thereof "sections 4 (a) (1) and (2)"; and that section 4 (c) thereof be amended by striking out "$25,000,000" and inserting in lieu thereof "$45,000,000."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. CAIN. Mr. President, on the 30th day of May of this year, Memorial Day, there was visited upon the Pacific Northwest the greatest catastrophe and tragedy in the history of that section. I believe that every Senator has been conscious of that tragedy, which has brought so much harm and suffering to those residing in the area which is commonly referred to-or since the flood has been referred to-as the Portland, Oreg .-Vancouver, Wash., area.

I have every right to take for granted what I know to be a fact, that there has been exceedingly great sympathy on the part of Senators for the people of the Northwest country. Almost every Senator has said, either to me, to my colleague, the senior Senator from Washington [Mr. Magnuson], or to the senior or junior Senator from Oregon [Mr. Cor-DON and Mr. Morsel that he was hopeful that somehow an answer could be found to help in restoring normalcy to that stricken land. In connection with that subject I have the very happy privilege of introducing the bill which has just been read for the information of the Senate.

In a couple of sentences I should like to give my interpretation, which is concurred in by all Senators from the Northwest and the Pacific coast, as to what the bill actually proposes.

In the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act there is provision for a disaster loan fund. The act provides that $25,000,000 may be expended for disaster relief loans, with a 10-year period of repayment.

Included in the devastated land of the Columbia River area was a Federal city, entirely owned by the Federal Government, consisting of more than 5,000 units of housing, all of which have been totally destroyed and swept away. Therefore, if that city is to be rebuilt, either in its original location-which is not desirable-or at another location within the Columbia River area, it will be necessary to extend credits in excess of $25,000,000.

This morning and this afternoon, officials representing the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, acting in concert and close cooperation with the Senators from Oregon and a subcommittee of three from the Committee on Banking and Currency, of which I was one member, came to an agreement that it would be proper and practicable to take the disaster provision now within the limits of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act and extend its limit to 25 years, rather than 10, and increase amount of loan money from $25,000,000 to $40,000,000. By that means we can offer an opportunity for financing the reconstruction of every home destroyed by the flood which so recently swept our Northwest country.

Mr. President, this suggestion does not ask for another single dollar of appropriations. It merely means that there will be a reallocation within the moneys presently at the disposal of the RFC, so that the RFC may use for disaster-relief purposes $40,000,000 instead of $25,000,-000, and may make extended loans for 25 years rather than 10 years, which would permit of proper amortization and repayment of loans which have been requested for the sole purpose of rebuilding homes which were totally destroyed.

Mr. CAPEHART. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CAIN. I yield.
Mr. CAIN. I yield.
Mr. CAIN. I will the Recon-Mr. CAPEHART. Will the Reconstruction Finance Corporation be permitted to make loans to those in Coatesville, Ind., and Danville, Ind., whose homes were completely destroyed by a tornado—as completely destroyed as were the homes in the Columbia River Valley?

Mr. CAIN. The bill makes no reference to the Pacific Northwest as a single area of the country. The bill provides league, the senior Senator from Oregon for an amendment to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act which would make available disaster credits and/or loans to the people of Indiana were they in distress, or to the people of Kentucky, the people on the east coast, or the people on the west coast.

Mr. CAPEHART. The Senator is proposing to increase the amount which the Reconstruction Finance Corporation may loan from $25,000,000 to $40,000,000?

Mr. CAIN. Yes.

Mr. CAPEHART. What proportion of that will go to Washington, and what proportion will go to the two towns in Indiana which were completely de-

Mr. CAIN. No one could say what proportion of the $40,000,000 will go either to Indiana or Washington, or Oregon, or any other State, for the simple reason that the loans will go to those who legitimately request them, irrespective of the area from which the loan is requested.

Mr. CAPEHART. Would the Senator say that the people of Coatsville, Ind., whose homes were completely destroyed by a tornado would be justified in going to the RFC and asking for loans under the terms of the bill, just as the people in the Columbia Valley of Oregon and Washington would be able to do?

Mr. CAIN. Not only today, but in the future, they will be justified in requesting disaster loans; but they would have been justified in going to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation for disaster assistance prior to this time.

The tragedy in the Northwest gave to the Banking and Currency Committee and to the Senators generally an opportunity to work for the country, as well as to work for their own distressed areas.

Mr. CAPEHART. Mr. President, I simply wish to say for the RECORD that those are the facts.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, the parliamentary situation is that the distinguished Senator from Washington [Mr. Cain] has requested unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill; is that correct?

Mr. CAIN. That is my request.

Mr. ROBERTSON of Virginia. Mr. President, I simply wish to confirm what the Senator from Washington has just said. I served with him on the committee this morning and this afternoon in the preparation of this bill. We think it presents a logical and effective way to relieve flood disasters not only in Oregon and Washington but in Indiana or wherever flood disasters have occurred or may occur in the future.

As the Senator from Washington has pointed out, under this bill Congress would not appropriate any more money, but would liberalize the proportion of available funds which could be used in flood-control cases, and would extend from 10 years to 25 years the time in which the loans could be used.

I hope no objection will be made to this measure, in view of the emergency now existing.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHERRY. I yield. Mr. MORSE. In behalf of my col-

[Mr. CORDON], I wish to say that he has been detained at a meeting of the Appropriations Committee, in the Capitol Building, and could not be present for this discussion. But he wishes to have it stated for the RECORD that he joins the senior Senator from Washington [Mr. Magnuson], the junior Senator from Washington [Mr. CAIN], and myself in support of this bill.

In behalf of the senior Senator from Oregon, I wish to thank the Senator from Virginia [Mr. ROBERTSON], the Senator from Delaware [Mr. Buck], and the Senator from Washington [Mr. Cain], who worked with us long and hard today in drafting this bill, to the end of having this matter handled through the RFC, which, it seems to us under the circumstances, provides the best procedure for the handling of this emergency, and sets a pattern under the disaster section of the RFC for handling similar disaster problems throughout the Nation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FLANDERS in the chair). Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BUCK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. WHERRY. I yield.

Mr. BUCK. As a member of the Banking and Currency Committee, I wish to endorse the request for the consideration and passage of the bill at this time, for I think the bill, when enacted, will expedite the giving of relief to the unfortunate people on the west coast. I think this bill constitutes the best solution of their problem.

Mr. REVERCOMB. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

I yield. Mr. WHERRY.

Mr. REVERCOMB. I wish to ask a question of the Senator from Washington. I understand that this bill provides for a loan to permit the people to rehabilitate themselves. Is that correct?

Mr. CAIN. Only with respect to their homes, but not as to personal property or services or equipment.

Mr. REVERCOMB. Mr. President, I feel that this is a very worthy bill.

I may say that today the Committee on Public Works reported a bill for emergency relief to meet every kind of disaster which may occur in the United States. I know that Senators who are interested in the bill now being discussed, on behalf of the people of their States who have suffered such severe losses in the recent floods, will be glad to know of the general provision which has been made, under the bill reported today from the committee, for emergency relief to meet such situations as that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request for the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2877) to amend the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act, as amended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no amendments to be proposed, the question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CAIN. Mr. President, permit me to say that, speaking for all of us who come from the Pacific Northwest, we are individually and collectively extremely appreciative of the consideration and thought which have been given to the scope of our problem in the Northwest; and because of what the Senate has found it possible to do, we think that in the future better protection and quicker relief will be afforded to the unfortunate victims of disasters.

RELIEF OF CERTAIN BASQUE ALIENS

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 158) for the relief of certain Basque aliens, which was to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That in the administration of the immigration and naturalization laws, the Attorney General be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to permit Gaspar Ybarzabal, Pedro Ybarzabal, and Antonio Monasterio to reside in the United States as temporary visitors for a period of 5 years from the date of enactment hereof, provided they remain employed in the sheep industry. If any of the above-named aliens fails to maintain his occupation in the sheep industry at any time within 5 years after the date of enactment hereof, he shall be deemed to have remained in the United States for a longer time than permitted and shall be subject to deportation as provided in sections 19 and 20 of the Immigration Act of February 5, 1917, as amended.

If, at the expiration of 5 years from the date of enactment hereof, the Attorney General shall, after due investigation, find that any of the above-named aliens has maintained an employment in the sheep industry during the entire 5-year period, he is hereby authorized and directed to record such alien's lawful admission for permanent residence as of the date of his actual entry into the United States if he is otherwise found to be admissible under the provisions of the immigration laws other than those relating to quotas. The Attorney General shall communicate his findings to the Secretary of State, who shall thereupon instruct the proper quota-control officer to deduct one number for each alien so lawfully admitted for permanent residence from the quota of Spain for the first year that said quota is available.

Mr. REVERCOMB. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

SANTIAGO SOLABARRIETA

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 765) for the relief of Santiago Solabarrieta, which was to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That in the administration of the immigration and naturalization laws, the Attorney General be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to permit Santiago Solabarrieta, of Parma, Idaho, to reside in the United States as a temporary visitor for a period of 5 years from the date of enactment hereof, provided he remains employed in the sheep industry. In the event that the said Santiago Solabarrieta falls to maintain his occupation in the sheep industry at any time within 5 years after the date of enactment hereof, he shall be deemed to have remained in the United States for a longer time than permitted and shall be subject to deportation as provided in sections 19 and 20 of the Immigration Act of February 5, 1917.

If, at the expiration of 5 years from the date of enactment hereof the Attorney General shall, after due investigation, find that the said Santiago Solabarrieta has maintained an employment in the sheep industry during the entire five-year period, he is here by authorized and directed to record the lawful admission for permanent residence of said Santiago Solabarrieta as of December 1, 1924, the date of his actual entry into the United States, upon the payment by him of the visa fee of $10 and head tax of $8, if he is otherwise found to be admissible under the provisions of the immigration laws other than those relating to quotas. The Attorney General shall communicate his finding to the Secretary of State, who shall there-upon instruct the proper quota-control officer to deduct one number from the quota for Spain for the first year that said quota is available.

Mr. REVERCOMB. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House

The motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 631) for the relief of the Allied Aviation Corp.

APPROPRIATIONS FOR THE CHILDREN'S FUND

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the body of the Record, as a part of my remarks, an editorial entitled "Victimizing Children," appearing in the Washington Post this morning.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

VICTIMIZING CHILDREN

Whether the quality of congressional mercy toward the hungry children of Europe is to be strained through "cold war" prejudice and fear will be determined by the Senate-House conference on appropriations for the European recovery plan. If the action of the Senate Appropriations Committee in cutting from 60 to 20 million dollars the authorization for the International Children's Emergency Fund of the United Nations is upheld, this Government will be in a vulnerable position before the world.

Both its humanitarianism and the honor of its intentions toward the UN would be questioned if the cut were allowed to stand. But its remissness would have a positive implication that would be even more damaging. The fund will be used as a matching basis for other nations' contributions, and the object of setting aside $60,000,000 was to have at our disposal a sufficient fund with which to encourage generosity. Approval of this ruthless slashing, therefore, would be virtual notice to prospective donors that the United States did not care how much they gave.

Certain Senators in the Appropriations Committee who insisted on the cut—some even wanted the fund wiped out—objected to American money being used to feed children in eastern Europe. Such an attitude toward hungry and diseased children seems incredible in a Nation that boasts of its generosity. It is a strange reversal of the legislative attitude of a few years ago when both houses of Congress supported a plan to feed children in countries dominated by the Nazis. Even more recently, when ERP legislation passed both Houses the authorization for the children's fund, attached as a rider to the omnibus bill, went by without opposition. There is diplomacy as well as charity in such ignoring of the iron curtain.

As the one international agency not torn by the "cold war," and operating without regard to race, religion, politics, or geography, the children's fund offers a small beginning toward one world—at least for children. If the people of the United States permit their legislators to inject power politics into this enterprise, they may as well abandon any claim to moral or even democratic leadership.

CANCELLATION BY PERU OF BRANIFF INTERNATIONAL AIRWAYS PERMIT

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the Record a letter I have written to the Secretary of State with reference to the action of the Republic of Peru in canceling a permit to the Braniff International Airways to operate in Peru, after making an agreement with the Government that it could operate there, and after issuing a permit.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD,

as follows:

United States Senate, COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN RELATIONS, June 16, 1948.

Hon. George C. Marshall, Secretary of State, Washington, D. C.

My DEAR MR. SECRETARY: The Braniff International Alrways, Inc. has its headquarters at Dallas, Tex., in my State, and serves Illinois, Iowa, Missouri, Kansas, Oklahoma, Arkansas, Tennessee, Colorado, and Texas.

The United States Civil Aeronautics Board, with the approval of the President, awarded Braniff International Airways a route into South America on May 22, 1946. Before the company could initiate service to South America, it was necessary for the State Department to negotiate bilateral air transport agreements, or to assist Braniff to obtain operating permits with countries of South America. Among the countries to be served was Peru.

On December 27, 1946, the Government of Peru signed a joint air-transport agreement with the Government of the United States, providing for reciprocal rights for air lines to operate between the two countries. This agreement gave permission to Peruvian air lines to operate to the United States.

In accordance with the terms of this bilateral agreement, the Government of Peru issued to Braniff Airways an operating permit providing Braniff with the right to operate between the United States and Peru via intermediate points and to points beyond. Reciprocally, on July 24, 1947, the United States Civil Aeronautics Board granted a foreign air-carrier permit to Peruvian International Airways, giving them the right to fly into the United States and serve Washington, New York City, and points beyond.

The Civil Aeronautics Board in its foreign air-carrier permit stated that Braniff was authorized by the United States to provide service on a route-

From Houston, Tex., through Habana, Canal Zone, and along the west coast of South America, via points including Lima, to the terminal points Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, and Buenos Aires, Argentina.

In preparation for the inauguration of this service, Braniff expended some $4,000,000 in providing radio stations and securing employed and trained personnel, and the purchase of aircraft.

Only a few days before Braniff Airways was ready to initiate its first scheduled service as far as Lima, Peru, the Government of Peru suspended the Braniff permit on the claim that Peru had had no previous knowledge that Braniff was going to serve Habana, Cuba, en route to Lima, and thus it would compete with its own air line, Peruvian Airways. My information is that the Government of Peru had full knowledge of the exact route to be operated by Braniff at the time the permit was granted.

The action of the Government of Peru has worked a great hardship upon Braniff Airways and has resulted in a breach of agreement with the United States and in a breach of the permit with the Braniff Airways. It also may result in preventing the extension of Braniff service to Bolivia, Brazil, and Argentina by reason of blocking the service through Peru.

In view of our heretofore cordial and friendly relations with Peru, it is difficult to understand how it would take such action, which is contrary to its agreement with this Government and to its issuance of the permit to Braniff.

Therefore, I most respectfully urge that you make a protest to the Government of Peru with respect to this matter and that you insist upon a restoration of the permit to Braniff Airways, and observance by Peru of its agreement with the Government of the United States with respect to the joint air-transport agreement of December

We want to cultivate cordial and friendly relations with the people of Latin-America. International travel and contacts between our respective peoples will have a most salutary effect in bringing about these desirable results. Therefore, I beg to repeat my urgent request that this matter be taken up with the Government of Peru with a view to inducing it to rectify what seems to be an unjustified action on its part.

Sincerely.

TOM CONNALLY.

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

As in executive session,

The following favorable reports of nominations were submitted:

By Mr. GURNEY, from the Committee on Armed Services:

Rear Adm. Thorvald A. Solberg, United States Navy, to be Chief of Naval Research in the Department of the Navy, with the rank of rear admiral, for a term of 3 years; and Lucien M. Grant, Lloyd Harrison, and Roy T. Cowdrey, for temporary appointment to the grade of rear admiral in the Navy.

By Mr. MILLIKIN, from the Committee on Finance:

Paul R. Leake, of Woodland, Calif., to be collector of customs collection district No. with headquarters at San Francisco, Calif.;

Carl K. Connell, of Cameron, Mo., to be collector of internal revenue for the sixth district of Missouri: and Fred S. Martin, of New York, to be Assistant Commissioner of Internal Revenue, in place of William T. Sherwood, resigned.

By Mr. SMITH, from the Committee on Foreign Relations:

Executive H. Eightieth Congress, second session. A convention between the United States of America and Denmark, signed at Washington on May 6, 1948, for the avoidance of double taxation and the prevention of evasion in the case of taxes on income; with a reservation (Ex. Rept. No. 10); and Executive I. Eightieth Congress, s session. A convention between the United States of America and the Netherlands, signed at Washington on April 29, 1948, for the avoidance of double taxation and the prevention of evasion in the case of taxes on income; with reservations (Ex. Rept. No. 11).

LEGISLATIVE PROGRAM—RECESS

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, it appears that we have concluded the work for today's session of the Senate. I should like to state for the RECORD, inasmuch as several Senators have asked when it is expected to have another call of the Legislative Calendar, that we should like to have the unfinished business concluded tomorrow, if that is possible. If the unfinished business is concluded by the middle of tomorrow afternoon or tomorrow night, I think there will then be plenty of time to have a call of the Legislative Calendar.

However, if debate continues for several days, we shall have to arrange to have a call of the Consent Calendar, because it is very necessary that the Consent Calendar be called once again. When it is called, I think we should recur to the point where the calling of the calendar was stopped when the question of oleomargarine came up to block the handling of the remainder of the calendar, as all of us remember.

Mr. President, with that announcement and observation, and in the hope that Senators will get a good night's sleep, and be ready for work tomorrow, I now move that the Senate take a recess until tomorrow at 11 o'clock a. m.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 8 o'clock and 38 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until tomorrow, Thursday, June 17, 1948, at 11 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, June 16, 1948

The House met at 10 o'clock a. m. The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Lord God of the ages, everywhere Thou art present except in the hearts of the wicked. As Thou art most holy and most wise, direct our minds beyond all barriers of false imagination and animate our thoughts as to our responsibility in these remaining hours. If we have sought to serve our country relying solely upon ourselves, if we have endeavored to slake our thirst at broken cisterns or veil the flame within, teach us that to know the way we must have the abiding reality of truth. Fill us with the satisfaction born of honest, conscientious toil, realizing the brotherhood of man in the fatherhood of God. Through Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Carrell, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment a bill of the House of the following title:

H. R. 5275. An act to amend the Tariff Act of 1930 to provide for the free importation of limestone to be used in the manufacture of

The message also announced that the Senate had passed, with amendments in which the concurrence of the House is requested, bills of the House of the following titles:

H. R. 631. An act for the relief of the Allied Aviation Corp.;

and Mr. Thomas of Oklahoma to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate disagrees to the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 418) entitled "An act to provide for water-pollution-control activities in the Public Health Service of the Federal Security Agency and in the Federal Works Agency, and for other purposes," requests a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. Revercome, Mr. Malone, and Mr. McClellan to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate disagrees to the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 2510) entitled "An act to provide for certain administrative expenses in the Post Office Department, including retainment of pneumatic-tube systems, and for other purposes," requests a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. Langer, Mr. Ecton, and Mr. O'Conor to be the conferees on the part of the

The message also announced that the Senate disagrees to the amendment of the House to the bill (S. J. Res. 117) entitled "An act providing for acceptance by the United States of America of the Constitution of the International Labor Organization Instrument of Amendment, and further authorizing an appropriation for payment of the United States share of the expenses of membership and for expenses of participation by the United States," requests a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. VANDENBERG, Mr. SMITH, and Mr. CONNALLY to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the reports of the committees of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to bills of the House of the following titles:

H. R. 5416. An act to promote the interests of the Fort Hall Indian irrigation project. Idaho, and for other purposes; and ect. Idaho, and for other purposes; and H.R. 6628. An act to provide for a program in the field of lighter-than-air aeronautics under the direction of the United States Maritime Commission, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the reports of the committees of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to bills of the Senate of the following titles:

S.1853. An act to authorize the Coast Guard to establish, maintain, and operate aids to navigation; and

S. 2122. An act to authorize the Coast Guard to operate and maintain ocean stations.

The message also announced that the President pro tempore has appointed Mr. LANGER and Mr. McKellar members of the joint select committee on the part of the Senate, as provided for in the act of August 5, 1939, entitled "An act to provide for the disposition of certain records of the United States Government," for the disposition of executive papers in the following departments and agencies:

- 1. Department of Justice.
- 2. Department of the Navy.
- 3. Department of the Treasury.
- 4. National Archives.
- 5. Office of the Housing Expediter.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. SMITH of Wisconsin asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the Record and include extraneous material.

Mr. ELLIS asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD in two separate instances and include newspaper articles.

Mr. TRIMBLE asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include extraneous matter.

YOUTH GOVERNMENT PROJECT

Mrs. ST. GEORGE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mrs. ST. GEORGE. Mr. Speaker, in my county of Orange, in the great State of New York, we have had for the past several years a youth and Government project, which to my way of thinking, could well be introduced into every county and every high school in our Nation.

Every spring the seniors of all the high schools in the county have a political campaign, in which they hold two party conventions, write two party platforms, and elect all county officials and one member of Congress.

After the campaign is over the duly elected officials spend 1 day with their prototypes, who are actually in office. During that day they are shown all the workings of the offices such as, county clerk, county treasurer, and so forth.

Today it is my pleasure and honor to have the young man, William Walker, who was elected as a member of Congress with me on the floor of the House. He is visiting Washington and will have a very fair and accurate idea of what a Congressman's day is like.

Mr. Speaker, our Government in recent years has gotten very far away from the people. The fault, in my opinion, rests with the people themselves.

Our form of Government cannot survive and cannot be made to function as it should, unless all our citizens know very thoroughly what their duties as voters and as participants in local, county and Federal Government are.

It is not easy to be a citizen of a free Republic. We have got to learn our duties and for that reason projects such as this youth in government project should be in all our schools.

Our young people should be taught their duties and responsibilities to God and country, and it makes me very proud to think that in my county we may be the pioneers of a new movement that will teach the youth of America what its duties and responsibilities are and through that knowledge this Republic will go on from strength to strength and fulfill its great destiny in the modern world.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I have an article in my hand in which Mr. Ralph King, of Massachusetts, said there are no better drivers in the State of Massachusetts than the amputees and the paralyzed veterans.

I ask unanimous consent to extend this article as part of my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

STREAM-POLLUTION BILL SENT TO CONFERENCE

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (S. 418) to provide for water-pollution-control activities in the Public Health Service of the Federal Security Agency and in the Federal Works Agency, and for other purposes, insist on the House amendments, agree to the conference requested by the Senate, and that the Chair appoint conferees.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none and appoints the following conferees: Messrs. Dondero, Auchincloss, McGregor, Cunningham, Whittington, Pickett, and Blatnik.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. FALLON asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a resolution.

Mr. SMATHERS (at the request of Mr. Gore) was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the Record and include extraneous matter.

Mr. MADDEN asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a speech he made yesterday at the Democratic State Convention in Indianapolis, and also to extend his remarks on the retirement of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Lublow].

Mr. ALBERT asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the Record and include an editorial.

CATHERINE MARTIN

Mr. PLOESER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. PLOESER. Mr. Speaker, I am indeed sorry that 1-minute speeches are not in order on this particular day.

The House should honor this day. It is the birthday of a fine American woman, the mother of our great Speaker, Joseph W. Martin, Jr. It is mother Catherine Martin's eighty-sixth birthday. My colleagues join me in compliments and wishes for many happy returns to Mother Martin and Speaker Martin.

It is a fine blessing for a man to be privileged to reach the pinnacle of a great distinguished career and still enjoy the living love of his mother. Many are not so fortunate. A few are. Congratulations, Mr. Speaker, and may we all invoke God's continued blessing for you, Mother Martin, and your family.

LT. GEN. LESLIE RICHARD GROVES

Mr. COLE of New York. Mr. Speaker, on yesterday the House passed a bill which was on the Private Calendar, H. R. 5596. There is an identical bill at the Speaker's desk which has passed the Senate, S. 2223, to authorize the promotion of Lt. Gen. Leslie Richard Groves to the permanent grade of major general, United States Army, and for other purposes.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the Senate bill.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

Whereas the development of an atomic bomb by the Manhattan Engineer District, United States Army, during World War II represents not only the greatest achievement in weapon production but also one of the greatest achievements in the coordination of science, industry, and management in world history and was also a major factor in bringing that war to an earlier victorious close resulting in the saving of thousands of lives and great stores of resources; and

Whereas this accomplishment has also opened unlimited possibilities for peacetime and humanitarian application and expansion of atomic science for future use for the benefit of mankind; and

Whereas this initial achievement was successfully concluded under the leadership, supervision, and direction of Leslie Richard Groves, as Director of the Manhattan Engineer District, with superior judgment and courage and in accordance with the highest traditions of the United States Army; and Whereas the said Leslie Richard Groves has requested that he be retired from service as an officer of the United States Army and such retirement has been authorized;

and

Whereas the American people and the Congress of the United States deeply appreciate the outstanding and unique service to the Nation and to humanity thus rendered by the said Leslie Richard Groves and desire to express this appreciation by means of official recognition thereof: Therefore

Be it enacted, etc., That the President is authorized and requested to appoint, without confirmation by the Senate, Leslie Richard Groves, Army serial No. O-12043, lieutenant general, Army of the United States, to the permanent grade of major general in the Regular Army, such appointment to be effective as of the day prior to the effective date of his retirement from the active list of the Regular Army and such appointment shall entitle him to receive the retired pay of major general of the Regular Army.

SEC. 2. The President is further authorized and requested, without confirmation by the Senate, to place the said Leslie Richard Groves on the retired list with the rank and grade of lieutenant general with honorary date of rank thereof as of July 16, 1945, which date commemorates the first explosion by man of an atomic bomb, at the Trinity site, Alamogordo, N. Mex. Such advancement in grade and rank on the retired list, however, shall not result in any increase in retired pay.

SEC. 3. This act shall result in no permanent increase in the authorized number of major generals on the active list of the Regular Army.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A similar House bill, H. R. 5596, was laid on the table.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

SURPLUS PROPERTY ACT OF 1944

Mr. WADSWORTH submitted the following conference report and statement on the bill (H. R. 2239) to amend section 13 (a) of the Surplus Property Act, as amended:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 2239) to amend section 13 (a) of the Surplus Property Act of 1944, as amended, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 5.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, and 4, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 3: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 3, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 2 of said Senate engrossed amendment, after the word "certified" insert "by the Governor of the State in which the property is situated and"; and the Senate agree to the same.

JAMES W. WADSWORTH,
MELVIN C. SNYDER,
CARTER MANASCO,
Managers on the Part of the House.
HOMER FERGUSON,
EDWARD J. THYE,
JOHN L. MCCLELLAN,
Managers on the Part of the Senate.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 2239) to amend section 13 (a) of the Surplus Property Act of 1944, as amended, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon and recommended in the accompanying conference report as to each of such amendments, namely:

Amendments Nos. 1, 2, and 4 may be regarded as perfecting in that they do not make any change in the intent of legislation. Upon this ground the House conferees have receded from its disagreements.

With respect to amendment No. 3, the House conferees have agreed to the same with amendment, the purpose of which is to make sure that the Governor of a State, in which the property referred to in this bill is situated, shall be consulted with respect to the transfer of that property to the State and that the transfer shall be conditioned upon his request for it.

The Senate receded from its amendment No. 5. That amendment, were it to remain in the act, would have excluded from the terms of the act a certain single county in the State of West Virginia. The House conferees contended that an exclusion of this sort inserted in an act, having general application the country over, would be contrary to wise legislative policy.

JAMES W. WADSWORTH,

MELVIN C. SNYDER,

CARTER MANASCO,

Managers on the Part of the House.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the conference report on the bill H. R. 2239.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I do not see the ranking minority members of the committee present and I do not know whether they have been consulted or what their attitude on the proposal is.

Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order there is not a quorum present. I think the Members ought to be here if we are going to transact business of this importance.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my request for the time being.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. COUDERT asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the Record in two instances and include newspaper articles.

CALL OF THE HOUSE

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER. Obviously a quorum is not present.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

[Roll No. 108] Grant, Ala. Lusk
Hall, McMahon
Edwin Arthur Miller, Calif.
Hart Mundt
Hartley O'Toole
Hébert Peden Andresen, August H. Bell Bland Brown, Ohio Buffett Price, Fla. Reed, Ill. Scott, Hardie Simpson, Pa. Smith, Maine Johnson, Ind. Johnson, Okla. Johnson, Tex. Cox Cunningham Kee Kefauver Stigler Stockman Dawson, Ill. Dingell King Kirwan Lane Thomas, N. J. Fellows Gallagher West Wolcott Gossett Ludlow

The SPEAKER. On this roll call 363 Members have answered to their names, a quorum.

By unanimous consent, further proceedings under the call were dispensed with.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Record and include therein some telegrams, a speech of Mrs. Roosevelt, Attorney General Clark, a letter from Chaim Weitzmann, and a speech I made at the testimonial dinner given to our distinguished colleague from New York [Mr. Bloom], and Mr. Speaker, if this extension exceeds the two pages of the Record allowed, I ask that it be printed notwithstanding the cost.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, notwithstanding the cost, the extension may be made.

There was no objection.

POSTAL AND OTHER FEDERAL EMPLOY-EES' PAY INCREASE

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arkansas?

There was no objection.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. Speaker, yesterday an effort was made by our minority leader the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Rayburn] to obtain information from the majority as to what legislation the House would have an opportunity to consider during the week in view of the adjournment of Congress Saturday.

Little satisfaction was given to the membership of the House as to just what legislation we would have an opportunity to consider and pass on before the Congress adjourns. It is recognized that there are many important bills pending before this House that have been voted out by various committees. It is recognized that many highly important bills to the welfare of the people are not going to be considered before we adjourn the Congress. The leadership of the Republican Party must assume the responsibility for this inaction.

In view of the fact that there are so many highly important problems pending that will likely not be considered, I think this Congress should return after the conventions and complete its work.

However, since at this point it is evidently determined that we will not return, I want to insist, Mr. Speaker, that this Congress do something about alleviating the burden of postal and other Federal employees.

It is well recognized that the cost of living has increased tremendously over the past 2 years. Most of the Members of this House, including the leadership on both sides, have taken the position that they see the justification of some relief by granting an increase in pay to these groups. To be fair to these employees, this relief should have been given weeks ago. It is not a matter that should be kicked around for political expediency.

Several weeks ago hearings were held by the committee and they were shown, by many substantial groups, an increase of $800 annually was justified to take care of the increased cost of living. I personally feel that this would have been an appropriate adjustment for the work they are doing and in order that they may continue to give the service that is demanded of them.

Several weeks ago the committee voted out a bill that would give to postal workers an increase of $585 on an annual basis for 14 months, and $468 to classified employes. This bill has been held up in the Rules Committee and the House has had no opportunity of considering it.

I understand that those in position to hold up this legislation are doing so on the basis that it does not meet with their approval. This action, Mr. Speaker, is highly inappropriate in legislative procedure to which I must express my disapproval.

I understand now that the leadership has ordered the committee to consider an additional bill that would provide a permanent increase to postal employees of $450 annually, and a temporary increase of $360 to the other Federal workers whose salaries are fixed by the Classification Act.

This certainly would not be adequate to take care of the increased cost of living imposed upon these employees. Naturally, it would give some relief and I would therefore reluctantly support it. It does seem to me, Mr. Speaker, it is arbitrary and ill-considered action, however, and there is ample time yet to permit this House to pass its better judgment on this problem. I join with others in insisting that this opportunity be given.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. HARRIS asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD on the farm program.

THE DRAFT BILL—THE HOUSING PROGRAM

Mr. BRYSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina?

There was no objection.

Mr. BRYSON. Mr. Speaker, the American Legion, Department of South Carolina, is now in session at our State capital, Columbia. This morning I received a telegram from the Department Commander Alfred J. Plowden, Jr., which reads as follows:

American Legion convention in session Columbia today urge you to support draft bill.

It is comforting to know the sentiments of the membership of the American Legion because its membership consists entirely of honorably discharged veterans of World War I and II. I believe that those of us who have served in the armed forces are probably in a better position to determine whether or not under all of the circumstances it is necessary for us to pass the pending bill providing for selective service. I readily acknowledge that there are many who seriously disagree with the terms of the pending bill or with any other measure providing for compulsory military training. The people of my district know and have known for several years that I favor adequate military strength. Thus far, in spite of unprecedented inducements and advantages, voluntary enlistments have proven insufficient. I believe it is imperative, in view of world conditions, that we pass the bill we have before us today in the interest of national security. My reply to the above-mentioned telegram is as follows:

Appreciate telegram sent by American Legion convention in session in Columbia endorsing and urging prompt passage of pending draft bill. I have consistently supported this measure in view of grave international situation. I shall continue to urge the enactment of this too long delayed provision so necessary to preserve national security.

Mr. Speaker, I hear, though unofficially, that the Rules Committee does not plan to give the House an opportunity to pass upon the Taft-Ellender-Wagner housing bill or any other bill making provisions for and adding encouragement in the housing program. This morning I received a telegram from my district from Hon. Bruce Littlejohn which reads as follows:

Spartanburg County Post, No. 5093, Veterans of Foreign Wars, urge favorable action T-E-W housing bill before adjournment.

Mr. Littlejohn is not only the liaison officer of the local post of Veterans of Foreign Wars; he is speaker and presiding officer of the House of Representatives of South Carolina.

While I do not approve of all the provisions of the Taft-Ellender-Wagner bill, I am strongly in favor of the enactment of some law without delay that would facilitate the building of houses so sorely needed for many of our citizens, especially veterans. My reply to the aforementioned telegram is as follows:

Having signed the discharge petition, I naturally am urging immediate favorable action by the House on the Taft-Ellender-Wagner housing bill without further delay.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. MULTER asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the Record and include extraneous matter.

Mr. GATHINGS asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an essay written by a constituent of his, Miss Hamilton, of Hughes, Ark.

Mr. SHEPPARD asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an article entitled "Peace and More" by Paul Breese, of Ontario, Calif.

Mr. MURDOCK asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the Record in two instances.

Mr. DONOHUE asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. TABER asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

NAVY DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATION BILL, 1949

Mr. PLUMLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's desk the bill (H. R. 6772) making appropriations for the Department of the Navy and the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1949, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments thereto, disagree to the Senate amendments, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Vermont? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and appoints the following conferees: Messrs. Plumley, Johnson of Indiana, Ploeser, Scrivner, Engel of Michigan, Sheppard, Thomas of Texas, Hendricks, and Andrews of Alabama.

SURPLUS PROPERTY ACT OF 1944

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (H. R. 2239) to amend section 13 (a) of the Surplus Property Act, as amended, and ask unanimous consent that the statement of the managers on the part of the House be read in lieu of the report.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the statement.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the conference report.

The previous question was ordered. The conference report was agreed to. A motion to reconsider was laid on the

ALLIED AVIATION CORP.

Mr. JENNINGS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's desk the bill (H. R. 631) for the relief of the Allied Aviation Corp. with Senate amendments thereto, and concur in the Senate amendments.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendments were concurred in.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GOVERNMENT CORPORATIONS AND IN-DEPENDENT EXECUTIVE AGENCIES AP-PROPRIATION BILL, 1949

Mr. PLOESER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 6481) making appropriations for Government corporations and independent executive agencies for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1949, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments thereto, disagree to the Senate amendments, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and appoints the following conferees: Messis. Ploeser, Jensen, Coudert, Clevenger, Mahon, Whitten, and GORE.

FEDERAL FOOD, DRUG, AND COSMETIC ACT

Mr. MILLER of Connecticut. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's desk the bill (H. R. 4071) to amend sections 301 (k) and 304 (a) of the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act, as amended, with a Senate amendment thereto, disagree to the Senate amendment, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Connecticut? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and appoints the following conferees: Messrs. Leonard W. Hall, HALE, MILLER of Connecticut, CHAPMAN, and PRIEST.

SECOND DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL, 1948

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 6935) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1948, and for other purposes; and pending that motion, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that general debate be limited to 40 minutes, to be equally divided and controlled by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Cannon] and myself.

Mr. CANNON. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, this is the last major appropriation bill of the session. Twenty minutes on a side is rather restrictive. Might I suggest that general debate be confined to the bill, and time saved in that way?

Mr. TABER. How would an hour do? Mr. CANNON. That would be satisfactory.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent, then, that general debate be confined to the bill and consume not to exceed 1 hour, to be equally divided and controlled by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON] and myself.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 6935, with Mr. Hope in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill. By unanimous consent, the first reading of the bill was dispensed with.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 10 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, this bill represents a total appropriation of $485,200,000 approximately. It carries contract authorizations of a little over $300,000,000. These contract authorizations are for the purpose of construction work in various places where the amounts called for payments cannot be made this coming fiscal year. That is, they will extend over. There are a few items of minor importance, including some deficiencies of an ordinary character. There is $25,000,000 for the Department of Agriculture to pay the bill for the foot-and-mouth disease in Mexico. There is an item for forests, roads, and

Mr. BARRETT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield. Mr. BARRETT. Mr. Chairman, I deeply appreciate the sympathetic consideration that the chairman and the committee gave this request for additional appropriations for forest highways. We are pleased to see that the committee has allowed a total amount of $15,000,000 for that item. Let me say here as I indicated at the committee hearing that these roads are in a deplorable condition. We know that this appropriation is needed badly. We want to tell the chairman we are very pleased with the splendid cooperation we have received at the hands of the committee.

Mr. TABER. There is an item of $32,-000,000 for construction for the Army, mostly outside the continental limits of the United States. There are $6,000,000 for emergency flood control in the Oregon-Washington territory to fix up a group of dikes that were destroyed by the unprecedented floods up there. There is an item in the Navy for $47,000,000 for public works, most of which are of an emergency character, and all of which are required for the proper development of our defenses. There is also contract authorization for $50,000,000.

There are some deficiency items for the Post Office Department. In the State Department, we have provided for the continuation of the surplus property operation abroad and have provided reasonable amounts for the operations of the State Department, War Department, Navy Department, and transportation of that surplus property.

There was little controversy in the committee on the bill.

Unless there are some questions at this point, I will reserve the balance of my

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Cannon] is recognized.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, it was privilege to be present this morning at a meeting in honor of the American and foreign representatives attending the 1948 session of the World Assembly of the Moral Rearmament Association, sponsored by our colleague the gentleman from California [Mr. HINSHAW]. I am certain that all who had the opportunity to meet representatives of practically every nation on the globe and hear their timely addresses were profoundly impressed. Neither money nor power of arms alone can rehabilitate the world or achieve complete and lasting peace. The speakers emphasized convincingly the indispensable necessity of moral rearmament in the equation and I venture to express the hope that our host on this occasion, the gentleman from California [Mr. HINSHAW] will give us the benefit of at least a part of the program by including in the Congressional Record some of the notable addresses by the distinguished speakers in attendance this morning.

Mr. Chairman, the bill before us is the last appropriation bill of the session and the Congress. It is the inevitable catchall bill into which are thrown last-minute deficiency appropriations which must suffice until another Congress—or at least another session—convenes.

Such bills are made up of routine items the need for which could not have been foreseen and for which emergency provision must be made before adjournment. But a feature of this particular bill, as in the last deficiency bill, is the number of replacement items providing funds which should have been included in the annual supply bills. They are to make up deficiencies occasioned by the failure to appropriate sufficient funds on the original estimates. Throughout this Congress arbitrary cuts have been made in estimates and the amounts thus sequestered advertised as savings and retrenchments when it was evident that the activities involved could not be effectively operated without them.

The refusal to appropriate the $800,-000,000 required for tax refunds is a classic example. The saving of the $800,000,000 was widely publicized as a retrenchment and it was claimed that the burden of the taxpayers of the United States would be correspondingly lightened. Of course, as everyone knows, we not only had to put the $800,000,000 back, but we have had to appropriate a good deal more and the Government has been put to inconvenience, and the time of the committee and the Congress has been taken up with the additional hearings and other complications involved in processing these additional estimates and appropriations.

Likewise, in the drafting of the pending bill we have been compelled to consider estimates and hold hearings on items which should have been carried in the annual supply bills.

For example, in this bill we are including amounts which have been cut from former bills and which are replacements of amounts requested in previous estimates, as follows:

In the Department of Justice, salaries and expenses in the field, $38,000.

Salaries and expenses of marshals, $80,000.

Fees of witnesses, $50,000.

Immigration and Nationalization Service, $2,390,000.

Eradication of foot-and-mouth disease, $25,400,000.

Damage claims, $40,000.

Rural delivery service, out of the $1,-125,000 provided in this bill $500,000 were cut from the estimate last year, and the $500,000 is a restoration.

Foreign mail transportation, $2,000,-

Balances due foreign countries out of an estimate of $5,000,000, $250,000 is restoration.

Manufacture and distribution of stamps and stamped paper, $570,000 restoration in an estimate of $758,000.

Post Office stationery, equipment, and supplies, $194,000.

Vehicle service: Out of an appropriation of $2,564,000; $732,000 is restoration.

Public buildings: Out of an appropriation of $230,500,000; $88,200 is a restoration.

As a matter of fact, one bill, the Post Office bill, was so heavily cut on estimates undoubtedly necessary for its reasonable operation, that the Department will close the fiscal year 1948 with a deficit of $310,000,000 or more.

During the hearings on the deficiency bill an estimate was reached for reconversion of unemployment benefits for seamen, for an addition in the fiscal year 1949, reconversion employment benefits, $1,530,000. The original estimate was for only $5,000,000; so I asked if the item was another restoration of an amount previously requested, and when told that it was not, that the amount previously requested had been appropriated in full, I withdrew the question.

Thereupon the chairman, contrary to the practice and procedure of both the committee and the House, insisted that it be included in the record. The correct practice is indicated by the unbroken precedents of the committee and by the law of the House as indicated in Hinds' Precedents, volume V, sections 6971 and 7024; Cannon's Precedents, volume VIII, section 3468, and in the Procedure of the House of Representatives, page 316. I refer to the incident in detail in view of the fact that a transcript of the proceedings has been circulated on the floor of the House.

Whether or not the question was included is immaterial. It merely indicated at least one item which was not a restoration. At the same time it served to emphasize the other items which were restorations and the consistent policy of the committee in arbitrarily cutting estimates and representing the reductions as savings and then subsequently restoring them in deficiency appropriations.

There are two provisions in this bill, Mr. Chairman, in which I trust the House will concur. I am constitutionally opposed to legislative riders on appropriation bills. If there has ever been instances in which a contravention of this rule is justified, in which the end justifies the means, it is in these two provisions, the paragraph repealing the Penalty Mall Act of 1944, and the paragraph reenacting the contract-renegotiation provisions of the National Defense Act of 1942.

Under misguided zeal, some 4 years ago, largely sparked by the contention that the departments were sending out an undue amount of printed matter and otherwise abusing the privilege of free distribution of Government publications, we passed a law providing that they should expend for such purposes only the amount appropriated each year for postage.

From the beginning it was evident that the intended reform was a costly mistake, and I have repeatedly urged the legislative committee to consider the evidence adduced by the Committee on Appropriations with a view to repealing the law. The legislative committee has taken no action. But the inconvenience and expense involved in the administration of the law, without compensating advantage, is now so patent that in the pending bill we include a provision repealing the law.

Experience has demonstrated increasingly that the departments were not sending out an undue amount of printed matter, but, on the contrary, that their distribution of public publications has been well and adequately administered. On the other hand, evidence presented before the committee showed it was costing a large amount of money—a quarter of a million dollars a year in one department alone—to enforce this law, with no corresponding benefits whatever. I trust the recommendation of the committee will meet with the approval of the House

We are also including in this bill, under title IV, section 401, another provision under which we propose to reenact a provision originally enacted in the sixth supplemental national defense bill for the renegotiation of contracts, with special view to regulating contracts for the manufacture of war material or material contracted for in connection with national defense. In every war and in times of other national calamities there have been those who sought to capitalize national disaster and to coin the blood of our soldiers into personal profit, and, although a majority of contractors have patriotically endeavored to serve the Nation by producing such materials at a fair and reasonable profit, conditions have been so unsettled in time of war that it was impossible to estimate in advance the ultimate cost of production. To regulate the few who seek to profiteer and to assist the many who seek to produce at a reasonable cost, we recommend the reenactment of the negotiation provision.

This law in its original form was passed in a bill which I reported to the House on April 21, 1942—the Sixth Supplemental National Defense Appropriation Act of 1942, section 403—which became Public Law 528 of the Seventy-seventh Congress. Conditions now warrant its reenactment.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON. I yield to the gentleman from Arizona.

Mr. MURDOCK. We have often talked about taking the profits out of war. I doubt whether we can ever do that although I certainly favor minimizing them as much as possible. However, does the gentleman believe the reenactment of this renegotiation plan will tend to do that so that we can get 100 cents on the dollar for what we spend in our national defense effort?

Mr. CANNON. What the gentleman says is eminently true. There is a possibility that we cannot eliminate all of the unwarranted profits in time of war. But, certainly, as the gentleman indicates, in the enactment of this legislation we are taking the most direct and immediate step that can be taken with that in view.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. Case].

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I wish to speak for just a few minutes on the two legislative provisions in the bill.

PENALTY MAIL

First, with respect to penalty mail. As the gentleman from Missouri has said, we include a paragraph which provides for the repeal of the penalty-mail payments by the various departments and agencies of the Government. I think, however, I should clear the record on what has happened.

The legislative committee has acted on this matter, for it reported to the House the repealer in bill H. R. 6406 on the 2d of June 1948, accompanied by House Report 2151. That bill was passed by the House of Representatives on June 8, 1948. So the matter has had the consideration of the legislative committee and the House. The only reason for incorporating it in this appropriation bill is that it was thought that H. R. 6406 might not receive consideration in the other body due to the shortness of time. But the action of including penalty-mail provisions here is consonant with and supports the action of the legislative committee of the House and the House itself.

DEVELOPMENT OF RENEGOTIATION

With respect to the renegotiation paragraph, as the Members of the House who were here during the war know, I have followed this renegotiation matter from the time when I initiated it by an amendment to the sixth supplemental defense bill back in the spring of 1942, which introduced the word "renegotiation" into the Federal statutes.

I am happy to say that only 2 or 3 days ago, this week, the Supreme Court, by a unanimous decision, as I understand, upheld the constitutionality of the wartime Renegotiations Act. Under that act something over $10,000,000,000 was recovered for the United States Treasury besides other large savings in forward pricing and the advantages to national morale by avoiding some of the profiteering that marked World War I. Our wartime renegotiation statute expired with the end of 1945.

A few weeks ago, when we had before us the supplemental appropriation bill, H. R. 6226, which established the 70-group air force and provided money for activating it, I felt that we should again call upon the process of the renegotiations statute in order to protect the Government against undue profits in the rapid expansion of aircraft procurement, and particularly, perhaps, in the procurement of new types for which there was not sufficient cost experience.

So in the consideration of that bill I prepared and proposed an amendment for the reactivation and incorporation of the renegotiation statute in that bill. The amendment was adopted by the House.

When the bill went over to the other body the paragraph which we had adopted in the House was expanded into a section which became section 3 of Public Law 547 of the Eightieth Congress, which carries with it a statement that it shall be cited as the Renegotiation Act of 1948. That section made the Renegotiation Act of 1948 applicable to the money in that bill and to moneys merged with the funds in that bill. In order that the terms of the new statute may be available for convenient reference in connection with section 401 of the pending bill, with permission of the House I shall include its text in my remarks at this point:

[From Public Law 547, 80th Cong., approved May 21, 1948]

SEC. 3. (a) All contracts in excess of $1,000 entered into under the authority of this act, obligating funds appropriated hereby, obligating funds consolidated by this act with funds appropriated hereby, or entered into through contract authorizations herein granted, and all subcontracts thereunder in excess of $1,000 shall contain the following article:

"Renegotiation article: This contract is subject to the Renegotiation Act of 1948 and the contractor hereby agrees to insert a like article in all contracts or purchase orders to make or furnish any article or to perform all or any part of the work required for the performance of this contract."

(b) Whenever in the opinion of the Secretary of Defense excessive profits are reflected under any contract or contracts or subcontract or subcontracts required to contain the renegotiation article prescribed in subsection (a), the Secretary is authorized and directed to renegotiate such contracts and subcontracts for the purpose of eliminating excessive profits. He shall endeavor to make an agreement with the contractor or subcontractor with respect to the amount, if any, of such excessive profits and to their elimination. If no such agreement is reached, the Secretary shall issue an order determining the amount, if any, of such excessive profits and shall eliminate them by any of the methods set forth in subsection (c) (2) of the Renegotiation Act of February 25, 1944, as amended. In eliminating excessive profits the Secretary shall allow the contractor or subcontractor credit for Federal income and excess profits taxes as provided in section 3806 of the Internal Revenue Code. The powers hereby conferred upon the Secretary shall be exercised with respect to the aggre gate of the amounts received or accrued un-der all such contracts and subcontracts by the contractor or subcontractor during his fiscal year or upon such other basis as may be mutually agreed upon; except that this section shall not be applicable in the event that the aggregate of the amounts so received or accrued is less than $100,000 during any fiscal

(c) For the purpose of administering this section the Secretary of Defense shall have the right to audit the books and records of any contractor or subcontractor subject to this section. In the interest of economy and the avoidance of duplication of inspection and audit, the services of the Bureau of Internal Revenue shall, upon request of the Secretary of Defense and with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, be made available to the extent determined by the Secretary of the Treasury for the purpose of making examinations and audits under this section.

(d) The provisions of this section shall not apply to any of the contracts or subcontracts specified in subsection (i) (1) of the Renegotation Act of February 25, 1944, as amended, and the Secretary of Defense in his discretion may exempt from the provisions of this section any other contract or subcontract both individually and by general classes or types.

(e) Agreements or orders determining excessive profits shall be final and conclusive in accordance with their terms and except upon a showing of fraud or malfeasance or willful misrepresentation of a material fact shall not be annulled, modified, reopened, or disregarded, except that in the case of orders determining excessive profits the amount of the excessive profits, if any, may be redetermined by the Tax Court of the United States in the manner prescribed in subsection (e) (1) of the Renegotiation Act of February 25, 1944, as amended, except that such redetermination shall be subject to review to the extent and in the manner provided by subchapter B of chapter 5 of the Internal Revenue Code.

nue Code.

(f) The Secretary of Defense shall promulgate and publish in the Federal Register regulations interpreting and applying this section and prescribing standards and procedures for determining and eliminating excessive profits hereunder using so far as he deems practicable the principles and procedures of the Renegotiation Act of February 25, 1944, as amended, having regard for the different economic conditions existing on or after the effective date of this act from those prevailing during the period 1942 to 1945. In any case in which the contract price of any such contract or subcontract was based upon estimated costs, then the Secretary of Defense shall determine the difference between such estimated costs and actual costs and shall, in eliminating excessive profits, take into consideration as an element the extent to which such difference is the result of the efficiency of the contractor or subcontractor.

(g) The powers and duties hereby conferred upon the Secretary of Defense may be delegated by him to any officer (military or civilian) or agency of the National Military Establishment.

(h) Any person who willfully fails or refuses to furnish any information, records, or data required of him under this section, or who knowingly furnishes any such information, records, or data containing information which is false or misleading in any material respect, shall, upon conviction thereof, be punished by a fine of not more than $10,000 or imprisonment for not more than 2 years, or both.

(i) This section may be cited as the Renegotiation Act of 1948.

Since passage of that bill, H. R. 6226, we have considered and passed in the House two appropriation bills which go into the field of large procurement. Both the Army and the Navy appropriation bill this year carry vast sums of money for the procurement of heavy ordnance, for the development of new types of equipment.

So, here again we have the same problem as during the war, the rapid expansion in procurement, and the development of new types of equipment for which there is no cost experience. Members of the committee have agreed that these should be brought under the provisions of the Renegotiation Act of 1948.

Obviously it would be neither practicable nor desirable for a contractor to be working at the same time on two contracts for identical planes, one subject to negotiation and the other not. Nor should development projects in new types be on a cost-plus basis without adequate opportunity for the Government to pass upon properly allowable costs.

Again, in the pending bill, we have some large funds for procurement of material and equipment and also for offshore construction. There are funds in this bill for the construction of large facilities in Alaska and in Guam. Everyone knows that where you are dealing with construction in Alaska and in Guam any bid must be something in the nature of a guess. Either you have to have cost-plus contracts, which open the door to vast waste and huge expenditures, or you must have some procedure such as the Renegotiation Act so that the final payment can be based upon audited and determined proper costs.

So, for this bill, again, I prepared and the committee has included a paragraph, which is section 401 of the bill, which applies the Renegotiation Act of 1948 to the funds in this bill and to contracts entered into hereafter. When we come to the consideration of that section of the bill I shall offer a minor amendment which defines subcontracts, on the suggestion of counsel, which we think is wholly in keeping with the spirit of the act.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I yield to the gentleman from Arizona.

Mr. MURDOCK. I congratulate the gentleman and the committee on reincorporating this provision in the law. I favored it during the war. In October 1939 I was naive enough to believe that we might take the illegitimate profits out of war, which at that time seemed approaching, and I introduced a bill to that effect, but without avail. I hope this will accomplish what the gentleman hopes for during our national defense efforts or any future emergency.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. We certainly hope so. It must be remembered that the excess profits tax which followed the Renegotiation Act during the war has been modified, so that we do not have the protection of that now. Hence, it is doubly important now to have this renegotiation section in this bill.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCormack].

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, I call the attention of my friend, the gentleman from New York [Mr. Taber] and the other members of the subcommittee to the item for the General Accounting Office on page 9.

Salaries: For an additional amount, fiscal year 1949, for "Salaries," $450,000.

May I point out that the reduction of $230,000 in the budget estimate is a matter of more far-reaching importance than the dollars concerned would indicate. The subcommittee of the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments of which the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Bender] is chairman, and of which I happen to be a member has been conducting executive session investigations for several weeks into the overpayment by the Government during the war of transportation charges by the railroads, since the passage of the 1940 Transportation Act. The evidence has been amazing as to the amount of overpayments as a result of the elimination of the preaudit that existed prior to 1940. Already, as a result of an accelerated audit, the General Accounting Office has recovered $250,000,000, and discovered $104,000,000 more that the railroads owe, and this was not the result of a complete reaudit, as a complete reaudit is now underway. It is safe to say that with a thorough reaudit, and this amount of $680,000 is very important in that respect, tens of millions of dollars more will be discovered to be recoverable from the railroads or other persons who were paid transportation charges by the Government.

It is in connection with that I want to call the attention of my friend from New York that we of the subcommittee feel very strongly, and I think express the views of all Members on both sides that this is an item of extreme importance which cannot be stressed too strongly.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield.

Mr. TABER. I think that what the gentleman has said is true. It is a matter of great importance, and we regard it in that way. We had our hearings with the general counsel. They already have some funds with which they are operating on this. It is extremely difficult for them to get the type of help they need to do the job. After our hearings we felt that this was all the money that they would be able to expend effectively on this job. We have always been very liberal with the General Ac-counting Office. Last year they had an unexpended balance at the end of the year of $2,300,000. They have had an unexpended balance of over $400,000 every year. Frankly, I believe that if we carried no money for this, they would have enough in their appropriation to take care of their job. But even so I do not believe they could spend on this job more than $450,000 which we have carried here. That was the basis on which we proceeded. I think they will have plenty of money to proceed with. If I had any idea that they would not, I would be in favor of the full amount. It is not with any idea of slowing it down, but it is with the idea of what it is possible for them to do.

Mr. McCORMACK. May I say to the gentleman from New York that his observation that it is hard to get trained employees is correct. There is no question about that. The evidence has disclosed how difficult it is to get trained rate experts and specialists. It is amazing to me that some of our universities and colleges have not surveyed that field with a view to affording their students an opportunity to be educated in that field, because there is a demand for them, not only in Government, but in private industry. It takes years to make a trained rate expert. It was a revelation to me; in fact I was amazed when I heard the evidence as to how difficult it is to get trained men. What the gentleman from New York said in that respect is absolutely correct.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, will the

gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield.

Mr. TABER. It seems to be that the only source of trained help, really good trained help, is that group that formerly were employed by the railroads on railroad freight rates.

Mr. McCORMACK. Yes; that is true. Mr. TABER. That is the situation we are up against

Mr. McCORMACK. And the Government is up against the situation where their good men are being taken away from them by the railroads by paying them higher salaries. There is that difficulty. However, I did not rise with the intention of offering any amendment but to get the views of the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER], representing the views of his subcommittee. Am I safe in saying that the subcommittee recognizes the importance of this reaudit?

Mr. TABER. Absolutely.

Mr. McCORMACK. And would I be correct in stating that the fact that $230,000 has been deducted from the estimate is not due to any lack of anpreciation on the part of the committee as to this reaudit being made as quickly as possible, and when they come before the subcommittee or satisfy the Committee on Appropriations in the future that they can get the trained help, the necessary and justifiable appropriations will be made?

Mr. TABER. Anything that is needed to carry on this work effectively will be supported by this committee, I am sure. Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Chairman, will

the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield.

Mr. MURDOCK. Do I understand that the reaudit to which the gentleman refers is to save the Treasury from the result of overcharges?

Mr. McCORMACK. The reaudit is in connection with money paid from 1940 on by the Government, and to collect back overpayments made for transportation charges. Already there has been $250,000,000 recovered, and $104,000,000 more discovered that was overpaid, because by the Transportation Act of 1940 we wiped out the preaudit by any agency, and all the railroads had to do was to present their vouchers or their bills of lading and they were paid. Naturally, they sought and received the higher amount.

Mr. MURDOCK. In that case, this reaudit of wartime transportation charges is as important as the renegotiation of wartime contracts, for the protection of the Treasury from overcharges.

Mr. McCORMACK. It is very important, and the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] has clearly indicated that he and the members of his subcommittee appreciate that fact. We members of the Committee on Expenditures, who realize what the picture is, are very glad to hear that, because we feel that for every dollar spent in connection with this matter, the Government will receive back at least a hundred dollars in overpayments that have been made.

My purpose, Mr. Chairman, in addressing the committee is to call attention to the item on page 9 of the bill under the heading "General Accounting Office" providing an additional amount of $450,-000 for salaries for the fiscal year 1949. The report of the Appropriations Committee shows that this represents a decrease of $230,000 below the amount of $680,000 requested by the General Accounting Office. Hearings before the committee show that the amount requested is for the purpose of conducting during the fiscal year 1949 a reaudit of certain transportation accounts which were audited during the period October 1, 1945, to June 30, 1947. On the basis of a test reaudit conducted by the General Accounting Office, it is estimated that $100,000,000 will be found in overpayments to carriers as a result of the complete reaudit, in addition to the $250,-000,000 already collected and placed in the Treasury and over $100,000,000 further already stated as overpayments but not yet collected. This reaudit activity is now being carried on by the General Accounting Office with existing funds, but in order to continue it during the fiscal year 1949, the Office will need a supplemental appropriation. It was explained to the Appropriations Committee that the amount of $680,000 would provide for 110 examiners and 54 lower-grade people in the Transportation Division, as well as 50 employees in the Reconciliation and Clearance Division engaged in handling accounts.

The Expenditures Committee Subcommittee on Procurement and Buildings has conducted extensive inquiries into the audit by the General Accounting Office of wartime transportation payments, and I am satisfied that the Comptroller General by the reaudit is doing all in his power to provide the greatest possible protection to the Government. However, the number of people available to carry on this activity is limited. The Comptroller General has estimated that the minimum amount he will need to conduct the activity effectively during 1949 is $680,000. The result of the cut which has been made will be to postpone to a later year the work which could be accomplished during the fiscal year 1949 on this reaudit. The Comptroller General has not been able to make an estimate of how long it will take to do the reaudit job with the employees whom he can obtain if the money is provided. However, if the money requested is not granted in full, the time required to complete the job will necessarily be lengthened. I feel that the House should be on notice of that fact, since the effective-ness of the job will depend partly upon the timeliness of determining and at-tempting to collect these additional overpayments to carriers which will be found in the reaudit.

The General Accounting Office has been one of the very few agencies which have turned back to the Treasury substantial amounts not needed for current requirements, and even for the fiscal year 1948 it is estimated that $2,000,000 will be so turned back. I, therefore, regret to see a reduction in this item below the amount which the Comptroller General has estimated is needed to carry on an activity which should result in collections of many times the entire amount re-

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts IMr. Mc-CORMACK] has again expired.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HORAN].

Mr. HORAN. Mr. Chairman, I take this time to point out a provision in this bill which I think is important, when you consider the floods in the Columbia River

I doubt very much if there are any Members of Congress who have not at least had one or two constituents who have said, "You are able to give billions to Europe. Why not a few million to the folks back home?"

I am taking this time to point out the work of the subcommittee on deficiency appropriations, as recorded in this bill. I think it is fundamental, and I think we ought to face it up. I have to. The greatest flood in 54 years has occurred in the Columbia River Valley. More water flows down that single river than any other river, with the exception of the lower Mississippi, and today it is a flood tide, it is receding. At least 44 persons have lost their lives. The damage, of course, is in the millions. The folks out there reading about the Congress appropriating billions to Europe on almost a blank-check basis are wondering where they come out in this matter of Federal responsibility in relief of the Columbia River Valley. I think quite properly they are asking me: "You are giving billions to Europe, where do we come out in this matter?" And I should like to take this time to point out that I think a rather constructive and businesslike approach to the Columbia River relief problem has been at least attempted on the part of Congress.

I want to read from the bill at this time the following language, to which I sub-scribe, language which I think is sound. It appears on page 6, line 24:

Provided, That no expenditure shall be made with respect to any such catastrophe in any State until the Governor of such State shall have entered into an agreement with such agency of the Government as the President might designate under assurance of expenditure of a reasonable amount of funds of the government of such State, local governments therein, or other agencies for the same or similar purposes with respect to such catastrophe.

Mr. Chairman, this is a Union of sovereign States, this Nation of ours. There are certain designated responsibilities which apply to the Federal Government, which apply to State governments, which apply to county governments. If we would have a bright and brilliant future for our own Nation, we must keep those responsibilities always clear and not confuse them. In the moments of catastrophe there is danger of confusing them. I want to say in behalf of my colleagues from the catastrophe area and for the Appropriations Committee that we have attempted at all times during this catastrophe to keep these responsibilities clear. We knew when this damage occurred that there were already funds which existed and could be drawn upon. Certain publichousing agencies had $25,000,000 available under certain statutes and certain rules of expenditure. We knew that the Public Roads Administration had $6,000,-000 which could be applied out in this catastrophe area, and that damage to roads was tremendous. We knew that the RFC had $22,000,000 which could be made available in the form of loans to certain individuals and under certain circumstances. We knew that the Red Cross, not a Federal or governmental agency, had funds and there were other funds which were available.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Washington has expired. Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman two additional minutes.

Mr. HORAN. We knew that the President's fund for emergency relief had $38,000 in it. This bill carries an additional half million. I am not sure that that amount is adequate, but if it is not it can yet be made adequate in conference and it should be expended under strict rules.

This bill carries $6,000,000 to be directly applied to the Columbia River damage area by the Army engineers.

Also in this bill are appropriations and contract authorization totaling $15,000,-000 for rebuilding of forest roads and trails all over the country. Much of this amount is badly needed right now in the Pacific Northwest for replacing roads and bridges washed out in the national forests by flash floods. Often these roads are the only connection between many communities and the outside

The civil-functions bill carries $3,300,-000, which can be applied, I understand, at the discretion of the Army Engineers on an emergency basis throughout the Nation. When this bill goes to conference after action on it by the other body, there probably will be about three and a half million dollars made available to the catastrophe area for emergency crop and seed loans. There may be other items made necessary after due examination and proper treatment by the departments and proper request for funds.

Mr. Chairman, I mention this at the present time because the people in our districts are saying, "You are giving billions to Europe; why not a few millions for the folks at home?"

Mr. Chairman, we are doing this thing right with regard to the Columbia River drainage area where a catastrophe has occurred. We are trying to determine what the damages are and what the responsibilities are, what the responsibilities of the Federal Government and the Congress are with regard to that damaged area. It is proper that we should do this. But with regard to the billions for Europe, I submit that we have had some rather reluctant votes in favor of those billions for Europe.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Washington has expired. Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman two additional minutes.

Mr. HORAN. Mr. Chairman, those billions were not properly justified. I submit that it was under a good deal of international pressure that this Congress acted, and I submit that before we appropriate any more money for work outside the United States we should attempt to justify those appropriations in the same way that we justify the work of relieving a catastrophe at home, specifically and item by item.

Mr. GOFF. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HORAN. I yield to the gentleman from Idaho.

Mr. GOFF. Out in the upper reaches of the Columbia River we also suffered as you did in the lower reaches. As one whose district embraces some of the tributaries of the Columbia River, I want to express the appreciation of our section for the amounts that were put in for flood relief and which are available for us up there.

Mr. HOLMES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HORAN. I yield to the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. HOLMES. By the inclusion of this $6,000,000 in the deficiency appropriation bill for current use in the Columbia River Basin for emergency purposes, we have made a start toward helping out a very serious situation in that area. I thank the Deficiency Appropriations Subcommittee for granting these appropriations.

Mr. HORAN. I think we all appreciate the action of that committee.

DIGEST OF REPORT FROM L. R. DURKEE, FEDERAL WORKS AGENCY, PORTLAND, JUNE 16, 1948

Columbia and Willamette are dropping faster than estimated with prospects of 2foot recession by Saturday. Portland level down to 29.35 and Vancouver stage at 29.6 Tuesday noon. River forecaster Elmer Fisher expects river at Portland to be 28.4 Thursday, 27.9 Friday, and 27.5 Saturday.

Downriver dikes, seriously saturated, described as still critical, but no new breaks reported. Levee repairs on upper Puget Island about completed which will permit faster drainage of flooded acreage below, and the Columbia slough, filling the Multnomah drainage district northeast of Portland since Friday morning, has been plugged at both ends. Army engineers expressed hope their battle was nearing end.

Flood levels started dropping on the upper Columbia four days ago and in British Columbia the flood control commission announced recessions in the Frazer River Valley placed at 42, missing at 28.

Red Cross case load in Oregon and Washington numbered 8,523 families Tuesday, homeless families 43,440. It is sheltering 3,533 individuals and feeding 19,354. Peak case load registration expected to reach 12,-000 families.

Red Cross emergency relief expenditures so far approximate $600,000 for food, clothing, some shelter, and hay for cattle.

Housing—Dr. J. Bion Philipson, representing Foley, arrived Monday, visited Vancouver Tuesday with Epstein and Portland Vancouver Housing Authority. Floyd S. Ratchford, Vancouver, said 22 apartment wings at Ogden Meadows would be renovated, work starting today and first families moving in July 1. Rearrangement will provide 43 three-room units, 88 two-room, and 12 one-room units. The buildings were up for sale three days before the Vanport disaster. Bids were returned and the sale canceled. Cost estimate for work is $400,000 to come out of $10,000,000 flood relief fund.

Ten buildings being renovated at Vancouver barracks include four barracks type buildings to be made into 128 three- and four-bedroom apartments, three apartments to house 26 families, and two nurses homes to be developed into 16 apartments. Believe War Assets would make more buildings available at the deactivated army post. About 1,300 evacuees already housed at Swan Island.

Unable yet to get working figure on estimated number of housing units needed. Two hundred eighty-three trailers expected by Thursday at Guilds Lake housing site, under FWA assignment. Been coming in since Saturday from Stockton and 100 due Wednesday afternoon on 50 flatcars from San Antonio. A trailer city is growing on the housing site. Water and sewers ready to be hooked up.

Philipson unwilling to guess number of houses needed, everybody else reluctant to hazard opinion at this time, among the Federal men.

FWA-Large amounts of materials, expendable and unexpendable are converging on Portland by trains, trucks, and vans. Beds, mattresses, and bedding for more than 1,500 families, other furniture, mobile unexpendable equipment out of WAA surplus, are being assigned to various areas of the disaster district. Formal applications for such assistance are being received from towns, counties, and diking districts. The big impact of the movement has not yet arrived but eight carloads of additional furniture including 560 beds, mattresses, chests, chairs, and tables would reach the FWA warehouses on Swan Island by tonight. Twenty-five van loads of furniture and expendable equipment from housing projects and military installations in Texas, Arkansas, New Mexico, and Kansas were expected in Portland by Sunday. An additional 25 van loads of materials and equipment, including furniture, have been loaded at Willow Run, Mich., Ottawa, Ill., and Manitowoc, Wis., for shipment here.

Movement of nonexpendable equipment into the flood disaster areas about Bonners Ferry, Orofino and St. Maries, Idaho, includes 32 Quonset huts in transit from Cincinnati to replace city and county buildings lost in the flood at Orofino. Equipment also includes dump trucks, draglines, a buildozer, and lumber for rebuilding bridges. Materials were moving into the Kootenai River flood areas from the Ogden Army Depot and WAA warehouses in Spokane and San Francisco, and included 43,000 feet of cable, power shovels and trucks, a suction dredge, pile driver, and steam cleaning unit. Also included were DDT spray and portable sprayers. A water purification system for Bonners Ferry was located at the University of Idaho.

Have assigned a fire pumper truck located by WAA in Portland to the mayor of Clats-

Public Health: Dr. H. M. Erickson, Oregon State health director, and Porter Stephens, in charge of the Portland-Vancouver area for the State sanitary service, report excellent cooperation with USPHS, Department of the Interior, FWA, and other Federal agencies. The present need is for prompt immunization and typhoid vaccine has been received in sufficient quantities. Sanitary engineers have been sent to the flood area from Atlanta, New Orleans, and San Francisco, with Federal entomologists. The environmental sanitation problem will grow as the water recedes, and work of mosquito and fly eradication is al-ready proceeding. In the Oregon-Washington area 10,000 pounds of 40 percent DDT, 400 pounds of 100 percent DDT, and 3,000 gallons of oil are now available.

Interior expects more funds by July 1 for its work on rat control. Col. Roy Bessey, executive director for the Pacific Northwest region, says that mobile and electrical equipment and transportation services have been supplied to flooded areas.

Public Roads, FWA—the Union Avenue cut-off is now serving for emergency travel—busses, milk, vegetables, and other perishables. FRA engineers in Washington, Montana, and Idaho are reporting on the condition of roads, and the State highway departments in Washington and Oregon are taking care of emergency traffic with detours and temporary work, such as sandbagging between Portland and Longview, Wash.

Department of Agriculture: Reports engineering assistance and the assignment of equipment, bulldozers, drag lines, etc., in rehabilitation of irrigation work in Okanogan County, and the Methow and Kittitas Valleys, in Washington, and in northern Idaho, (Don't know about the reported $1,400,000 residue from 1942 act.)

Reconstruction Finance Corporation: Receiving some applications for loans for repair or rebuilding of barns and other farm buildings, william Kennedy, Portland manager, said. RFC has opened offices in Woodland, Rainier, and Vancouver. Two examiners from Cleveland and two from San Francisco, experienced in disaster work, have been assigned to Portland. An anticipated situation of considerable gravity is expected as the flood waters recede.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Montana [Mr. D'EWART].

Mr. D'EWART. Mr. Chairman, during this session of Congress the Subcommittee on Mines and Mining of the House Committee on Public Lands has held extensive hearings on manganese, chromite, and copper, on stock piling, and on a preliminary review of the conditions and problems of the tungsten and mercury mining industries. Information has been obtained on a number of other minerals and metals.

It has been administration policy to encourage and stimulate development and production of minerals and metals in foreign countries to the exclusion and detriment of the mining industry of the United States. The policies and practices of the State, Commerce, Interior, Treasury, and War Departments, as well as those of the Munitions Board and Bureau of the Budget have been to aid and stimulate foreign production and allow thousands of domestic mines to be abandoned at great loss to this Nation of its strategic and critical minerals and metals resources. President Truman has gone on record in this respect. In one instance, in his message on signing the Stock-Piling Act of the Seventy-ninth Congress, he directed that the buy-American clause be ignored. Again, in his veto message on the Allen bill last year, which would have extended the life of hundreds of copper. lead, and zinc mines, he showed a complete lack of concern in American minerals production.

As a result of administration policy, harmful tariff reductions have been made; foreign cartels have been permitted to dump materials on the domestic market forcing the closing of American mines. American occupation commands have permitted or encouraged currency manipulation in occupied countries to enable the export of materials to the United States at artificially low The American occupation authorities have acted as agents in the sale of foreign materials in the United States at below-market prices. Government purchases of strategic minerals and metals for the national stock pile have been almost entirely from foreign

The United States has substantial resources of manganese, copper, lead, zinc, vanadium, tungsten, and a number of other strategic and critical minerals and metals. Montana offers substantial deposits of manganese and copper, and 75 percent of the domestic chromite resources. The last 2 years of the war found thousands of new mines producing minerals and metals throughout the United States. In order to keep them open and develop our resources, we must pay a price that will permit the payment of American wages and cover the cost of equipment and materials.

In framing and passing the Stock-Piling Act Congress recognized the need of encouraging the exploration and development of these domestic resources and of stimulating domestic production from mining operations which then were active. Congress wrote that policy into the Stock-Piling Act, and implemented it with a "buy American" provision designed to provide domestic producers with adequate prices. However, the intention of Congress has been ignored completely. Approximately 95 percent of the strategic and critical minerals and metals procured by the Munitions Board through the Bureau of Federal Supply has been obtained from foreign sources. The Munitions Board has not procured any domestic copper, lead, zinc, manganese, tungsten, or mercury from domestic mines since the close of the war. This is only a partial list. Only one would-be producer is known to have received a contract for domestic chromite. Some vanadium oxide has been procured from the two substantial companies who monopolize the manufacture of vanadium oxide and ferrovanadium, but the many ore producers have been by-passed.

best stock pile, so to speak, we find that only one small chromite producer remains in operation. Two or three of the larger mercury producers and four or five of the more substantial tungsten producers have continued to operate by mining their high-grade ore at reduced capacity and wasting the low-grade ore. These few mines are expected to close within the next few months. Only one producer of manganese ore, a large mining company, is in operation today. Several hundred copper, lead, and zinc producers have continued in operations since the termination of the premiumprice plan last year by robbing their mines of richer ore or by suffering losses in anticipation of the passage of the Russell bill at this session of Congress. These mines also will close within the next few months unless measures are taken to provide them with going prices for their products. This is the present condition of the various mineral and metal mining industries which are so vital to the security and future welfare of this Nation.

It is to be regretted that so few people have the opportunity to gain an insight into the mining situation and that so few are aware of the importance of the minerals and metals. However, should we be forced into a war emergency, public attention would quickly be focused upon the fact that Government indifference and lack of foresight has permitted us to become wholly unprepared and dependent upon foreign nations for the most vital minerals and metals. will not have time in an emergency to build up our stock piles and make our mines resume production. Mines which close often lose forever the rich resources which they might have uncovered. In any preparation for national defense, an active mining industry should be one of the first requirements. Unfortunately, the administration has done nothing to preserve or stimulate such an industry.

It is the sense of the Committee on Public Lands that the security of the United States can best be provided by using the stock-piling funds for the purchase of materials which are available in the United States. In this manner we will gain not only the immediate increase of our stock piles, but we will also preserve an active mining operation which will be ready to produce immediately and continuously throughout any emergency.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Heselton].

Mr. HESELTON. Mr. Chairman, I take this time to inquire as to the use of the funds that are appropriated for construction and improvement of buildings. All through this present session the chairman and the members of the committee have expressed their intention that the committee did not wish to have any funds used for the installation of new oil-burning equipment or for diversions from coal to oil, in view of the situation which confronts us, unless it can be clearly shown that it is economically necessary to undertake such construction. I assume that is true in connection with this bill.

Mr. TABER. We want that followed, as far as it can be. There are some emergency items in the nature of experimental developments on the part of the Navy where that rule cannot apply. That is true especially across the sea, in Guam and in Alaska.

Mr. HESELTON. I thank the gentleman and want now to express my sincere appreciation for his cooperation and that of the chairmen and members of the subcommittees. As I recall it, this guide to spending funds in the bills passed at this session was adopted with but two exceptions. Certainly the members of the committee who have helped develop this administrative guide can never be criticized if we are unfortunate enough to have further shortages in petroleum products. By this action we have clearly provided a standard which must be used by those administering the expenditure of funds appropriated this year. I have no question but that this will be done. But I also want to assure my colleagues that the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce will follow this closely in connection with its discharge of its responsibilities in formulating and recommending a national fuel policy to meet the needs of this country in connection with its expanding domestic economy and its security. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. WOLVERTON] announced this morning that the Committee had scheduled continued hearings on the export phase of this problem beginning June 29. Beyond that, the Committee on Rules reported late yesterday House Resolution 595, and I have no doubt but that it will be unanimously voted to enable the Committee to act continuously and effectively throughout the recess to prevent, if humanly possible, any repetition of the difficulties of last winter. That resolution is as follows:

Whereas it appears that current and anticipated shortages of petroleum products threaten the present and future economy and security of the people of the United States; and

Whereas such shortages must be considered in the light of the availability of other fuels and energy resources; and

Whereas, in order to deal effectively with the problem of making petroleum and other fuels available in quantities adequate for an expanding economy and for the security of the United States, it is necessary to formulate sound national policies: Therefore be

Resolved, That it shall be the duty of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce to formulate and recommend a national fuel policy adequate to meet the needs of the United States in times of peace and war, including recommendations for a national petroleum policy and the integration of such policy with policies relating to other fuels and energy resources except atomic energy; and for such purposes the committee shall study the current and future fuel supply and demand of the United States and shall study methods of encouraging needed developments to assure the availability of fuels adequate for an expanding economy and the security of the United States.

SEC. 2. The committee shall make a report not later than the close of the present Congress. Such report may be made to the Clerk of the House if the House is not in

SEC. 3. For the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this resolution, the committee or any subcommittee thereof—

(1) is authorized to sit and act during the present Congress at such times and places within or outside the United States, whether or not the House is in session, has adjourned, or has recessed, to hold such hearings, to require by subpena or otherwise the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such books, correspondence, memoranda, papers, and documents, and to take such testimony, as it deems necessary; and subpenas shall be issued over the signature of the chairman of the committee or by any member designated by him, and may be served by any person designated by such chairman or member;

(2) may utilize the services, information, facilities, and personnel of the various departments and agencies of the Government to the extent that such services, information, facilities, and personnel, in the opinion of such departments and agencies, can be furnished without undue interference with the performance of the work and duties of such departments and agencies;

(3) may seek information from such sources and conduct its studies and investigations in such manner as it deems advisable in the interest of a full and correct ascertainment of the facts.

Mr. ANGELL. Mr. Chairman, I want to commend the chairman and members of the committee who have worked so long and laboriously on this bill. It is a good bill and covers a number of most essential projects. I am particularly interested in the bill by reason of the inclusion in it of $6,000,000 for disaster flood control and $500,000 for the President's disaster relief fund and also an item of $300,000 to acquire a site and prepare plans and specifications for a new post office building in Portland and the remodeling of the old building on the Hoyt Street site. The post office facilities in Portland are woefully inadequate and for a number of years have resulted in much difficulty in handling the large volume of mail in the Portland area. These funds will permit carrying out the mandate of the bill I recently introduced which was approved and became Public Law No. 457. With these funds immediate action may be taken to secure the site and prepare the plans so that construction work may be authorized at the next Congress.

The tragic flood in the Columbia River area has wrought immense damage not only in my congressional district but for 120 miles up and down the Columbia River and as a result many miles of roads, dikes and public facilities, both of the Federal Government and local communities, have been destroyed. There has been immense loss of private property and thousands of acres of fertile agri-cultural land have been submerged, whole cities and villages have been wiped out and thousands of farm homes and buildings destroyed any many lives lost. Between 60,000 and 100,000 people have been rendered homeless and over $100,-000,000 in property destroyed.

Certainly the Federal Government after spending billions around the world for the relief of peoples in distress can, in good grace, afford relief and protection to our own people who have met with disaster. As I have said before, we are deeply grateful to the Congress in passing the relief measure for temporary housing. There yet remains to be passed legislation providing for loans for low cost housing for those who have been rendered homeless and for repairing and replacing public property and facilities which have been destroyed. I have today introduced a bill to amend the RFC law.

The purpose of this bill is to alleviate the situation that has recently developed as a result of floods, especially in the Portland-Vancouver, the Spokane, Wash., and the Helena, Mont., areas.

The amount presently available for disaster loans by the RFC is limited to $25,000,000 outstanding at any one time, $21,000,000 of which is now unused. The bill would increase the amount permitted to be outstanding at any one time to $45,000,000 and at the same time would permit the RFC to make disaster loans without regard to the present 10-year limitation on maturities.

The necessity for the enactment of this legislation arises primarily because of the acute housing situation, requiring repair and restoration in the devastated areas.

While it is not specifically provided in the bill for a dollar limitation for loans made for dwelling accommodations, it is urged that the RFC, in the administration of this law, should not exceed $7,500 for any dwelling designed for a single family residence, $12,500 for a 2-family residence, $16,000 for a 3-family residence, or $18,500 for a 4-family residence.

Under the present law maturities for all loans made by the RFC, including disaster loans, are limited to 10 years. This bill would remove this limitation as to maturities, but only with respect to disaster loans. However, it is contemplated that in no situation will a maturity in excess of 25 years be permitted. It is believed the maximum assistance in the devastated areas can be achieved, particularly with respect to the repair and restoration of dwellings, only by the removal of the existing maturity limitation.

I urge early consideration and passage of this bill.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. Chenoweth].

Mr. CHENOWETH. Mr. Chairman, I request this time to inquire of the distinguished chairman of the committee what action was taken on the request I submitted for funds for the establishment of an air traffic control tower at Peterson Field, Colorado Springs, Colo., by the CAA.

Mr. TABER. We have contacted the

Mr. TABER. We have contacted the Department on that matter, and we intended to say in the report that we expect them to do that job with the funds that we have provided here. We feel that they will do it. It was our intention to include that in the report, but through some inadvertence it was left

Mr. CHENOWETH. I thank the gentleman and I appreciate the action taken by his committee.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Bates].

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I want to say at the outset, as chairman of the subcommittee of the Committee on Armed Services having to do with the authorization of projects for the Army, the Navy, the Air Forces, and the public-works projects throughout the world, that I am happy, and I know the committee is, at the fine treatment that these services received from the Committee on Appropriations. We realize full well, as the result of the debate on the floor of the House yesterday in regard to the selective-service bill, and the debate that will continue today on the same subject matter, how perilous the situation is throughout the world and how important it is for us to utilize every means we possibly can to safeguard the security of the United States of Amer-

This appropriation bill, as I am given to understand by the naval authorities, with one exception, embraces about all that they could desire. We all realize how important it is to develop these facilities, especially in those most strategic parts of the world where our security would become more imperiled than in any other place, especially in the northern latitudes. There is one item, however, that is not in this bill that we all were very much interested We are not blaming the Committee on Appropriations, because we fully realize that the authorization bill has not yet been signed by the President.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield, it has not yet been signed.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. We understand that the request for this one appropriation was not submitted to the Committee on Appropriations by the Bureau of the Budget, and I have in mind. of course, the development of the naval air training station at Annapolis. The Committee on Armed Services, especially its subcommittee, has given weeks and months of study to the importance of the development of the aviators' indoctrinizational training of the naval cadets at Annapolis in order that they may be better fitted to carry their responsibilities if we are at any future time thrown into an emergency. Everybody fully realizes the important part that naval aviation played in the most recent war. and the important part that it played in the advances that we made from island to island in the Pacific. We understand thoroughly the tremendous losses that we suffered, but we know also the tremendous losses the Japanese air force, the kamikazes, suffered as the result of the brilliance of our naval avia-

Naval aviation has now become part of the curriculum of the Naval Academy. It is considered to be of the highest priority, almost at the top of those things that the Navy Department believes ought to be inaugurated and carried out in order that we may fully and adequately train those midshipmen not only as to the operations on the surface of the water and under the sea, but the operations in aviation, and in the air.

I hope, Mr. Chairman, that although time does not permit it today, if the Senate Committee on Appropriations, includes this item in the Senate appropriation bill, that we shall have an opportunity here in the House to vote for sufficient money so that we may acquire the land and start the preliminary engineering work. We do not feel that it is necessary to do the construction this year, but we do feel very strongly that we ought to acquire the land and carry out the preliminary investigations and engineering surveys, so that when the new Congress comes in the first of the year we shall be able to go ahead and build these facilities which are so important to the proper training of the midshipmen at the Naval Academy.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield the balance of my time to the gentlewoman from Massachusetts [Mrs. Rogers].

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I do not believe anyone would want to go back and face the mothers and fathers of the naval cadets without starting the purchase of land at Annapolis and making plans for the training of the cadets.

Mr. Chairman, I rise also to ask this Deficiency Appropriations Committee if they will go along with the Senate if the Senate appropriates money in order that dividends on insurance may be made out to the veterans who carry insurance. The Veterans' Administration, as I understand it, has approximately $2,000,-000,000 that could be used in the payment of dividends to those who are carrying insurance. They told me and our Committee on Veterans' Affairs they have been holding up the payment of the insurance dividends until the famous Zazov case was settled. The Supreme Court upheld the Veterans' Administration in the Zazov case. So that money may now be paid in dividends to these veterans. They have earned these dividends. I have already demanded they be paid. Any private insurance company would pay them. Certainly the Government should pay them dividends. The accumulated money belongs to the veterans. Our Committee on Veterans' Affairs made an exhaustive study on insurance administration in the Veterans' Administration. Some of the committee's recommendations have been carried out; others should be.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the bill may be considered as read and open to points of order and amendment at any point.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any points of order to the bill? The Chair will not receive points of order after amendments are considered. The Chair hears none.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. TABER: On page

3, after line 7, insert the following:
"For payment to James C. Davis, contestee, for expenses incurred in the contested-election case of Lowe v. Davis as audited and recommended by the Committee on House Administration, $1,289.08, to be disbursed by the Clerk of the House.

"For payment to James C. Davis, contestee, for expenses incurred in the contested-election case of Mankin v. Davis as audited and recommended by the Committee on House Administration, $2,000, to be disbursed by the Clerk of the House.

"For payment to Helen Douglas Mankin, contestant, for expenses incurred in the con-tested-election case of Mankin v. Davis as audited and recommended by the Committee on House Administration, $2,000, to be disbursed by the Clerk of the House.

"For payment to David J. Wilson, contestant, for expenses incurred in the contested-election case of Wilson v. Granger as audited and recommended by the Committee on House Administration, $2,000, to be dis-bursed by the Clerk of the House."

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, this is a routine amendment. The amounts carried in the proposal are undoubtedly due and we accept it.

The amendment was agreed to. Mr. CASE of South Dakota.

Chairman, I offer an amendment, which is at the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Case of South Dakota: On page 39, lines 7 and 8, strike out the words "or subcontract" and at the end of the paragraph strike out the period, insert a comma and the following: "and all sub-contracts under such contract. For the pur-poses of the Renegotiation Act of 1948 the term 'subcontract' means any purchase order or agreement to perform all or any part of the work, or to make or furnish any article, required for the performance of any other contract or subcontract."

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, the proposed amendment merely restores language carried originally in the act of 1944 which was inadvertently omitted in drafting the bill. We accept the amendment.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Chairman, the amendment merely moves subcontracts down to the end of the paragraph and defines the term as it is defined in the former act. The amendment is for the purpose of clarity and was suggested by those who are acquainted with administrative problems.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which is at the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Mahon: On page 14, line 19, after the period, add a new section as follows:

Electrification Administration, salaries and expenses, for an additional amount, fiscal year 1949, for administrative expenses to be available immediately and remain available until expended, $450,000."

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the amendment, that it carries legislation in the words "which will be available until expended."

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Texas desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Chairman, the amendment provides additional funds for the administrative expenses for the Rural Electrification Administration. It carries the same wording as was carried in the original act providing the funds. It is in accordance with the budget estimate, and it seems to me it is not subject to a point of order. It is not legislation because it is authorized by law.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, words "to be available until expended" make it legislation, and therefore the amendment is subject to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Hope in the chair). The Chair is ready to rule. The amendment in its present form with the language "to be available until expended" is clearly legislation. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Mahon: On page 14, line 19, after the period add a new section to read as follows:

"Rural Electrification Administration: Salaries and expenses, for an additional amount, fiscal year 1949, for administrative expenses,

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAHON. I yield. Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. The gentleman is aware of the fact that we put $450,000 in conference in the regular bill. I am not inferring that the entire budget request was agreed to. We agreed to the Senate proposal for an additional $450,000, and that is $450,000 under the budget estimate.

Mr. MAHON. If the gentleman will hear me a moment he will be aware of the situation and of the fact that I am not duplicating anything that will appear in the regular Department of Agriculture appropriation bill.

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. The gentleman is correct in saying that. You are not duplicating, except that it happens that the House first agreed to $5,000,000, the Senate added $450,000, which in conference the House agreed This $5,450,000 is however $450,000 under the original budget estimate of $5,900,000. Hence the confusion as to the $450,000 figure.

Mr. MAHON. That is right.

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. But our appropriations subcommittee did agree with the Senate on its raise of $450,000. Moreover, the Senators and we agreed that this would replace any request for a deficiency upon this particular item.

Mr. MAHON. Of course, the House of Representatives can work its will in a matter of this kind.

Briefly, here is the situation: I frankly admit that perhaps the Members of the House generally are not familiar with all the facts, but one thing can be marked down as a certainty, all the REA co-ops in our districts are aware of the situation. We are in this situation: We have appropriated in recent months for Rural Electrification loans $175,600,000, plus $400,000,000, or a total of $575,000,000. The Congress deserves much credit for this tremendous advancement in the REA program. While we have more than doubled the REA program, we are not going to get the results which we anticipated and hoped for, because while we increased the loan funds by more than double, we did not sufficiently increase the administrative funds, and applications from the local co-ops have to go through the mill here at the Washington office of the REA before action can be secured. The budget estimate was sent up here for $900,000 to take care of the additional administrative expense incident to the huge increase in REA loan funds. This would have increased the amount for administrative expenses from $5,000,000 to $5,900,000. After all, if it requires $5,000,000 to administer a program of $225,000,000, certainly an additional $900,000 is not too much for the tremendous increase of $275,000,000 in REA loans which we have provided for.

I would in the normal procedure have offered this amendment in the Committee on Appropriations, except that in our rush to bring the House to adjournment it did not seem best to follow that procedure. But in collaboration with others interested, particularly the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Poage], who helped draft the amendment, I have offered it The sum requested, relatively speaking, is not a large sum. It is only $450,000 for additional administrative expenses so that a half-billion dollars in loans can be processed, so that the REA co-ops can get the money, and so that the people living in rural areas can get the lines and the electricity. With a $225,000,000 program costing $5,000,000 to administer, certainly $5,900,000 will not be too much for a program more than twice the size of the program which had been planned.

If we go home and say, "We appropriated the money for REA loans but not the administrative funds to make the loans effective to the farmers," we will be in an unhappy situation. It is true that in the Department of Agriculture conference report on the regular bill, $450,000 is provided. This provides an additional $450,000, the full amount requested by the President.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman have five additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. MAHON. I hope that this matter is perfectly clear, and if it is not clear I would be glad to yield to anybody who desires to make an inquiry about it.

Mr. EVINS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield.

Mr. MAHON. I yield.

Mr. EVINS. The objection that has been raised heretofore in the processing of these applications is that the backlog in the office is too great. The place where funds can be used to greatest advantage in expediting the REA program is in the administrative office of the REA.

Mr. MAHON. That is true. The situation is this. Opponents of REA have said: "No, let us not increase the authorization of loans for REA; they have not expended the money we have let them have." The trouble too often has been that REA officials have not had sufficient funds for administrative expenses. In this amendment we provide the addi-tional sum of $450,000 requested by the Budget for administrative expenses. It is a good amendment and ought to be passed.

Mr. POAGE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAHON. I yield. Mr. POAGE. The REA at the present time has probably the best loss record of any one agency, less than one-half of 1 percent.

Mr. MAHON. That is right, an excellent record.

Mr. POAGE. How can we expect them to maintain that loss record if we do not give them sufficient money to service these loans?

Mr. MAHON. The gentleman is right. It certainly seems to me that for the supervision of loans to the extent of $575,000,000 a cost of $5,900,000 is not too much adminstrative expenses and I sincerely trust that the House will take action to provide the funds. We have made a good record in this session in trying to take care of the needs of REA. This amendment will get power lines and electric light to the rural homes faster than they otherwise would get there. That is the reason I am asking your support.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I would like to see if we can arrive at a limitation of time for further debate on this amendment. I see four Members standing. I suggest 3 minutes apiece.

Mr. RANKIN. Will not the gentleman make it 5?

Mr. TABER. I think 3 minutes apiece ought to be enough.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto close in 12 minutes, the last 3 to be reserved to the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. Poage] is recognized for 3 minutes.

Mr. POAGE. Mr. Chairman, I believe the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MAHON] has very well explained the situation. No agency of Government has a better lending record than the REA. No private lending agency with which I have any familiarity has a better lending record. When it comes to losses, the REA has had a minimum of losses. It has made sound, safe loans. It could not do this if it did not have an opportunity to study the loans it makes to local cooperatives. It is necessary for REA to study the needs of every cooperative if it is to maintain the fine record in which we take so much pride.

The truth is that the cost of proper study is greater today than it was in the early days of REA. Then it was possible to build lines almost anywhere with the ssurance that they would have customers. Now with a little over half the rural homes served, it takes more study to put the lines where they will serve the people who still need service with a minimum of useless line.

Then it was possible to get all the power that the cooperatives needed from the private power companies, although the companies did charge outrageous prices. Now in many sections, the private power companies simply do not have the power to supply their own needs, much less to supply the power the cooperatives need. REA is having to spend money trying to find adequate and dependable sources of power.

When their work began, there was no problem of equipment and supplies. you could get the money, there would be a salesman anxious to sell them to you. Now REA has to help the cooperatives locate conductor poles, transformers, and so forth.

And, finally, as these cooperatives become larger and their business more complex, it becomes more difficult and expensive to analyze their income and their business. There is no reduction in REA's duties.

REA has handled your money safely and successfully, without loss to the public. It has rendered a great service with small overhead charges. Why should we break that record and cause the taxpayers the loss of untold millions because of lack of sufficient administrative funds to supervise the loans? It seems to me that anyone who would suggest that it was economy at this time to reduce the relative amount of money and to deny the REA a reasonable amount of money to administer these loans wants it to lose money and wants it to have a bad record here next year. I want to see the REA continue the splendid record it has made in the past. I want it to come up here next year with the same fine record so that we can justify continuation of this fine work.

You cannot expect a continuation of this record if you give this agency less than 1 percent for administrative purposes. You have got to give the REA some more money if you are to expect them to properly handle the great sums You gave you have told them to loan. them $5,000,000 to handle $225,000,000 worth of funds last year. Now you add an additional $350,000,000 in loans and give them an increase of only 9 percent over what they had last year for administrative purposes. That means they must do two and a half times the work they did last year; handle 250 percent of the amount of money they handled last year on only a 9-percent increase in funds for administrative purposes. It is fantastic: it cannot be done by any

Surely we must apply the law of common sense to the administration of these The REA is no different from loans. any other lending agency, your local bank, or other local business institutions. When your local institutions more than double the volume of their business, you expect that their administrative expenses are going to increase at least a great deal more than 9 percent; yet, that is all the increase you are giving REA. We simply ask you by this amendment to give the REA a little less than a million dollars to administer $350,000,000 worth of additional loans. That is less than one-third of a cent for each dollar's worth of business you ask REA to handle. That, my friends, is all we ask. If that is not as low as the administrative costs of any agency you have ever dealt with, then I call on you to name it. I submit you cannot point to another agency in this Government that can handle money at a rate so low and handle it with the efficiency that the REA has handled it. Many of the appropriation bills you have passed have provided 10 to 20 times this percentage for administration.

The budget has asked for this amount. The REA has pointed out that this is necessary if they are to carry out the program we have prescribed for them. If we deny REA these funds, we must expect delay in the processing of the loan applications of your local cooperatives. We must expect such delay that your farm people will not actually get the great benefits we held out to them when we approved the greatest loaning program in history. If you do not give REA the needed funds, then you can expect it to show up with losses next year and in the years to come, and if it does come in here next year with substantial losses, do not charge it up to the REA; charge it up to the refusal of this House to give its agency the straw it needed to make sound bricks.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN].

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. Mr. Chairman, I was responsible perhaps more than any man in Congress for placing the additional $100,000,000 in loan authorizations in the regular agricultural appropriation bill for 1949. This will demonstrate, Mr. Chairman, that certainly I am among the many in this House who are very friendly to the REA. Most of us want that agency to have all the money it legitimately needs.

Let me call attention to the fact that I mentioned previously when the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Mahon] was speaking. We agreed with the Senate in conference on this point and it was understood by our conferees, in advancing the amount for administrative expenses from $5,000,000 to $5,450,000, that this would be ample and no deficiency would be requested. In adding another $450,000 here, Mr. Chairman, under a deficiency bill we would be breaking faith with the agreement that we of the Appropriations Subcommittee had in conference with the Senate. If I for 1 minute thought REA would suffer because of not enough administrative funds, I would gladly urge the acceptance of Mr. Manon's amendment. But such is not the case.

There is one more point. The Senate advanced the additional loan authorizations as a reason for giving to the legal department of the Department of Agriculture an additional $50,000, which we in conference, agreed to. REA has a right to be proud of this fine job it is doing and what the other gentlemen have had to say about the splendid record of repayment by the near 1,000 associations has often been called to the attention of the Congress by me when previous bills were on the floor.

Mr. Chairman, there is no question here as to loan authorizations. The question is how much shall we permit REA to expend directly for its expenses of administration. My associates have now had much experience and do not need the same degree of guidance from national headquarters as they did at the beginning of the program. Our REA Boards of Directors have occasionally complained of too much unnecessary interference and too many visits from field men and such. Surely, $5,450,000 will pay for a lot of top administrative work. Remember that REA has also available a good portion of the legal talent of the Solicitor's Office of the Department of Agriculture, for which latter office we are appropriating this year $2,000,000.

Mr. Chairman, I repeat that we are being very generous with REA, and much as I would like to give these additional funds Mr. Mahon requests, there is always present our responsibilities of providing billions of dollars for our veterans and national defense. We must draw the line somewhere, so that other very essential activities of government can properly be taken care of. I hope that Mr. Mahon's amendment will be defeated.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. Rankin].

RURAL ELECTRIFICATION

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, by all means this amendment should be adopted. It would merely provide the Rural Electrification Administration with the funds they need to administer the $400,000,000 we provided for next year and $175,000,000 that we added for the balance of this fiscal year.

The gentleman from Minnesota evidently does not understand that all these projects have to be submitted to the REA in Washington, they have to be scanned and investigated carefully, and ought to be.

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. I personally understand the situation very well,

Mr. RANKIN. They cannot do this with the amount of funds they have. This battle has been going on for 15 years, and yet with all the progress we have made the United States is not as well electrified today as Japan. Japan has a larger percentage of her farms electrified than we have in the United States.

Germany has a larger percentage of her farms electrified than they do in Minnesota or than we have throughout the whole United States.

Italy, France, Belgium, Switzerland, and Holland have a larger percentage of their farms electrified than we have in the United States.

We have provided $400,000,000 for rural electrification during this fiscal year and $400,000,000 for the next fiscal year, and I submit that it is nothing but good economics to supply the Rural Electrification Administration with sufficient funds to adequately and properly administer these funds, and in order to do so it is necessary that we have this additional $450,000 which the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Mahon] has asked for in this amendment, and which the Rural Electrification Administration says is absolutely necessary in order to enable them to do this work.

You are not wasting money here. This is not like all those billions you are pouring into the sink holes of Europe, Asia, and Africa. This is not like this $300,000,000 you voted to waste in China a few days ago. This is not like the $900,000,000 you are going to spend to send tobacco to Europe. This is money to help electrify the farm houses of your own country. Every dollar of it will come back with interest, and it will add immeasurably to the wealth of the Nation.

Mr. Chairman, I submit that the amendment ought to be carried by an overwhelming majority; by unanimous consent, if you please.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New York [Mr.

TABER].

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I hope that the House will pass on this item on the basis of fairness and need. The Senate committee, after all the funds that are involved in rural electrification construction had been voted by the House. and after they had the whole picture before them, held hearings on this item. Mr. Wickard, head of this organization. appeared before them, and on page 932 of the hearings he said that about $479,-000 out of the $900,000 would be devoted to helping in the engineering and construction work. And that is all they have to do. Now, why should we add to the amount that the Senate committee recommended? On that Senate committee are some who have a record of being amongst the most liberal with REA. So, why should we come out here and raise a figure that the Senate Committee on Agricultural Appropriations put in and which the House, after a conference, agreed to as the amount needed? That does not make sense. It is simply turning over $450,000 more to the bureaucrats to waste. I am willing to let them have what they need, but I do not believe that we should stretch ourselves so as to give them money to waste. You destroy the efficiency of governmental organization when you do that. The interest of REA and its successful administration requires that we refuse to give them more money than they need; more than the Senate Committee on Appropriations determined they should have.

Mr. Chairman, I hope the amendment will be defeated.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Mahon].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. Mahon) there were—ayes 60, noes 92.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chairman appointed as tellers Mr. Mahon and Mr. Taber.

The Committee again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 93, noes 137.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HENDRICKS: On page 20 line 6 after the word "expended", insert a new paragraph as follows:

"DEPARTMENT OF THE AIR FORCE

"The Secretary of the Air Force is hereby authorized in his discretion to accept in the name of the United States the tract of land comprising the Valparaiso golf course at Valparaiso, Eglin Field, Fla.: Provided, That no appropriated funds shall be used for the acquiring or maintenance or upkeep of the golf course now on the said lands or for the maintenance of any recreational activities placed thereon."

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HENDRICKS. I am glad to yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. TABER. The idea of this is simply that it allows funds that have been made out of the profits of an officers' mess at this place to be used for maintaining their golf course. It does not take any money for that purpose out of the Federal Treasury, is that correct?

Mr. HENDRICKS. That is correct.

Mr. TABER. It prohibits the use of any appropriated funds to be used for that purpose, either for the acquiring of the property or its maintenance or operation for recreational facilities. That would all have to be done out of the profits of this officers' mess, is that correct?

Mr. HENDRICKS. That is correct.

Mr. TABER. With that in mind, Mr. Chairman, I do not object to it. The amendment is drawn in such language that it is perfectly plain.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HENDRICKS. I yield.

Mr. McCORMACK. The gentleman from Florida [Mr. Hendricks] in offering this amendment is again demonstrating the great service that he has rendered as a Member of this body, carrying on right to the end representing the people of his State in his able and effectual manner. All of us who have ever had the honor of serving with him have a most profound respect for our friend from Florida [Mr. Hendricks].

His service has been outstanding, constructive, and courageous. We will all respect the reasons which prompted him to voluntarily retire. We regret very much his retirement from the Congress. He retires with the knowledge that his record while a Member will accupy a prominent place in the pages of congressional history.

The very fact that he is offering this amendment in the closing days of the Congress is typical of the type of service that my dear friend has rendered during the years that he has been a Member of this House.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I thank my chairman and other members of the committee for accepting this amendment, and I say "thank you" to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCormack] with whom I have had a very pleasant association.

Unless there are some further questions I yield back the remainder of my time. Mr. Chairman,

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Florida [Mr. HENDRICKS].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. RANKIN: On page 20, after the Hendricks amendment, at the end of line 6, insert a new paragraph to read as follows:

"For construction of the Tennessee-Tombigbee inland waterway, $1,500,000."

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, this Tennessee-Tombigbee project has been approved by the Army engineers, and by the present Chief of Army Engineers, as well as by his predecessor.

It has been pointed out time and time again that it is the most important project of its kind that has yet been proposed. It is the only place on earth where you can transfer traffic from one major watershed to another with so much ease, so little expense, and such a tremendous saving in transportation costs and distances.

The Army engineers have made their plans. They have drawn their blue-prints. They have everything ready to proceed. They are now asking that we provide the money to begin.

The Bureau of the Budget recommended this $1,500,000. That is what I am asking for in this amendment.

I pointed out the other day that this project will cut the water distance from the Gulf of Mexico to our Oak Ridge plant on the Tennessee River where our atomic bombs are made by 786 miles. A bargeload of 14,000 tons going from Mobile to that project would save $30,380 on its fuel bill alone. If it were going into Michigan or into the Great Lakes or upper Mississippi River or upper Missouri, it would save $20,160 on its fuel bill alone.

When I say the upper Mississippi, I mean St. Paul and Minneapolis, Minn. This means more to the people who pay transportation costs in the great Mississippi Valley, extending from Pittsburgh, Pa., all the way across, than any other project that has ever been proposed.

If this bargeload went up the Ohio River it would save $22,160 on its fuel bill alone.

At the same time it would have the swift current of the Mississippi for the downstream traffic.

Oh, I know there are some men behind the iron curtain of discriminatory freight rates who do not want the people west of the Mississippi River or south of the Ohio to get any relief from these penalties they have paid throughout all the years that have passed and gone. They are willing to paralyze our entire water-transportation system; they are willing to jeopardize, if you please, to that extent, the safety of the Nation. If we were to become involved in a war in the years to come, in which the atomic bomb would be the principal weapon, this would give us not only a short water route but it would give us two outlets from Oak Ridge to the sea. So it would add to the defense of the Nation more than any other expenditure that could be made at this time of anything like the amount proposed.

It seems to me that while you are spending all these hundreds of millions of dollars of lend-lease American money to rebuild the Dnieperstroi Dam in Russia, while you are spending these millions-or should I say billions-to build hydroelectric plants over Europe, while you are spending the hundreds of millions of dollars to be wasted in China, it seems to me that the Congress of the United States might do what we are going to have to do sooner or later, and that is to provide the small amount necessary to begin construction of this waterway. the most important, the most necessary project of its kind that has yet been proposed. Ask any member of the Corps of Army Engineers. Go to General Wheeler, go to General Reibold who has just retired, go to any of those men who know. They will tell you that this is the most important project of its kind they have ever had to pass upon.

You might as well approve this amendment, for I am going to keep this proposition before you until this great project is constructed.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired. Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this bill and all amendments thereto close in 3 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. Case] is recognized for 3 minutes.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, the Tombigbee Canal may be a desirable project to construct at some time. The House voted on three different occasions against the authorization of the Tombigbee Canal. Finally it was authorized.

The House Committee did not include it in the civil functions appropriation bill this year. It was suggested in the other body but in conference it was pointed out that the two waterways, the Overton Canal and the Tombigbee Waterway, would together cost $189,000,000.

The Tombigbee Canal cannot be built this week, this year, or next year. It is a long-range proposition.

The Committee on Civil Functions believed that it was much better to put our money on flood-control projects now where immediate results could be obtained, where there was an urgency, where life and property were in danger. The waterway canal which duplicates existing facilities for transportation does not have the urgency that is evident in flood-control projects or is evident in the expenditures we have been called upon to make for increased numbers of aircraft.

When the gentleman says that it means more for national defense than any other money that can be appropriated he is flying in the face of what he himself has said with regard to the importance of a 70-group air force and of doing some of these other things which are done directly in the name of national defense.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. No.

I think the Tombigbee Canal has some merit; and some day when we need a public-works program it will be a good time to put some labor on some of these things that do not have immediate urgency, but it ought not to be in this final deficiency bill that the House will vote on this session.

The amendment should be defeated.
The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. Hope, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 6935) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1943, and for other purposes, had directed him to report the bill back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and amendments to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the Chair will put them en gros.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time and was read the third time

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman opposed to the bill?

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Speaker, I am in its present form.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the motion to recommit.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. Mahon moves to recommit the bill to the Committee on Appropriations with instructions to report the same back forthwith with the following amendment: On page 14, line 19, after the period add a new section to read as follows:

"Rural Electrication Administration. Salaries and expenses. For an additional amount for the fiscal year 1949 for administrative expenses, $450,000."

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the motion to recommit.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to recommit.

as follows:

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. Mahon) there -ayes 78, noes 148.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays

The yeas and nays were ordered. The question was taken; and there were—yeas 199, nays 204, not voting 27,

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The bill was passed and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

SUPPLEMENTAL FEDERAL SECURITY AGENCY APPROPRIATION BILL, 1949

The SPEAKER. The unfinished business is consideration of the President's veto of H. R. 6355.

The question is. Will the House, on reconsideration, pass the bill, the objections of the President to the contrary notwithstanding?

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Speaker, the President vetoed the bill H. R. 6355, which carries nearly $1,000,000,000 of appropriations for functioning of the Social Security Administration, some portions of the Public Health Service and the United States Employment Service in the Department of Labor. That is the question before the House.

Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

Mr. ROONEY. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ROONEY. Mr. Speaker, under the rules is not the majority granted the privilege of discussing this message?

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman from Wisconsin withdraws his moving of the previous question it would be in order. Otherwise it is not in order.

The question is on the previous question.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays. The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were-yeas 238, nays 161, not voting 31. as follows:

THE PRESIDENT'S VETO OF THE LABOR-FEDERAL SECURITY APPROPRIATION BILL

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from New Jersey?

There was no objection. Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I shall vote to sustain the President.

I do not know why any Member of this House should feel or express surprise that the President felt it necessary to veto H. R. 6355. It is true that this veto attaches, under our law, to the bill as a whole-to the appropriation as well as the organizational features. His veto message, however, as well as his prior conduct, leaves no doubt as to the fact that the bill is unacceptable to him because it would transfer the United States Employment Service from the Department of Labor to the Federal Security Agency. The President's position on the subject of this transfer had been made abundantly clear long before the bill in question was drafted.

In 1947, and again this year, the President submitted reorganization plans to this Congress, under special legislative authority reposed in him, for the permanent location of the United States Employment Service in the Department of Labor. These plans were rejected. The principal reason assigned for the rejection of the plan submitted this year was the fact that any basic reorganization of executive functions should await recommendations of the Commission on Organization of the Executive Branch of the Government which is presently making a study of such structure. The passage of H. R. 6355, despite Congress' attitude on the reorganization plan referred to, is an act of flagrant inconsistency.

When the President's efforts to achieve a permanent integration of the employment service functions with the labor functions of this Government failed, no course remained open to him but the exercise of his ultimate prerogative of veto in attempting to spare the country the effects of unwise legislation. The responsibility for the present situation which finds one of the major independent agencies of the Government without funds for the coming fiscal year, lies with the proponents and supporters of H. R. 6355-not with the President.

The action of coupling in one measure appropriation provisions with organizational provisions affecting the basic structure of this Government in a manner known to be deeply contrary to the President's wishes is a reprehensible one. That the Chief Executive of these United States refused to yield to the expedient offered him in this legislation is to his lasting credit.

Referring for a moment to the operation of the Employment Service in the Department of Labor. I wonder if even now its history is fully understood.

In the first place, it was not transferred from the Department of Labor pursuant to a superior organizational scheme. The necessities of wartime administration alone prompted its removal. When these necessities ceased, the employment function, as it was expected, was returned by Executive order to its original home in the Labor Department.

It seems clear and simple to me that employment has a good deal to do with labor and that one cannot exist very long without the other.

Prior to the war, the disassociation of employment matters from the Department of Labor would have seemed completely unreasonable. Any suggestion at that time that employment was not a matter of primary concern to the Department of Labor would have aroused storms of indignation. Since the inception of the Employment Service it has spent a number of highly successful years in the Department of Labor. In the face of its worthy record there, in the face of its achievements there, and in the face of well-considered theories of Government organization which decree that its proper location is there, the employment service would again be uprooted by this Congress from its rightful location in a Cabinet department of this Government and shunted over to the Federal Security Agency. The ostensible reason for this move, as I understand it, is to prevent malfeasance of the program under Labor Department administration. Again, I say the Employment Service record in the Labor Department speaks for itself. The expression of the fear of maladministration after numerous years of Labor Department supervision during which any evidence of improper administration is singularly lacking, is not only com-pletely without justification, but also ridiculous.

Before H. R. 6355 is reconsidered, I think it would be well if Congress took a few minutes off and reflected upon its actions in the realm of labor and its attitude toward the Department of Labor. A department of labor is no stepchild in the scheme of a democratic government. It is entitled to occupy a responsible and respected position in this country of all countries where the working man and woman is cast in a particularly important role under our prevailing democratic principles. I think it is time this Congress withdrew its fire from the Labor Department and its officials spent some time evaluating its own motives. The experience of the late Secretary of Labor with this Congress, of which we have intimate knowledge, reflects more eloquently than any words I could choose. the indefensible congressional attitude toward labor matters. When another man assumes the great responsibilities which belong to the office of the Secretary of Labor, I hope he will find the actions of this body toward him and his Department actuated by principle-not prejudice.

Thank God we have a President who has the courage to veto this unfair bill, obviously designed to weaken the Department of Labor by removing functions which properly belong in the Labor Department.

REPEAL THE TAFT-HARTLEY LAW

Mr. ISACSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. ISACSON. Mr. Speaker, the Taft-Hartley law is wrecking the American labor movement. That is clear after a year of operation. That is why I have introduced my bill to repeal the Taft-Hartley law.

The worst is still ahead.

Many union contracts were signed just before the law went into effect on August 22, 1947. That means that there will be a wave of contract renewals coming up in the middle of this summer. Additional hundreds of thousands of union members will find out at first hand what a slave-labor law can do to their organizations.

But enough is on the record already. The record proves that there is only one thing to do with the Taft-Hartley It cannot be amended. It must be repealed, thrown into the ashcan of history along with Hitler's Nazi state and all other efforts of greedy men to break the organizations of free workers.

This conclusion was foreseen a year ago by organized labor. It is supported now throughout the country. In the words of the distinguished minority re-In the port of the Joint Congressional Committee on Labor-Management Relations:

Through the encouragement offered to antiunion employers and through the justified suspicion and resentment engendered among wage earners, the act has laid the basis for industrial unrest.

The report recommends "immediate repeal of the act to avoid the serious injury to our economy which we foresee.'

A free and powerful labor movement is the best guaranty of the preservation of democracy. No President in our history ever received more wholehearted support from the bulk of the people than Franklin D. Roosevelt. It is no accident that the bedrock of Roosevelt's support lay with the unions.

Neither is it an accident that in both Italy and Germany when fascism was installed the trade-unions had to be wiped out in the course of only a few months, in order to clear the way for smashing all civil rights.

The unions are labor's first line of defense against starvation. Much more than that, a union organized through the free choice of workers without help or hindrance from government, is a worker's best guaranty that he can walk in dignity, head high in the face of the overlords of industry.

Pork chops are important, but unions give workers more than pork chops. When the unions are under frontal assault, flank attacks are made by reaction on all civil and economic rights of the people. This is why the CIO was right in saying before the Joint Labor-Management Relations Committee on June 4:

The antilabor aspects of the Taft-Hartley Act have set in motion other forms of repression on local levels. It is not merely the Federal courts who are engaged in a flood of injunctions. In the State courts as well we find that the issuance of antilabor injunctions limiting and frequently outlawing all picketing is now becoming routine under the stimulus of the Taft-Hartley Act. We find on the State level an increasing resort to use of many of the instrumentalities of government to repress the organizational activities of working people and to break strikes.

Workers in all parts of the world are jealous of their liberties. But a free labor movement is above all the seal of what is really the American way of life, and I do not mean the NAM way of life.

Our fathers came to this country to escape the tyrannies of an Old World and to build free institutions for themselves and their children. Say "America" in any country and one of the first ideas which comes to mind is "production." America's mighty power to produce wealth is not the creation of boards of directors or coupon clippers but above all it stems from free people working under the protection of free unions, able to earn decent wages to purchase the necessities of life in adequate amounts.

When I say free labor I do not mean that American workers have had a paradise on earth which is being taken from them now by the Taft-Hartley Act. From the first day any immigrant ever walked out of steerage he and his children and their children have had to fight for anything they ever won.

We have gone through the horrors of war and the miseries of depression. We have seen our children hungry when there were no jobs. We have seen our sisters and cousins burnt in the filthy sweatshops. We have seen our brothers and uncles pale and worn out under the lash of the corporation conveyor belts. We have seen arrogance and brutality pitted against the workers' efforts to organize to protect themselves and their families.

Through all the hardships and struggles we have gained steadily. We have built great cities and mighty industries for which the money changers take credit. Nothing has been given but much has been won.

Because the workers of America were united and organized, behind Roosevelt, we won the Wagner Act. The Wagner Act, in spite of the high-priced publicity of the National Association of Manufacturers, did not give us anything on silver platters either. It did right a few ancient wrongs. It did set a limit on the lawless repression with which the corporations attempted to hold down the workers who made them rich. And it did make possible the further progress of our Nation.

Free American labor, organized into democratic unions, produced on an unbelievable scale when the call to arms came in the Second World War. From the hands of American workers came the decisive share of the weapons which defeated fascism.

But when the war was over, and labor thought it could rest on its laurels, the corporations and their agents went to work to destroy the Wagner Act.

The elections of 1946 were lost by the people who stayed away from the polls. And as a result, Taft-Hartley was passed.

The Taft-Hartley law does much more than wreck the Wagner Act. What we face today is something worse than the sweatshop and speed-up and hired finks and cops of the 1920's and 1930's. Then at least labor was free to fight although against great odds. No matter what the odds, as long as we can fight we can win.

The Taft-Hartley Act is a straitjacket. It not only puts weapons in the hands of the industrialists, it ties the hands of labor and leaves the unions defenseless.

Here is the way Taft-Hartley has worked:

First. It has put a brake on organizational drives. Unions cannot stand still while vast unorganized groups of workers need their protection. The unorganized areas stand as a welcoming sign for runaway plants. The unorganized areas are a pit of open shops and low wages into which the unions can be dragged.

A few figures show clearly what Taft-Hartley has done to stop organization. Between August 1947 and March 1948 only 950 elections were held. During the same period in the preceding year, 3,500 elections under the Wagner Act were held.

Along the same lines, the rate of filing of petitions for certification was about three times as great in the year before Taft-Hartley as it was after the law was passed.

Second. The Taft-Hartley law has reached into the union halls and interfered in the conduct of internal union business. The affidavit requirements make it possible for the NLRB to dictate in effect who the unions shall choose for leaders. In this connection it is worth noting that many unions which bar Communists from office—for example, the mine workers and the steel workers—have nevertheless held out against compliance with the non-Communist affidavit requirements.

Furthermore, the dodge of noncompliance has been used by some corporations—for example, Remington Rand and the Government Services cafeterias—as a new means of all-out attack on unions, as they used to do with such devices as the Mohawk Valley plan. This is done in spite of the fact that compliance is not and cannot be required by law.

In the words of William S. Tyson, solicitor of labor, in a memorandum of January 23, 1948, to the Secretary of

1. There is nothing in section 9 (f) or (h) which interferes with the right of unions to continue traditional and legitimate tradeunion activities without resort to the procedures and remedles provided in the National Labor Relations Act, as amended, if they choose to proceed in this fashion.

2. Similarly, there is nothing in the act which prevents an employer, if he so desires, from bargaining with an otherwise qualified union, since the filing of affidavits and organizational and financial data is a condition precedent to resort by unions to the Board and not to the practice of free collective bargaining by unions and employers.

Third. The act outlawed the closed shop and is the jump-off point for an attack on all forms of union security. The NLRB is bogged down in a mess of union-shop-election cases. The spokesmen for big business now propose another way out of the difficulty of union-shop elections which have gone overwhelmingly in favor of keeping the union shop: they want to ban union shops altogether.

The hiring hall, which put an end to the day of the crimp on the water front, is also under employer fire with Taft-Hartley as the weapon held over the heads of the maritime workers.

Fourth. The act has interfered in accepted and orderly union practices. Even peaceful picketing has been branded as an unfair-labor practice. Suits involving more than $15,000,000 have been filed against unions for such practices.

Fifth. Most important of all, the act is being manipulated to bar national strikes. Here it must be noted that while the act in itself is bad, it is being diligently enforced by an administration which supposedly opposes it.

The President chose the applause of reactionary Congressmen by saying he would do his constitutional duty of administering the act, rather than the applause of American progressives, which would have been his if he had added that the law must be repealed.

An administration genuinely concerned with protecting the workers' organizations can do much to prevent abuse of labor in the operations of the Taft-Hartley law. There are areas in the law where there is room for interpretation, where the administration could exercise discretion in favor of the worker. This the administration has not done. The law has instead been consistently and exaggeratedly interpreted to favor the employers.

The power to set up a board of inquiry is optional with the President. President Truman on five occasions has not hesitated to declare the existence of national emergencies and set the machinery of Taft-Hartley in motion to rob workers of their strike weapon. Senator Taft himself could not have acted more promptly against the coal miners, the maritime workers, the long-lines telephone operators, or the atomic-energy workers.

The injunction weapon has been used against the miners, the railroad workers, and the maritime workers. In each case the corporations had only to hold fast to a position of no concessions. When the unions had to resort to the strike call—their only weapon after the corporation side refused to yield in any degree—the power of the Government injunction was thrown against them.

There is a note of bitter mockery in the fact-finding report which led to the injunction issued June 11 against the maritime strike set for June 15. The report of President Truman's board concludes with these words:

And if the status quo can be continued, real and sincere collective bargaining may finally avoid disruption.

To continue the status quo means, of course, to seek an injunction and hamstring the unions by banning a strike. But what kind of "real and sincere collective bargaining" can be carried on when the shipowners know that the workers are powerless to do more than talk about their needs? No union was built with words alone, no union can long be preserved when strikes are outlawed.

The strike is a last resort, an act of tremendous sacrifice on the part of workers, who generally, having no savings, are still willing to go without wages for weeks if need be to win their demands. Strikes cannot be called by so-called "hotheads or agitators." As any union man knows, a strike to succeed at all must be an expression of the collective will of virtually all the organized workers.

By robbing unions of their defensive weapon of the strike and instituting government by injunction, the Taft-Hartley Act has created the first links in the chain of fascism.

By robbing workers of their best defense against inflation—free collective bargaining for better wages and working conditions—the Taft-Hartley Act has laid the basis for reduced purchasing power, lower living standards, and an eventual economic crisis which is bound to shake our economic system.

Along with the Taft-Hartley law, corporate wealth will be used to fight tradeunions and undermine living standards. In depression days ahead those who are profiteering from inflation will be able to sit down on their money bags, while the people are starving and are subjected more and more to attempts at complete economic and political domination by big business.

It will take a vigorous, well-organized new political party—speaking a language politicians understand, the language of votes, to secure the repeal of the Taft-Hartley Act. The leadership of both the Republican and Democratic Parties has clearly demonstrated that in practice they support this bipartisan antilabor legislation.

DISPLACED-PERSONS BILL—CONFERENCE REPORT FILED

Mr. FELLOWS submitted a conference report and statement on the bill (H. R. 3566) to amend subsection (e) of section 19 of the Immigration Act of 1917, as amended, and for other purposes, for printing under the rule.

ECA APPROPRIATION BILL SENT TO CONFERENCE

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 6801) making appropriations for foreign aid for the period beginning April 3, 1948, and ending June 30, 1949, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments, disagree to the amendments of the Senate, agree to the conference asked by the Senate, and that the Speaker appoint conferees.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is this the European relief program appropriation

Mr. TABER. Yes.

Mr. McCORMACK. Has the gentleman conferred with the minority?

Mr. TABER. I have notified the minority leader. I have had his office called and tried to locate him to advise him that I was going to ask to send this to conference.

The SPEAKER. The Chair may say to the gentleman from Massachusetts that the request of the gentleman from New York is merely to send the bill to conference.

Mr. McCORMACK. I understand that, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. TABER. The only member of the Deficiency Subcommittee on Appropriations I could contact was the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. Kerr]. I spoke to him.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none and appoints the following conferees: Messrs. Taber, Wigglesworth, Engel of Michigan, Stefan, Case of South Dakota, Keefe, Cannon, Kerr, and Mahon.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. GILLIE asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an editorial.

Mr. BANTA asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD.

CONSENT CALENDAR

The SPEAKER. This is Consent Calendar day. The Clerk will call the first bill on the Consent Calendar.

AMENDING THE NATIONALITY ACT OF

The Clerk called the first bill on the Consent Calendar, H. R. 2286, to amend the Nationality Act of 1940.

Mr. POWELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

PURCHASE OF AUTOMOBILES BY CERTAIN DISABLED VETERANS

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 4007) to authorize payments by the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs on the purchase of automobiles or other conveyances by certain disabled veterans, and for other purposes.

Mr. KEAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I understand that a bill has passed the Senate, now on the Speaker's desk, that is not as broad as this one but a bill which will provide benefits to this group of deserving veterans. May I ask the gentlewoman from Massachusetts if my understanding is correct?

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. The gentleman is correct. The bill, S. 1391, would cost about half as much as the bill now on the House Consent Calendar. As the gentleman knows, I have been trying to get that bill up for consideration and passage for over a year. It takes care of a group of very seriously disabled veterans. There are about 40 amputees in Washington today asking that the bill be passed before the adjournment of Congress.

Mr. McCORMACK. May I ask the gentleman from New Jersey if he would be agreeable to the passage of this bill and substituting the Senate bill?

Mr. KEAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts knows that we have a rule that bills allowing benefits of a million dollars shall not be taken from the Consent Calendar and passed. This bill would cost $19,000,000, which would mean that the bill to which the gentleman refers would cost some $10,000,000.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order. The SPEAKER. The regular order is, Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey that the bill be passed over without prejudice?

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? Mr. KEAN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

PREVENTING MULTIPLE STATE INCOME TAXES ON SALARIES OF GOVERNMENT EMPLOYEES

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 127) to amend the Judicial Code in respect to the original jurisdiction of the district courts of the United States in certain cases, and for other purposes.

Mr. MALONEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. O'HARA. Mr. Speaker, I object.
The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?
Mr. MALONEY. Mr. Speaker, I object.

PAYMENT TO SWISS GOVERNMENT FOR DAMAGE INFLICTED DURING WORLD WAR II BY UNITED STATES ARMED FORCES

The Clerk called the bill (S. 1605) to provide for the payment of a sum not to exceed $12,000,000 to the Swiss Government as partial compensation for damage inflicted on Swiss territory during World War II by United States armed forces in violation of neutral rights, and authorizing appropriations therefor.

Mr. KEAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

CONTINUATION OF TRANSPORTATION SERVICES

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 5318) to provide for the continuation of the transportation services of the Inland Waterways Corporation, for the disposition of its property and other interests, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. KARSTEN of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this is a very important piece of legislation to be considered on the Consent Calendar, and I think the House ought to have a little more information about it.

Mr. PLOESER. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield, there is general agreement all around as to the provisions in this bill. There was quite an extensive study made by the Committee on Small Business of the House dealing with this subject, later by the Subcommittee on Appropriations for Government Corporations, and then by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. The only objection that arose at all to the provisions of the bill was eliminated by an amendment, I think offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. DOLLIVER], and the House has already appropriated funds in the Government corporations appropriation bill, which was concurred in by the Senate, so there is no disagreement. The appropriation took into consideration the provisions of this bill.

Mr. KARSTEN of Missouri. When is it proposed to dispose of this corporation?

Mr. PLOESER. It permits disposal under conditions which would conform to the organic act.

Mr. KARSTEN of Missouri. How is it to be sold? Is it to be sold to private interests for cash or is it to be sold on time payments, or how is it to be sold?

Mr. PLOESER. We leave that practically up to the Department of Commerce to handle. Of course, it will be sold to private interests.

Mr. KARSTEN of Missouri. What has been done with reference to the continuation of this type of service.

Mr. PLOESER. If the gentleman were familiar with the organic act he would know that the service provided there would have to be continued, and this provides for the continuation of the service on the Mississippi and on the Missouri, with the same type of less-than-bargeload-lot service as is being given now.

Mr. KARSTEN of Missouri. Can the gentleman tell me whether this bill has the approval of the American Waterways Association?

Mr. PLOESER. The competitive barge operators? No. Neither do they furnish the same service. Not all oppose this—but some want to kill the service.

Mr. KARSTEN of Missouri. I withdraw my reservation of objection, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. BOGGS of Louisiana. Mr. Speaker, further reserving the right to object, I consider this bill of vital importance, particularly to the lower Mississippi Valley, and I do not feel that it should be taken up in this fashion. I therefore object, Mr. Speaker.

CREDIT SERVICE AS A CADET FOR PAY PURPOSES

The Clerk called the bill (S. 657) to amend the Pay Readjustment Act of 1942, as amended, so as to authorize crediting of service as a cadet, midshipman, or aviation cadet for pay purposes, and for other purposes.

Mr. KEAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

CONVEY CERTAIN LANDS TO HOWARD UNIVERSITY

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 5509) to authorize Defense Homes Corporation to convey to Howard University certain lands in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Nebraska?

There was no objection,

SYNTHETIC LIQUID FUEL PLANTS ACT OF

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 5475) to aid in preventing shortages of petroleum and petroleum products in the United States by promoting the production of synthetic liquid fuels.

Mr. KEAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

BUILDINGS FOR OLD-AGE AND SURVIVORS INSURANCE BUREAU

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 3907) to authorize construction of buildings for the Bureau of Old-Age and Survivors Insurance.

Mr. KEAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

TRANSFER JURISDICTION OVER SCHOOL BUILDINGS

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 5433) to transfer jurisdiction over certain school buildings in Vanport, Oreg., to the Federal Works Administrator and to authorize an appropriation to rebuild a school building in Vanport, Oreg., which was destroyed by fire.

Mr. CUNNINGHAM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa? There was no objection.

FUR PRODUCTS LABELING ACT

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 3734) to protect consumers, retailers, distributors, manufacturers, dealers, and producers from misnaming, misbranding, improper identification, and deceptive or misleading advertising of fur products and articles made in part or in whole from fur, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? Mr. VAN ZANDT, Mr. LARCADE, and Mr. BOGGS of Delaware objected.

AMENDING THE ORGANIC ACT OF PUERTO RICO

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 6502) to amend the Organic Act of Puerto Rico.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. KEAN. I object, Mr. Speaker.

WYANDOTTE TRIBE OF OKLAHOMA

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 3685) authorizing the Wyandotte Tribe of Oklahoma, through its business committee, to sell and convey, subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, the Wyandotte Indian public burial ground in Kansas City, Kans.

Mr. SCRIVNER. Mr. Speaker, I have discussed this with the chairman of the subcommittee. I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas?

There was no objection.

BASE PERIOD FOR DETERMINATION OF PARITY FOR MARYLAND TOBACCO

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 5111) to amend the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, as amended, to change the base period for the determination of parity for Maryland tobacco from August 1919 to July 1929 to the period from January 1936 to December 1945.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I voted against this bill in the committee, and I objected to its consideration the last time the Consent Calendar was called. Last Saturday we passed a bill dealing with many crops on which we put support prices of 60 to 90 percent of Tobacco has 90 percent of parity. Now they want to adopt this plan to increase the present support price. I again object.

The SPEAKER. Three objections are required.

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. I object, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. I object, Mr. Speaker.

MOUNT VERNON MEMORIAL HIGHWAY

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 5842) to provide for the acquisition of additional land along the Mount Vernon Memorial Highway in exchange for certain dredging privileges, and for other purposes

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. McGREGOR, Mr. SMITH of Ohio, Mr. McCULLOCH, and Mr. GRIFFITHS

NATIONAL RESERVE OF INDUSTRIAL PRODUCTIVE CAPACITY

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 6098) to promote the common defense by providing for the retention and maintenance of a national reserve of industrial productive capacity, and for other purposes.

Mr. KEAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

REORGANIZATION OF BOARDS OF VISI-TORS TO THE MILITARY AND NAVAL ACADEMIES

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 3657) to provide for a Board of Visitors to the United States Naval Academy and for a Board of Visitors to the United States Military Academy, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

Mr. KEAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a similar Senate bill (S. 239) be considered in lieu of the House bill.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I have an amendment to the committee amendment. I do not know whether or not the Senate bill is identical with the House bill with the committee amendments.

The SPEAKER. The Chair suggests that the bill be passed over until we have had a chance to compare the two bills.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Would it not be possible to consider the House bill and the committee amendments and then take up the Senate bill, strike out all after the enacting clause, and insert the provisions of the House bill as passed?

The SPEAKER. That could be done. Is there objection to the present consideration of the House bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there shall be appointed on or before the last day of every year a Board of Visitors to the United States Naval Academy and a Board of Visitors to the United States Military Academy.

SEC. 2. Each Board shall consist of seven persons appointed by the President: The chairman of the Committee on Armed Services of the Senate or his designee; three other members of the Senate appointed by the Vice President or President pro tempore of the Senate, one of whom shall be a member of the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate; the chairman of the Committee on Armed Services of the House of Representatives or his designee; four other members of the House of Representatives appointed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives, one of whom shall be a member of the Committee on Appropriations of the House of Representatives.

SEC. 3. (a) After the date of enactment of this act, the members of each Board shall serve as such during the next succeeding year after appointment and not more than two-thirds of the members of each Board shall be replaced by new members when annual appointments are made in accordance with sections 1 and 2 of this act.

(b) In case of the death or resignation of any member of each Board during the term for which said member was appointed, a successor shall be appointed for the unexpired portion of the term. Said successor shall be appointed by the official, or his successor, who appointed the member being succeeded.

SEC. 4. Each Board shall visit the respec tive Academy for which it is appointed at least once annually at such time as the Secretary of the Navy or the Secretary of War, as the case may be, shall designate, and each Board or the individual members thereof may, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Navy or the Secretary of War, as the case may be, officially visit the Academy concerned at other times during the year, in groups or individually, as the members of each respective Board on matters pertaining to the duties of each Board. The Secretary of the Navy or the Secretary of War, as case may be, shall notify the Superintendent of the Naval Academy or the Superintendent of the Military Academy, as the case may be, and members of the Board concerned, of the date of the annual visit and any official visit other than that designated as the annual visit.

SEC. 5. (a) It shall be the duty of each Board to inquire into the state of discipline, curriculum, instruction, physical equipment, fiscal affairs, and other matters relating to the Academy concerned which the Board may decide to consider.

(b) Each Board shall within 60 days after the meeting designated as the annual visit, submit a written annual report to the President regarding its action as such Board, together with its views and recommenda-tions pertaining to the Academy concerned. Any report based on a visit other than the annual visit (except reports of the visitors to the United States naval postgraduate school) shall be submitted by the originator or originators thereof to the President with-60 days after approval of said report by at least a majority of the members of the Board.

(c) Each Board is authorized to call into consultation upon prior approval of the Secretary of the Navy or the Secretary of War, as the case may be, such advisers as it may deem necessary or advisable to effectuate the duties imposed upon it by the provisions of this act.

SEC. 6. (a) Each member of each Board shall receive not more than $5 per day and be reimbursed under Government travel regulations for actual expenses of travel while performing duties as a member of either Board.

(b) Advisers called for consultation by either Board in connection with the business of the Board shall be compensated in the same manner as members of the Boards in accordance with the provisions of subsection (a) of this section.

SEC. 7. (a) The Secretary of the Navy is authorized to prescribe such rules, regulations, and procedures as he may deem necessary to effect annual and other visits to the United States naval postgraduate school by either the Board or a committee composed of members thereof, and the Secretary shall prescribe the manner in which reports of said visitors regarding visits to said school shall be prepared and submitted to the President. (b) Visits to the postgraduate school shall governed by and conducted in accordance with the provisions of sections 5 (a), 5 (c), and 6 of this act.

SEC. 8. That part of the act of August 29, 1916, entitled "An act making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, and for other purposes," which relates to the Board of Visitors to the United States Naval Academy (39 Stat. 608) and reads as follows: "From and after the passage of this act there shall be appointed every year, in the following manner, a Board of Visitors, to visit the Academy, the date of the annual visit of the Board aforesaid to be fixed by the Secretary of the Navy: Seven persons shall be appointed by the President and four Senators and five Members of the House of Representatives shall be designated as visitors by the Vice President or President pro tempore of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives, respectively, in the month of January of each year. The chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs of the Senate and chairman of the mittee on Naval Affairs of the House of Representatives shall be ex officio members of said Board.

"Each member of said Board shall receive while engaged upon duties as a member of the Board not to exceed $5 a day and actual expenses of travel by the shortest mail routes," is hereby repealed.

SEC. 9. (a) So much of the provision of the act of August 9, 1912, entitled "An act making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and for other purposes," which provides as follows: "Provided, That the act approved May 28, 1908, be amended and reenacted so as to read as follows: That hereafter the Board of Visitors to the Military Academy shall consist of five members of the Committee on Military Affairs of the Senate and seven members of the Committee on Military Affairs of the House of Representatives, to be appointed by the respective chairmen thereof; the members so appointed shall visit the Military Academy annually at such time as the chairman of said committees shall appoint, and the members from each of said committees may visit said Academy together or separately as the said committees may elect during the ses-sion of Congress; and the Superintendent of the Academy and the members of the Board of Visitors shall be notified of such date by the chairmen of the said committees. The expenses of the members of the Board shall be their actual expenses while engaged upon their duties as members of said Board not to exceed $5 per day and their actual expenses of travel by the shortest mail routes," is hereby repealed.

(b) The act of May 17, 1928, entitled "An act to provide for the membership of the Board of Visitors to the United States Military Academy, and for other purposes" (45 Stat. 597), is hereby repealed.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Case of South Dakota: Strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill S. 239 and insert the provisions of the bill H. R. 3657, as passed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

A similar House bill, H. R. 3657, was laid on the table.

NATIONAL GUARD OF THE UNITED STATES

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 6494) to provide that personnel of the National Guard of the United States and the Organized Reserve Corps shall have a common Federal appointment or enlistment as Reserves of the Army of the United States, to equalize disability benefits applicable to such personnel, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. SCRIVNER. Mr. Speaker, I have discussed this bill with officials of the National Guard Bureau and the National Guard Association. While there are some benefits contained in the bill that might be advantageous to the National Guard, there are other provisions which are detrimental and therefore I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kan-

GULF STATES MARINE FISHERIES COMMISSION

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 4365) granting the consent and approval of Congress to an interstate compact relating to the better utilization of the fisheries (marine, shell, and anadromous) of the Gulf coast and creating the Gulf States Marine Fisheries Commission.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. O'HARA. Mr. Speaker, I object.
JUDGES IN TERRITORY OF HAWAII

The Clerk called the bill (S. 1052) to fix the salaries of certain justices and judges of the Territory of Hawaii. The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

Mr. FARRINGTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOBBS. I am delighted to yield to the gentleman.

Mr. FARRINGTON. I asked the gentleman to yield as I am without the privilege of raising any objection or reserving the right to object, and have only the right to speak the point of view of the people of Hawaii when a measure of this character is presented. very small bill, and involves the salaries of only 12 judges in the Territory of Hawaii. If the will of the House had prevailed, and the Territory of Hawaii had been made a State, this obligation would have been assumed by the people of the Territory very willingly. The bar association of our Territory is unanimously in favor of making these increases in pay and feels that the failure to do so is a great injustice to our judges and will work an injury to our In the event that we are judiciary. made a State we will pay these salaries. We have always been generous in the matter of salaries for our public officials. Insofar as this is so completely a problem involving the people of the Territory, and insofar as we are quite willing when the opportunity is given us to pay these salaries, I appeal to you in a sense of fair play, Judge Hobbs, to withdraw your objection. Otherwise the bill will be lost.

S. 1052 would increase the salary of the chief justice of the Supreme Court of the Territory of Hawaii from $10,500 a year to $15,500 a year, and the salaries of the two associate justices from $10,000 a year to $15,000 a year.

It would also increase the salaries of the six judges of the First Judicial Circuit of the Territory of Hawaii from $7,500 a year to $12,500 a year, and of the three judges of the Second, Third, and Fifth Judicial Districts of the Territory of Hawaii from $7,000 to $12,500 a year.

The Bar Association of Hawaii, which embraces all of the practicing attorneys of the Territory, is unanimously and aggressively in favor of this legislation. It not only filed a brief in support of the legislation but arranged for witnesses who had come all the way from Hawaii to appear before the House to urge its enactment.

The inadequacy of the salaries of the present supreme and circuit courts of Hawaii was so marked in the opinion of the members of the Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii that in the session of 1945 additional compensation in the amount of $3,000 a year was voted to the members of the supreme court and the circuit judges. This money was appropriated from the revenues of the Territory under condition that as soon as the Federal Government raised these salaries that it would be discontinued.

The Legislature of Hawaii acted in the belief that this action should be taken to meet an emergency and that Territorial funds should not be provided for the compensation of these judges as a normal practice. The Territory believes that so long as appointment of these judges is the responsibility of the Federal Government it should not be expected to pay their compensation.

Although the United States District Court for the District of Columbia, the judges in Puerto Rico, Hawaii, the Virgin Islands, and Alaska were included in Public Law 567, the judges of the Supreme Court of Hawaii and the judges of the circuit courts of Hawaii were omitted.

The omission of the judges of the supreme and circuit courts of Hawaii was either through inadvertence or because there was a separate piece of legislation pending which did not become incorporated into Public Law 567 relating to compensation of judges of the United States appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate. The enactment of S. 1052 will remedy the injustice done to the judges of the Supreme Court of Hawaii and the circuit courts of Hawaii and permit Hawaii to preserve and foster a strong and competent judiciary.

When the Congress omitted the judges of the supreme court and circuit courts of Hawaii from the provisions of Public Law 567, it departed from a traditional relationship and ratio that had been established and maintained ever since annexation of Hawaii in 1898. It has been the settled policy of the Congress to fix the compensation of the district judges of Hawaii and the justices of the Supreme Court of Hawaii at nearly an equal level. Thus in 1900, judges of both courts received annual compensation of $5,000. In 1926, the compensation of United States district judges including judges of the district court for Hawaii were increased to $10,000 per annum; 2 years later the salaries of the justices of the Supreme Court of Hawaii were similarly advanced, the chief justice receiving $10,500 per annum and the associate justices $10,000.

The duties and responsibilities of the justices of the Supreme Court of Hawaii are certainly no less than those of the judges of the district courts of the United States District Court for Hawaii. In fact the decisions of the Supreme Court of Hawaii on local questions are binding upon the Federal courts.

The Bar Association of Hawaii, in a brief filed with the House Judiciary Subcommittee, makes this statement:

Hawaii, as was remarked by Senator Collum in the debates on the organic act "is an old country and an old government." It is proud of its judicial system and its judges have been historically highly respected and fairly well paid. As far back as 1870 the compensation for the chief justice was fixed at $10,000 per annum. Prior to the adoption of the organic act, the salary of the chief justice was fixed at $12,000 per annum and each of the two associates at $10,000 per annum and after the establishment of the Republic of Hawaii the compensation of the chief justice and the associate justices was fixed at $12,000 and $10,000 per annum respectively and that of the circuit judges of the first circuit was fixed at $8,000.

It will be noted that with the adoption of the Hawaiian Organic Act, the salaries of the judges of the supreme court and circuit courts were more than cut in half. This no doubt was to bring the judges in Hawaii to a parity with district judges in the several States who in 1900 received $5,000 per annum. The compensation of the chief justice was fixed at $5,500 per annum and the associate justices at $5,000 per annum.

In view of the foregoing history it is little wonder that the Bar of Hawaii is exercised over the matter of the compensation of our Territorial judges.

The question of the salaries of these judges was not passed on by the judicial conference of the senior circuit judges as these courts do not come within the field of the responsibilities of the conference. The Administrative Office of the United States Courts is responsible for these judges only to the extent of placing in the State, Justice, Commerce, and Judiciary appropriation bill the item necesto cover the salaries of the judges. The total item for this purpose for the fiscal year 1948 was $96,500 and the fiscal year 1949 is $106,500.

Henry P. Chandler, in a letter to the chairman of the House Judiciary Committee on this subject, makes this state-

The increase in the salaries of United States district judges has definitely strength-ened the desire in Hawaii for a corresponding increase in the salaries of the justices of the supreme court of that Territory. The increase provided for in the salaries of the justices of the supreme court would, in turn, call for an increase in the salaries of the circuit judges, if the two are to be kept in correspondence. In recognition mainly of the higher cost of living in the Territories, there is very generally in effect a differential of 25 percent in the salaries of Government em-ployes in those areas. This difference is urged with considerable justice in support of higher salaries of the judges in Hawaii whose salaries are fixed by law. I am in-formed that according to the Consumers Price Index, prepared and reported from time to time by the Bureau of Labor Statistics of the United States Department of Labor, the cost of living in Honolulu in March 1945, which is the latest date for which the comparison was available, on the basis of 100 percent for Los Angeles, was 125 percent, or 25 percent higher. It would seem, however, that in any consideration of the salaries of the Territorial judges of Hawaii their total compensation from both the United States and from the Territory should be taken into account.

A letter was addressed to the House Judiciary Committee on June 27, 1947, by Douglas W. McGregor, the Assistant to the Attorney General. This related to H. R. 854. The latter is identical with S. 1052 except that the salary provided for judges of the circuit courts is $12.500 instead of $10,000 as provided in the House bill.

In his letter Mr. McGregor said:

Question has been raised as to whether the entire cost of operating these courts should not, in fact, be borne by the Territorial government in view of the local nature of the business handled by them, and an analogy is drawn to the situation in the District of Columbia where a certain percentage of the expenses of the courts is reimbursed to the United States from District of Columbia funds.

Your attention is invited to one other phase of this entire question. Sentiment has recently increased in favor of granting statehood to the Territory of Hawaii, and a measure of such import (H. R. 49) has re-ceived favorable consideration by the House Committee on Public Lands. Should statehood be granted to the Territory of Hawaii the questions involved in the bill here under consideration would be largely resolved. In such event it is presumed the expenses of operation of courts of purely local character would be borne by the local government and not by the Federal Government.

Whether this bill should be enacted involves a question of legislative policy con-cerning which this Department prefers not to make any suggestion.

The Director of the Bureau of the Budget has advised that there is no objection to the submission of this report.

The answer to the proposal that these salaries be met by the Territory has already been presented.

The situation with reference to legislation providing statehood for Hawaii has now changed. The bill passed by the House providing statehood for Hawaii was referred to the Senate Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs. The committee on May 8 voted to defer action on the measure. The committee's action means the present session of Congress probably will adjourn without taking any action on this legislation.

Failure of this Congress to enact the legislation increasing the salaries of the judges of the Territory would be a great injustice and injurious to the general welfare of the judiciary.

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FARRINGTON. I yield.

Mr. WALTER. Is it not the purpose of this bill to bring the salaries of the judges affected up to that of other judges doing comparable work in the administration of United States law?

Mr. FARRINGTON. Yes; it is. The standard of compensation is that given the United States district court judges. When their salaries were increased to $15,000, our feeling was that our supreme court judges should go to the same figure. They get $10,000 at the present time.

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Speaker, may I say to the gentleman and to the House that nothing is further from my thought than to be unfair, and I am perfectly sure that one of the last places on earth where I would be unfair, were I to be so in any event, would be the lovely islands of Hawaii, particularly when represented by the distinguished gentleman who is the representative of those Islands at this time. I simply wish the House to be informed, however, that these are not Federal judges. These are Territorial judges. They were put upon the Federal pay roll because of the financial condition of the islands at the time of annexation. The problem that affects my attitude in this matter more than anything else is that there is grave doubt as to the situation that confronts the House in considering this bill.

First, if it be true that immediately upon granting of statehood to Hawaii this would cease, and Hawaii would assume the full burden of paying the salaries of said judges, then that is one thing which I submit would militate against approval of this bill when Hawaiian statehood may become a fact tonight, since the President of the United States has recommended it, the House has passed the statehood bill by an overwhelming majority, and all that is necessary is for the Senate's consent. But suppose that does not happen. Then, I submit that if you will read this bill carefully, as I have, you will see that nothing like that is stated in the bill, and for all time to come, insofar as the bill provides, the Federal Government will be saddled with the payment of the salaries of the 12 judges of the named courts in Hawaii, as well as our own judges exercising Federal jurisdiction that were taken care of in my act of 1946. Both of the Federal judges in Hawaii are already drawing that increased pay. So these other 12 judges at some $15,000 each ought not to be put upon the Federal pay roll permanently whether or not statehood ensues. If this bill does go through it will mean a big question mark, and it will be the first time in the history of the United States that any such risk has been run. We have gloried in the record of the distinguished gentleman representing these islands. I have no animus in the matter. but I do feel it my duty under the circumstances to ask that the bill be passed over without prejudice until the matter of statehood, at least, has been decided.

Please let me read the bill in question: 8 1052

An act to fix the salaries of certain justices and judges of the Territory of Hawaii

To each of the judges of the circuit courts of the Territory of Hawaii, $12,500.

JUNE 10, 1948.

Hon. Joseph R. FARRINGTON. House Office Building,

Washington, D.C. DEAR FRIEND: In compliance with my promise, I went into the questions which trouble me arising out of the Senate bill 1052, increasing the salaries of certain Ha-waiian judges, and I have restudied them in the light of the memorandum you submitted to me yesterday morning. Also in compli-ance with that promise I telephoned your ance with that promise I telephoned your office yesterday afternoon after I had been unable to find you on the floor or in the Capitol. I was told by your secretary, who was most gracious, that you were engaged in an important conference and could not be reached, so I left a message for you with her that still I was unable to change my attitude toward this legislation, as much as I regretted not being able to "go along."

May I clear up some points as to which there seems to be misapprehension as evi-denced by the memoranda which have been submitted in support of the bill?

1. Public Law 567 did not omit the judges of the supreme and circuit courts of Hawaii inadvertently. The courts these judges serve are Territorial, not Federal. Herewith enclosed I beg to hand you a copy of Public Law 567, of the Seventy-ninth Congress, approved July 31, 1946. You will notice that it covers and increases the salaries of the judges of the several district courts of the United States, of Hawaii, and fixes their increased compensation at the rate of $15,000 per year, just as was fixed thereby for all other district courts exercising Federal jurisdiction.

2. Public Law 567, of the Seventy-ninth Congress, was designed to cover only judges exercising Federal jurisdiction, or, as we commonly refer to them, "title III judges." It was not intended to cover Territorial judges any more than it was intended to cover judges of State courts. Until the passage of the Reorganization Act the Judiciary Committees had no jurisdiction to propo legislation for Territorial courts nor their judges. This jurisdiction was in and exercised by the Committee on Territories. only other bill similar to S. 1052 that has ever been handled by the Judiciary Committee of the House was the bill aimed at including the Territorial judges of Hawaii in the retirement system applying to Federal courts. This bill was adversed by our committee on the same theory which now applies to S. 1052.

3. The only exceptions to the rule I am following in this case are those caused by Senate amendments and not by any action of the House Committee on the Judiciary.

4. The Department of Justice did not and has not approved nor recommended the passage of S. 1052 nor its House counterpart.

5. Neither the Judicial Conference of Senior Circuit Judges nor the Administrative Office of the United States Courts had any jurisdiction with reference to the sub-ject matter of S. 1052, since that bill relates exclusively to judges of Territorial courts; hence neither of these organizations nor the Bureau of the Budget has approved nor recommended this proposed legislation.

6. It is easy to understand and appreciate the attitude of the bench and bar of Hawaii toward the remedial legislation proposed by S. 1052. It should be borne in mind, however, that if Hawaii becomes a State, it would have to bear every cent of the cost of its State courts, including the judges, and these courts that are now Territorial would be by statehood converted into State courts. The President of the United States has recommended statehood for Hawaii, and the House passed the bill making Hawaii the fortyninth State of our Union by an overwhelm-ing majority. Should the Senate join in the enactment of the House bill, there would be no necessity whatever for the enactment of S. 1052, increasing the salaries provided for Territorial judges, who would then have become extinct

Mr. KEAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

Mr. WOLVERTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this legislation came to the House from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. I am hopeful that I may have the attention of the objectors if their mind is open. Unfortunately it would seem from the remarks that have been made, not for the record, but for my hearing at least, that the mind of at least one objector is not open.

It is difficult for me to conceive how any individual who has given even the slightest consideration to this bill would make any objection to it. This House during this session of Congress has made a splendid record in its effort to do those things that would be helpful in promoting the public health of this Nation. We have passed a bill that would set up a heart research institution, and a dental institute. We have already done so with respect to cancer. In numerous ways we have strengthened and built up the Public Health Service. We now have before us a bill that touches our very hearts. It deals with that type of dread disease that has come into many homes. It is a disease that may strike overnight. see the victims of polio handicapped as they are so frequently touches the heart of every human being. To see a child who has been afflicted with polio creates in us a desire to help. It creates a feeling of thankfulness that our own little ones have not felt its devastation, and a prayer for those who have.

This bill permits the Surgeon General to study the question with the thought in mind that after such study and survey there might be with his approval set up an institute for research in this disease that strikes our little ones, and even older persons so frequently, and so often creates epidemics. I do hope that no one will object to the consideration of I do hope that no Think of those in whose interest we seek to provide this helpful service. Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Speaker, further reserving the right to object, this is a Senate bill and comes under a Senate report which accompanies the bill in House Report No. 2207. It is a bill introduced by the Senator from Nevada, Mr. McCarran. I trust the gentleman will not object.

Mr. TRIMBLE. Mr. Speaker, we have no report on this side.

Mr. HINSHAW. Would the gentleman like to hear what the bill does?

Mr. TRIMBLE. Yes. Mr. HINSHAW. It authorizes a program for air-traffic-control-tower operators, both civilian and governmental. In connection with the training program, it authorizes the Civil Aeronautics Administrator to conduct studies and researches as to the most desirable qualifications for air-traffic-control-tower operators. This bill provides that the Civil Aeronautics Administrator shall propose a budget in connection with it in the next budget presentation. It makes no appropriation at the present time. We find it very difficult indeed to secure competent control-tower operators and you know how important that is to air traffic in your own home cities.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 302 of the Civil Aeronautics Act of 1938, as amended, is amended by adding a new subsection (d) to read as follows:

"(d) (1) The Administrator is authorized, within the limits of available appropriations made by the Congress, to train civilian and governmental air-traffic-control-tower operators or to conduct programs for such training, including studies and researches as to the most desirable qualifications for air-trafficcontrol-tower operators. Such training or programs shall be conducted pursuant to such regulations as the Administrator may from time to time prescribe, including such fees as the Administrator may deem necessary or desirable. Such training or programs may be carried out by the Administrator either through the use of his own facilities and personnel or by contracts with educational institutions, or other persons.

"(2) The Administrator is authorized to lease or accept loans of such real property. and to purchase, lease, exchange, or accept loans of such personal property and facilities, and to repair, maintain, and operate such property and such facilities, as may be necessary or desirable for carrying out the provisions of this section.

"(3) For the purpose of carrying out his functions under this section, the Administrator is authorized to exercise all powers conferred upon him by any other provisions of this act and to appoint and fix the compensation for instructors, airmen, medical and other professional examiners, and experts in training or research without regard to the provisions of the civil-service laws or the Classification Act of 1923, as amended. The provisions of section 3709 of the Revised Statutes shall not apply to contracts with educational institutions and other persons for the use of aircraft, control towers, or other facilities or for the performance of services authorized by this section.

"(4) Any executive department or inde-pendent establishment is hereby authorized to cooperate with the Administrator in carrying out the purposes of this section, and for such purposes may lend or transfer to the Administrator, by contract or otherwise, or if so requested by the Administrator, lend to educational institutions or other persons cooperating with the Administrator in the conduct of any such training or program, officials, experts, or employees, aircraft, control towers and other property or equipment, and lands or buildings under its control. For the purposes of this section, the Administrator shall have the power to accept and utilize voluntary and uncompensated serv-ices, equipment, facilities, and information of any State, Territory, or political subdivision, or any agency thereof.

"(5) Any executive department or inde-pendent establishment is hereby authorized to detail personnel of such executive department or independent establishment to be trained as provided herein at Govern-ment expense: Provided, That no such per-sonnel shall lose their individual status or seniority rating in the executive department or independent establishment merely by reason of absence due to such training.

"(6) There are hereby authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this section."

SALARIES OF CERTAIN OFFICERS AND EMPLOYEES OF THE UNITED STATES IN PUERTO RICO

The Clerk called the bill (S. 2508) relating to salaries of certain officers and employees of the United States and certain officers and employees of Puerto

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. TRIMBLE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, we have no reports on any of the bills following on the Consent Calendar. Therefore, I will have to ask for a short explanation on each of these bills. I would like to have an explanation.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, this bill provides for the pay of certain employees who are on the pay roll in Puerto Rico representing the Federal Government and also for the annual salaries of the chief justice and associate justices of Puerto Rico, whose salaries remain at $6,000 under the organic act passed by the Congress many, many years ago. This is a bill to somewhat alleviate the economic pressure under which these public officials find themselves in that their salaries cannot be increased by reason of the fixation of the organic act.

The committee has unanimously approved the bill and feels that these increases are justified.

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I ask if those are Territorial judges or Federal judges?

Mr. CRAWFORD. These are the salaries of the chief justice and associate justices of Puerto Rico whose salaries were fixed by organic act.

Mr. HOBBS. They are Territorial

Mr. CRAWFORD. Yes. Mr. HOBBS. Not Territorial judges. Mr. CRAWFORD. Insular possessions. Mr. HOBBS. Well, whatever they are. The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows: Be it enacted, etc., That paragraph (1) of section 49b of the Organic Act of Puerto Rico

(U. S. C., title 48, sec. 793b (1)) is amended by striking out "$7,500" and inserting in lieu thereof "$10,000 to be paid out of funds ap-propriated by Congress for such purpose."

SEC. 2. Section 50 of the Organic Act of Puerto Rico (U. S. C., title 48, secs. 797 and 798) is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 50. Except as otherwise provided in this or any other act, the salaries and office expenses of all officials of Puerto Rico, including deputies, assistants, and other help, shall be such and be so paid out of the reve nues of Puerto Rico as shall from time to time be determined by the legislature of Puerto Rico and approved by the Governor; and if the legislature shall fail to make an appropriation for such salaries, the salaries theretofore fixed shall be paid without the necessity of further appropriations therefor. Until otherwise prescribed as provided by this section the annual salary of the Governor shall be $10,000; in addition to which he shall be entitled to the occupancy of the buildings heretofore used by the chief executive of Puerto Rico, with the furniture and effects therein, free of rental; and the annual salary of the head of each executive department shall be $6,000.

"Notwithstanding the foregoing, the annual salary of the chief justice of the supreme court shall be $10,500, and the annual salary of each associate justice of the supreme court shall be $10,000. All of said salaries of the chief justice and associate justices shall be paid in equal monthly installments.

C., title 48, c. 838) as reads "Except as otherwise provided in this act, no law shall extend the term of any public officer, or increase or diminish his salary or emoluments after his election or appointment, nor permit any officer or employee to draw compensation for more than one office or position." is amended to read as follows:

"Except as otherwise provided in this act, no law shall extend the term of any public officer, permit any officer or employee to draw compensation for more than one office or position, or increase or diminish the salary or emoluments of any senator or representative during the term for which he is elected or appointed."

SEC. 6. Section 22 of the Organic Act of Puerto Rico (U. S. C., title 48, sec. 779) is amended by inserting after "$5,000" the following: "or such other sum as may be prescribed pursuant to section 50 of this act."

SEC. 7. The third and fourth sentences of section 38 of the Organic Act of Puerto Rico (U. S. during any 1 year."
SEC. 8. This act shall take effect 30 days after the date of its enactment.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

AMENDING THE ORGANIC ACT OF PUERTO RICO

The Clerk called the bill (S. 2675) to amend the Organic Act of Puerto Rico. The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. CARROLL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman explain briefly what this bill does?

Mr. CRAWFORD. The purpose of this bill is to exempt Puerto Ricans, who were collectively naturalized as citizens of the United States, from the expatriation provisions of section 404 (c) of the Nationality Act of 1940.

Now, we have this situation with respect to Puerto Rico. When we took over Puerto Rico some 50 years ago they went ahead under the jurisdiction of the United States until the organic act was passed, at which time Puerto Ricans were made citizens of the United States and naturalized. Then in 1940 there was an act passed which provided that if Puerto Ricans who had, prior to that time become naturalized citizens of the United States under the act of Congress should leave Puerto Rico, for instance to go to Brazil, and remove themselves from Puerto Rico for a period of 5 years, let us say, that they would lose their citizenship. That was the 1940 act. This bill seeks to remedy that situation; that Puerto Ricans, who are citizens of the United States, may leave Puerto Rico for a period of 5 years, and still retain their citizenship as citizens of the United States, and the committee has felt that they should thus be protected.

Mr. CARROLL. Was this bill unanimously reported?

Mr. CRAWFORD. As I understand, the bill was reported unanimously by the Subcommittee on Insular Affairs.

Mr. CARROLL. I withdraw my reservation of objection, Mr. Speaker.
The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Organic Act of Puerto Rico (39 Stat. 951) is amended by inserting the following new section:

"SEC. 5b. Section 404 (c) of the Nationality Act of 1940 (U. S. C., title 8, sec. 804 (c)), shall not be applicable to persons who acquired citizenship under the provisions of sections 5 and 5a of this act." This amendment to be retroactive to October 13, 1945.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

CONSERVATION OF FRESH WATER AT END OF SAN FRANCISCO BAY

The Clerk called the resolution (H. Res. 618) requesting the Secretary of the Interior to investigate and report on the feasibility from the standpoint of national defense and other beneficial purposes of the conservation of fresh water at the northerly end of San Francisco Bay.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. TRIMBLE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, after hearing the explanation on H. R. 750, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Whereas the proper conservation and use of the waters arising in the Sacramento and San Joaquin Basins of California constitute an invaluable resource to the State of California and the Nation; and

Whereas the development of the major portion of the central part of the State of California depends upon the wise utilization and conservation of those waters; and Whereas there are needs for further freshwater supplies in the Delta area of the Sacramento River down to San Francisco Bay; and Whereas the Bureau of Reclamation of the Department of the Interior has made a portion of the investigation necessary to ascertain the best means to provide fresh-water supplies for reclamation, domestic, and municipal purposes in this area; and

Whereas any means to conserve and utilize fresh water in the Delta and upper bay areas would have to be coordinated with the opera-tion of Shasta Dam, Keswick Dam, Friant the Contra Costa Canal, and other facilities of the Central Valley project, and pertinent features of future development in the Central Valley, such as the Monticello Reservoir of the Solano project, such features being constructed and operated, or planned, by the Bureau of Reclamation; and Whereas the San Francisco Bay area and the territory adjacent thereto are of high strategic importance to any adequate defense of the Pacific Coast: and

Whereas the conservation and use of such fresh waters is important to the maintenance of defense facilities in this area, such as Mare Island Navy Yard, Hunters Point Navy Yard, Risdon Naval Plant, Oakland Naval Air Base, Oakland Supply Base, Stockton Annex Navy Supply Depot, Benicia Arsenal, the Presidio Military Reservation, Fort Winfield Scott, Fort Mason, the Army transport docks, Fort Barry, Fort Baker, United States Army Signal Department, Stockton General Depot, United States Army Moffett Air Field, United States Bombardment Base Mather Field Air Force, Fairfield-Suisun Air Base United States Air Force, Sacramento-McClellan United States Air Field, Merced Air Field United States Air Force; and

Whereas because of the huge shift of pop ulation to California unparalleled in the history of this Nation, even with normal precipitation it will be impossible to meet demands of the civilian population, let alone the military and defense and power facilities required for their support unless the limited water supplies are utilized to the fullest possible degree; and

Whereas it is estimated that some 37,700,-000 acre-feet of fresh water from the Sacramento and San Joaquin Rivers are now wasting into the Bay of San Francisco annually;

Whereas it is imperative that necessary steps be taken at the earliest practicable moment to conserve fresh water for semiarid California in the interest of the economy and the development of the area and of the national defense: Therefore be it

Resolved, That Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to investigate and report upon the feasibility and the justification of means to conserve, maintain, and utilize the fresh waters of the Sacramento and San Joaquin Rivers and other possible water supplies at the northerly end of San Francisco Bay and in the Delta area, and in this connection to consider the water requirements and facilities required to provide water supplies to lands which are now irrigated or may be reclaimed, and for do-mestic, municipal, and defense purposes in the affected area, and any other features deemed pertinent, desirable, and justifiable, all to be contained in a report with appropriate recommendations to be forwarded to the Congress by the Secretary of the Interior as soon as practicable.

SEC. 2. There are hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, such sums as may be required for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this resolution.

With the following committee amendments:

PURCHASE OF PUBLIC LANDS FOR HOME AND OTHER SITES

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 5555) to amend the act entitled "An act to provide for the purchase of public lands for home and other sites," approved June 1, 1938 (52 Stat. 609), as amended.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. TRIMBLE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, the same situation obtains here as with respect to H. R. 750. Therefore, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act entitled "An act to provide for the purchase of pub-lic lands for home and other sites," approved June 1, 1938 (52 Stat. 609), as amended by the act approved July 14, 1945 (59 Stat. 467; 43 U.S. C. sec. 682 (a)), is amended to read as follows:

"That the Secretary of the Interior, in his discretion, is authorized to sell or lease to any person or organization described in section 3 of this act a tract of not exceeding five acres of any vacant, unreserved public lands, public lands withdrawn by Executive lands, public lands withdrawn by Executive Orders Nos. 6910 of November 26, 1934, and 6964 of February 5, 1935, for classification, or public lands withdrawn or reserved by the Secretary of the Interior for any purposes, which the Secretary may classify as chiefly valuable for residence, recreation, business, or community site purposes, in reasonably compact form and under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, at a price to be determined by him, for such Provided, That no land may be sold hereunder unless it has been surveyed. person or organization shall be permitted to purchase or lease more than one tract under the provisions of this act, except upon a showing of good faith and reasons satisfactory to the Secretary.

"SEC. 2. No tract shall be sold for less than the cost of making any survey necessary to describe properly the land sold. Patents for all tracts purchased under the provisions of this act shall contain a reservation to the United States of the oil, gas, and all other mineral deposits, together with the right to prospect for, mine, and remove the same under such regulations as the Secretary may prescribe.

"SEC. 3. A lease may be issued or a sale made under this act to any of the follow-(a) An individual who is a citizen of the United States, or who has filed his dec-laration of intention to become a citizen as required by the naturalization laws; (b) a partnership or an association, each of the members of which is a citizen of the United States or has filed a declaration of intention to become a citizen; (c) a corporation or-ganized under the laws of the United States, or of any State or Territory thereof, and authorized to do business in the State or Territory in which the land is located; (d) a State, Territory, municipality, or other governmental subdivision.

"Sec. 4. Any employee of the Department of the Interior, stationed in Alaska, notwithstanding such employment, may, in the discretion of the Secretary, purchase or lease under this act one tract for residence purposes in the Territory of Alaska."

With the following committee amendment:

Page 2, line 7, after the word "purposes", insert "if he finds that such sale or lease of the lands would not unreasonably interfere with the use of water for grazing purposes nor unduly impair the protection of watershed areas."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

UNITED STATES TRAVEL SERVICE

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 6136) to amend the act to encourage travel in the United States, approved July 19, 1940.

There being no objection the Clerk

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 1 of the act of July 19, 1940 (54 Stat. 773), entitled "An act to encourage travel in the United States, and for other purposes," is hereby amended to read as follows:

"The Secretary of the Interior is authorized and directed to encourage, promote, and develop travel within the United States, its Territories and possessions, providing such activities do not compete with the activities of private agencies. For the purpose of per-forming the functions prescribed by this act, there is hereby established in the Department of the Interior a bureau, to be designated the 'United States Travel Bureau,' which shall be under the direction and supervision of the Secretary of the Interior. The chief administrative officer of the United States Travel Bureau shall be a Director, suitably qualified by education and experience relating to travel promotion and development, who shall be appointed by the Secretary of the Interior. There shall also be in the United States Travel Bureau such additional employees, to be appointed by the Secretary of the Interior, as shall be required to execute properly the functions prescribed by this act. The Secretary is authorized and directed to take such action, through the United States Travel Bureau, as he may deem appropriate to carry out the intent and the provisions of this act efficiently and in the public interest. In the administration of this act, the Secretary may also utilize the facilities or services of any other agency of the Department of the

Mr. HESELTON. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HESELTON: Page 1, line 10, after "of", insert "public or."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

NATIONAL ADVISORY COMMITTEE FOR AERONAUTICS

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 6695) to amend the act of August 1, 1947, to authorize the creation of 10 professional and scientific positions in the headquarters and research stations of the National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. HUGH D. SCOTT, JR. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, may we have an explanation of the purpose of this bill?

Mr. REES. Mr. Speaker, a year ago this Congress lifted the ceiling on salaries of employees who are trained scientists so the War and Navy Departments may employ as many as 45 men who are trained in science, and can pay as high as $15,000 per year if they desire to do They have filled only six of these positions. That legislation applied only to the War and Navy Departments. This bill assigns 10 of those positions to the National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics, so that they can employ men at salaries of more than $10,000 a year if they see fit to do so. This is a very important piece of legislation for the reason that the National Advisory Committee is presently engaged in some very highly technical research and needs scientists.

Mr. HUGH D. SCOTT, JR. As I understand, this bill provides for employing up to 10 of these professional men at salaries in excess of $10,000, but what salaries will they get?

Mr. REES. I am glad to explain. It should be explained. Those who testified on behalf of the agencies told us they will pay salaries of about $12,000, but they may have to pay one or two of the men as high as $15,000. These trained men whom they need can go into industry, as the gentleman well knows, and earn higher salaries than $15,000. They say that a number of these men are leaving the Government. The most valuable men are leaving the Government and going into private industry.

Mr. HUGH D. SCOTT, JR. May I ask the gentleman from Kansas whether full hearings were held on the bill?

Mr. REES. Full hearings were held. Dr. Alfred M. Richardson, who is president of the National Academy of Science, and who is familiar with the problem, called our attention to the fact that we are spending millions of dollars in research presently in connection with our defense program. Compared to that sum, the small amount involved in this bill is infinitesimal.

Mr. HUGH D. SCOTT, JR. Was the committee unanimous in its report?

Mr. REES. The committee was unanimous. The chairman of the committee, as the gentleman knows, happens to be one of those who have always tried to hold the ceilings down just as much as could be done within reason, but he is convinced, and every member of the committee was convinced, that this proposed legislation is necessary at the present time and ought to be passed. I do appreciate the gentleman's interest in this matter. It appears to be a case of necessity.

Mr. HUGH D. SCOTT, JR. I am sure the gentleman and I are equally interested in economy. I thank him for his explanation. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the first section of the act entitled "An act to authorize the creation of additional positions in the professional and scientific service in the War and Navy Departments", approved August 1, 1947, is hereby amended to read as follows: "That (a) the Secretary of the Army is authorized to establish and fix the compensation for, within the Department of the Army, not more than 30 positions, and the Secretary of the Navy is authorized to establish and fix the compensation for, within the Department of the Navy, not more than 15 positions, in the professional and scientific service, each such position being established to effectuate those research and development functions, relating to the national defense, military and naval medicine, and any and all other activities of the Department of the Army or the Department of the Navy which require the services of specially qualified scientific or professional personnel.

"(b) The Chairman of the National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics is authorized to establish and fix the compensation for, in the headquarters and research stations of the National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics, not to exceed 10 positions in the professional and scientific service, each such position being established in order to enable the National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics to secure and retain the services of specially qualified personnel necessary in the discharge of the duty of the committee to supervise and direct the scientific study of the problems of flight with a view to their practical solution.

"(c) The rates of compensation for positions established pursuant to the provisions of this act shall not be less than $10,000 per annum nor more than $15,000 per annum and shall be subject to the approval of the Civil Service Commission."

SEC. 2. Section 3 of such act of August 1, 1947, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 3. The Secretary of the Army, the Secretary of the Navy, and the Chairman of the National Advisory Committee for Aero-nautics, respectively, shall submit to the Congress, not later than December 31 of each year, a report setting forth the number of positions established pursuant to this act in the Department of the Army, in the Department of the Navy, and in the headquarters and research stations of the National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics, respectively, during that calendar year, and the name, rate of compensation, and description of the qualifications of each incumbent, together with a statement of the functions performed by each. In any instance where the Secretary of the Army, the Secretary of the Navy, or the Chairman of the National Advisor Committee for Aeronautics may consider full public report on these items detrimental to the national security, he is authorized to omit such items from his annual report and, in lieu thereof, to present such information in executive sessions of such committees of the Senate and House of Representatives as the presiding officers of those bodies shall designate."

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

NATIONAL SCIENCE FOUNDATION BILL OF 1948

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 6007) to promote the progress of science; to advance the national health, prosperity, and welfare; to secure the national defense; and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. ROCKWELL. Mr. Speaker, this seems to be a very important bill. We passed it in the House once but the President vetoed it. I think it is too important to be brought up by unanimous consent. I therefore object.

FOREST SERVICE

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 2028) to facilitate and simplify the work of the Forest Service, and for other pur-

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. ROCKWELL. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I had intended to object to the consideration of this bill because of the committee amendment inserting section 12. understanding is that this committee amendment will be withdrawn. May I ask the author of the bill, the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. Goff] if that is correct?

Mr. GOFF. I am authorized to state for the chairman of the committee that if consent is given to the consideration of the bill we will withdraw the committee amendment to which the gentleman refers, that is, the one inserting section 12.

Mr. ROCKWELL. With that understanding, Mr. Speaker, I will not object.
The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That notwithstanding the provisions of existing law and without regard to section 355, Revised Statutes, as amended (40 U. S. C. 255), but within the limitations of cost otherwise applicable, ap-propriations of the Forest Service may be expended for the erection of buildings, lookout towers, and other structures on land owned by States, counties, municipalities, or other political subdivisions, corporations, or individuals: Provided, That prior to such erection there is obtained the right to use the land for the estimated life of or need for the structure.

SEC. 2. That so much of the act of June 30, 1914 (38 Stat. 415, 429, 16 U. S. C. 504), as provides: "That hereafter the Secretary of Agriculture may procure such seed, cones, and nursery stock by open purchase, without advertisements for proposals, whenever in his discretion such method is most economical and in the public interest and when the cost thereof will not exceed $500:", is hereby amended to read as follows: "That the provisions of section 3709, Revised Statutes (41 U. S. C. 5), shall not apply to any purchase by the Forest Service of forest-tree seed or cones or of forage plant seed when the amount involved does not exceed $10,000, nor to any purchase of forest-tree nursery stock when the amount involved does not exceed $500, whenever, in the discretion of the Secretary of Agriculture, such method is in the public interest."

SEC. 3. The provisions of section 3709, Revised Statutes (41 U.S. C. 5), shall not apply to purchases by the Forest Service of (1) materials to be tested or upon which experiments are to be made or (2) special devices, test models, or parts thereof, to be used (a) for experimentation to determine their suitability for or adaptability to accomplishment of the work for which designed or (b) in the designing or developing of new equip-ment: Provided, That not to exceed $50,000 may be expended in any one fiscal year pursuant to this authority.

SEC. 4. That section 205 of the Department of Agriculture Organic Act of 1944, approved September 21, 1944 (Public Law 425, 78th Cong.), is hereby amended to read as follows: "Sec. 205. The Forest Service by contract or otherwise may provide for procurement and operation of aerial facilities and services for the protection and management of the national forests, with authority to renew any contract for such purpose annually, not more than twice, without additional advertising.'

SEC. 5. That section 1 of the act of March 3, 1925 (43 Stat. 1132; 16 U. S. C. 572), is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 1. (a) The Forest Service is authorized to cooperate with, or where the public interest justifies, assist public and private agencies, organizations, institutions, and persons in performing work on land in State, county, municipal, or private ownership, sit-uated within or near a national forest, for which the administering agency, owner, or other interested party deposits in one or more payments a sufficient sum to cover the total estimated cost or the depositor's share thereof, for administration, protection, improvement, reforestation, and such other kinds of work as the Forest Service is authorized to do on lands of the United States: Provided, That the United States shall not be liable to the depositor or landowner for any damage incident to the performance of such work.

"(b) Cooperation and assistance on the same basis as that authorized in subsection (a) is authorized also in the performance of any such kinds of work in connection with the occupancy or use of the national forests or other lands administered by the Forest Service.

"(c) Moneys deposited under this section shall be covered into the Treasury and shall constitute a special fund, which is hereby made available until expended for payment of the cost of work performed by the Forest Service and for refunds to depositors of amounts deposited by them in excess of their share of said cost: Provided, That when deposits are received for a number of similar types of work on adjacent or overlapping areas, or on areas which in the aggregate are determined to cover a single work unit, they may be expended on such combined areas for the purposes for which deposited, in which event refunds to the depositors of the total amount of the excess deposits involved will be made on a proportionate basis: Provided further, That when so provided by written agreement payment for work undertaken pursuant to this section may be made from any Forest Service appropriation available for similar types of work, and reimbursement received from said agencies, organizations, institutions, or persons covering their pro-portionate share of the cost shall be deposited to the credit of the Forest Service appropriation from which initially paid or to appropriations for similar purposes currently available at the time of deposit: Provided further, That when by the terms of a written agreement either party thereto furnishes materials, supplies, equipment, or services for fire emergencies in excess of its proportionate share, adjustment may be made by reim-bursement or by replacement in kind of supplies, materials, and equipment consumed or destroyed in excess of the furnishing party's proportionate share."

SEC. 6. That so much of the act of August 11, 1916 (39 Stat. 446, 462; 16 U. S. C. 490), as provides: "That hereafter deposits may received from timber purchasers in such sums as the Secretary of Agriculture may require to cover the cost to the United States of disposing of brush and other debris resulting from cutting operations in sales of national-forest timber; such deposits shall be covered into the Treasury and shall consti-tute a special fund, which is hereby appropriated and made available until expended, as the Secretary of Agriculture may direct, to pay the cost of such work and to make refunds to the depositors of amounts deposited by them in excess of such cost.", is hereby amended to read as follows: "Purchasers of national-forest timber may be required to deposit the estimated cost to the United States of disposing of brush and other debris resulting from their cutting operations, such deposits to be covered into the Treasury and constitute a special fund, which is hereby appropriated and shall re-main available for three fiscal years following the year of deposit: Provided, That any deposits in excess of the amount expended for disposals shall be transferred to miscel-laneous receipts, forest-reserve fund, to be credited to the receipts of the year in which such transfer is made."

SEC. 7. The Secretary of Agriculture, under such regulations as he may prescribe and at rates and for periods not exceeding 30 years as determined by him, is hereby authorized to permit the use by public and private agencies, corporations, firms, associations, or individuals, of structures or improvements under the administrative control of the Forest Service and land used in connection therewith: Provided, That as all or a part of the consideration for permits issued under this section, the Secretary may require the permittees at their expense to recondition and maintain the structures to a satisfac-

SEC. 8. The Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to furnish persons attending Forest Service demonstrations, and users of national-forest resources and recreational facilities, with meals, lodging, bedding, fuel, and other services, where such facilities are not otherwise available, at rates approximating but not less than the actual or estimated cost thereof and to deposit all moneys received therefor to the credit of the appropriation from which the cost thereof is paid, or a similar appropriation current at time the moneys are received: Provided, That such receipts obtained in excess of $10,000 in any one fiscal year shall be deposited in the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts.

SEC. 9. The Secretary of Agriculture is authorized, subject to such conditions as he may prescribe, to sell forest-tree seed and nursery stock to States and political subdivisions thereof and to public agencies of other countries, at rates not less than the actual or estimated cost to the United States of procuring or producing such seed or nursstock, moneys received from the sale thereof to be credited to the appropriation or appropriations of the Forest Service currently available for the procurement or production of seed or nursery stock at the time such moneys are deposited: Provided, That the Secretary of Agriculture may exchange with such public agencies forest-tree seed and nursery stock for forest-tree seed or nursery stock of the same or different species upon a determination that such exchange is in the interest of the United States and that the value of the property given in exchange does not exceed the value of the property received: Provided further, That no nursery stock shall be sold or exchanged under this section as ornamental or other stock for landscape planting of the types commonly grown by established commercial nursery-

SEC. 10. Notwithstanding the provisions of section 7 of the act of August 23, 1912, as amended (31 U.S. C. 679), appropriations for the protection and management of the national forests shall be available to pay for telephone service installed in residences of seasonal employees and of persons cooperating with the Forest Service who reside within or near the national forests when such installation is needed in protecting the national forests: Provided, That in addition to the monthly local service charge the Gov-ernment may pay only such tolls or other charges as are required strictly for the public business.

SEC. 11. Whenever such action is deemed to be in the public interest, the Forest Service is authorized to pay from any appropria-tion available for the protection and man-agement of the national forests all or any part of the cost of leasing, seeding, and protective fencing of public range land other than national-forest land and privately owned land intermingled with or adjacent to national-forest or other land administered by the Forest Service, if the use of the land to be seeded is controlled by the Forest Service under a lease or agreement which in the judgment of the Chief of the Forest Service gives the Forest Service control over the land for a sufficient period to justify such expenditures: Provided, That payment may not be made under authority of this section for the seeding of more than 1,000 section for the seeding of more than 1,000 acres in any one private ownership: Provided further, That payment may not be made under authority of this section for the seeding of more than 25,000 acres in any one fiscal year: Provided further, That the period of any lease under this authority may not acressed 20 wears. exceed 20 years.

SEC. 12. Appropriations of the Forest Service available for fire protection on the national forests or for cooperation with State and other agencies in fire protection may be expended for the procurement of printed material needed to conduct campaigns for the prevention of forest fires: Provided, That not to exceed $50,000 of the appropriation for "National-forest protection and management," and not to exceed $50,000 of the appropriation for "Forest-fire cooperation" propriation may be transferred in any one fiscal year to the appropriation "Printing and binding, Deand appropriation "Finning and binding, Department of Agriculture," for such purposes. SEC. 13. That section 5 of the act of March 3, 1925 (43 Stat. 1133; 16 U. S. C. 555), is hereby amended to read as follows:

"Where no suitable Government land is available for national-forest headquarters, ranger stations, dwellings, or for other sites required for the effective conduct of the au-thorized activities of the Forest Service, the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized to purchase such lands out of the appropriation applicable to the purpose for which the land is to be used, and to accept donations of land for any national-forest or experimental purpose: Provided, That such lands may be acquired subject to such reservations and outstanding interests as the Secretary deter-mines will not interfere with the purpose for which acquired: Provided further, That not o exceed $25,000 may be expended in any one fiscal year pursuant to this authority."

SEC. 14. There are hereby authorized to be appropriated-

such sums as may be necessary for the acquisition of parcels of land and interests in land in Sanders County, Mont., needed by the Forest Service to provide winter range for its saddle, pack, and draft animals;

(b) not to exceed $15,000 for the acquisition of additional land adjacent to the present site of the Forest Products Laboratory at

Madison, Wis.; and
(c) not to exceed $25,000 for the acquisition of one helicopter landing site in southern California.

Land acquired under this section may be subject to such reservations and outstanding interests as the Secretary of Agriculture de-termines will not interfere with the purpose for which acquired.

SEC. 15. That section 6 of the act of March 3, 1925 (43 Stat. 1133; 16 U. S. C. 557), is hereby amended by substituting a colon for the period at the end thereof and adding the following: "Provided, That when a transient without permanent residence, or any other person while away from his place of residence, is temporarily employed by the Forest Service and while so employed becomes disabled because of injury or illness not attributable to official work, he may be provided hospitalization and other necessary medical care, subsistence, and lodging for a period of not to exceed 15 days during such disability, the cost thereof to be payable from any funds available to the Forest Service applicable to the work for which such person is employed."

SEC. 16. Appropriations of the Forest Service chargeable with salaries and wages shall be available for payment to temporary employees of the Forest Service for loss of time due to injury in official work at rates not in excess of those provided by the United States Employees' Compensation Act, as amended (5 U.S. C., 751 and the following), when the injured person is in need of immediate financial assistance to avoid hardship: Provided, That such payment shall not be made for a period in excess of 15 days and the United States Employees' Compensation Commission shall be notified promptly of the amount so paid, which amount shall be deducted from the amount, if any, otherwise payable by the United States Employees' Compensation Commission to the employee on account of the injury, the amount so deducted by the Commission to be paid to the Forest Service for deposit to the credit of the Forest Service appropriation from which the expenditure was made: Provided further, That when any person assisting in the suppression of forest fires or in other emergency work under the direction of the Forest Service, without compensation from the United States, pursuant to the terms of a contract, agreement, or permit, is injured in such work, the Forest Service may furnish hospitalization and other medical care, subsistence, and lodging for a period of not to exceed 15 days during such disability, the cost thereof to be payable from the appropriation applicable to the work upon which the injury occurred, except that this proviso shall not apply when such person is within the purview of a State or other compensation act: Provided further, That determination by the Forest Service that payment is allowable under this section shall be final as to payments made hereunder, but such determination or payments with respect to employees shall not prevent the United States Employees' Compensation Commission from denying further payments should the Commission determine that compensation is not properly allowable under the provisions of the Employees' Compensa-

(b) The second proviso in section 13 of the act of March 1, 1911 (36 Stat. 961, 963), is hereby repealed.

With the following committee amend-

Section 1: At the end of the section, strike out the period and substitute in lieu there-of a comma and the following: "including the right to remove any such structure with in a reasonable time after the termination of the right to use the land."

Section 3: Immediately preceding the period at the end of the section, insert the following: "and not to exceed $10,000 on any one item or purchase."

Section 4: Strike out "(Public Law 425, 78th Cong.)" and substitute in lieu thereof:

"(58 Stat. 736, 16 U. S. C. 579a)". Section 5: In the first line of subsection (a) insert after the word "authorized" a comma and the following: "where the public interest justifies,"; strike out the same words where they appear in the second line of that subsection, and also strike out the comma after the word "with" in that line.

Section 6: In the new language of this section, after the words "shall remain available" (p. 6, line 5), strike out the words

"for three fiscal years following the year of deposit" and insert in lieu thereof the words "until expended."

Section 7: In the last line of this section, after the word "structures", insert the words 'and land."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Following section insert a new section, numbered 12, as follows:

'SEC. 12. The Secretary of Agriculture, when in his judgment such action will be in the public interest, and under such regulations as he may prescribe, may require any grazing permittee of a national forest to make deposits of money, in addition to payments for the use of the range, to cover the cost to the United States of (1) artificial revegetation, including the collection or purchase of necessary seed, (2) construction and maintenance of drift or division fences and stock-watering places, bridges, corrals, driveways, or other necessary range improvements, (3) control of range-destroying rodents, or (4) eradication of poisonous plants and nox-ious weeds, on such national forest in order protect or improve the future productivity of the range: Provided, That such deposits shall constitute a special fund, without fiscal year limitation, to be available to cover the cost to the United States of such artificial revegetation, construction, and maintenance of range improvements, control of rodents, and eradication of poisonous or noxious plants: Provided further, That whenever the Secretary of Agriculture determines that any portion of any deposit is in excess of the cost of doing said work, such excess shall be transferred to Miscel-laneous Receipts, Forest Reserve Fund, as a national-forest receipt of the fiscal year in which such transfer is made.'

Mr. GOFF. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this committee amendment be withdrawn.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Idaho?

There was no objection. The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Section 12 et seq .: Change the section numbers to conform to the above amendment.

Mr. GOFF. Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the previous amendment inserting a new section 12 was withdrawn, it is unnecessary to change the section numbers. I ask unanimous consent that these amendments be withdrawn.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Idaho? There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Section 14, in subsection (b), strike out "$15,000" and insert "$50,000."

The committee amendment was agreed to

DEPARTMENT OF STATE

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 4330) to authorize the Secretary of State to perform certain consular-type functions within the United States and its Territories and possessions.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That, until such time as the President shall determine and proclaim that a German Government capable of representing its own nationals in the United States and its Territories and possessions has been established, and under such reg-ulations as the Secretary of State may prescribe, the Department of State is authorized to perform consular functions for German nationals within the United States and its Territories and possessions, and to collect fees and make charges for services rendered: Provided, That any money so received shall be deposited and covered into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts.

SEC. 2. There are hereby authorized to be appropriated to the Department of State, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, such sums as may be necessary to carry out the purpose of this act

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

CONTINUING TWO ADDITIONAL ASSIST-ANT SECRETARIES OF STATE

The Clerk called the bill (H R 6822) to continue the authorization for the appointment of two additional Assistant Secretaries of State.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. Jenkins of Ohio). Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I ask the author of the bill how long this continues these two additional Secretaries of State?

Mr. JONKMAN. Mr. Speaker, up to 1946 we had four Assistant Secretaries of State. At that time we appointed two additional Assistant Secretaries of State for what was in effect a term of 2 years. This term will expire on December 31, 1948. I do not think it requires argument to show that at the present time our foreign relations and the work of the Secretary of State with reference thereto is fully as complex and voluminous as it was at that time. All this bill does is to extend that time for 1 year further.

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. Will the gentleman inform the House whether these Secretaries are concerned with the Voice of America?

Mr. JONKMAN. Of course, it falls within the province of one of these Secretaries, but, if this bill is not passed, it would not be certain as to which two Assistant Secretaries of State would be eliminated. There would have to be a general reshuffling so as to have the work now done by six Assistant Secretaries of State done by four Assistant Secretaries of State.

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, insofar as this is only for a period of 1 year and recognizing that the affairs of the State Department are in a horrible mess, I withdraw my reservation of objection in the hope that in another year things will improve.

Mr. JONKMAN. I thank the gentle-

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act of December 8, 1944 (58 Stat. 798), is hereby amended by deleting the words "not to exceed 2 years" and inserting in lieu thereof, the words "not to exceed 3 years."

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

UNITED STATES NAVAL ACADEMY

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 6698) to authorize the course of instruction at the United States Naval Academy to be given to not exceeding four persons at a time from the Republic of the Philippines.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of Mr. CUNNINGHAM. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the author of the bill if the course of instruction is paid for by the Philippine Republic or by the United States.

Mr. TOWE. By the United States. Mr. CUNNINGHAM. Why should the United States be paying for their instruction now that they have been given their independence?

Mr. TOWE. We have done it on other occasions. We have men at both Acad-

Mr. CUNNINGHAM. Is that the custom of the United States, to pay for it, as well as the Philippines?

Mr. TOWE. Yes, sir.

Mr. CUNNINGHAM. I withdraw the reservation of objection, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to permit, upon designation of the President of the United States, not exceeding four Filipinos at a time, one for each class, to receive instruc-tion at the United States Naval Academy at Annapolis, Md. The Filipinos receiving in-struction under authority of this act shall receive the same pay, allowances, and emoluments, to be paid from the same appropriations, and, subject to such exceptions as may be determined by the Secretary of the Navy, shall be subject to the same rules and regulations governing admission, attendance, discipline, resignation, discharge, dismissal, and graduation, as midshipmen at the Naval Academy appointed from the United States; but such persons shall not be entitled to appointment to any office or position in the United States Navy by reason of their graduation from the Naval Academy.

With the following committee amendment:

committee amendment was The agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

RECREATIONAL PARK ON THE GROUNDS OF UNITED STATES NAVAL HOSPITAL, GREAT LAKES, ILL,

The Clerk called the bill (S. 2251) to authorize the Army and Navy Union. United States of America, Department of Illinois, to construct a recreational park on the grounds of the United States naval hospital, United States Naval Training Center, Great Lakes, Ill.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, authorized to permit the Army and Navy Union, United States of America, Department of Illinois, to construct a recreational park on the grounds of the United States naval hospital, States Naval Training Center, Great Lakes, Ill., for the convenience and pleasure of the patients of that hospital.

SEC. 2. The site of the recreational park and its construction shall be subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Navy. The construction of the recreational park and all work performed in connection therewith shall be without cost to the United States.

SEC. 3. Upon completion of the recreational park the Secretary of the Navy is authorized to accept it as an unconditional gift to the United States from the Army and Navy Union, United States of America, Department

FORT MOULTRIE MILITARY RESERVATION

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 2912) providing for the conveyance to the State of South Carolina of that portion of the Fort Moultrie Military Reservation determined to be surplus to the needs of the War Department.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War is authorized and directed to convey by quitclaim deed without compensation to the State of South Carolina, that portion of land constituting the Fort Moultrie Military Reservation, together with the buildings and other improvements thereto, and the rights and appurtenances thereto belonging or appertaining, determined by him to be surplus to the requirements of the War Department.

SEC. 2. Such conveyance shall contain the provision that whenever the Congress of the United States shall declare a state of war or other national emergency to exist, upon the determination by the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy, that the property so conveyed is useful or necessary for military or naval purposes, or in the in-terest of national defense, the United States shall have a right without paying compen-sation to reenter upon such property and use the same or any part thereof for the duration of such state of war or other national emergency.

SEC. 3. Such conveyance shall contain the further provision that if the State of South Carolina shall, at any time, cease to use the property so conveyed for public purposes, title thereto shall revert to the United States.

With the following committee amend-

Page 1, line 3, strike out the word "War" and insert the words "the Army."

Page 1. line 10, strike out the word "War" and insert after the word "Department" the words "of the Army."

Page 2, line 4, strike out the words "War or" and insert "the Army."

Page 2, line 5, after the word "Navy," insert "or the Secretary of the Air Force."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill providing for the conveyance to the State of South Carolina of that portion of the Fort Moultrie Military Reservation determined to be surplus to the needs of the Department of the Army."

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

JACKSON BARRACKS MILITARY RESERVATION

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 3479) providing for the conveyance to the State of Louisiana of that portion of the Jackson Barracks Military Reservation determined to be surplus to the needs of the War Department.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. HUBER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, has there been any inquiry made of the Veterans' Administration as to whether any of this property might be used for veterans' hospitals?

Mr. ELSTON. We did not hear of any objection on the part of the Veterans' Administration. There was nothing before our committee indicating that the Veterans' Administration could use this property for hospital purposes.

Mr. BROOKS. I hardly think they are suitable for that purpose, in any event.

Mr. ELSTON. I think not.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War is authorized and directed to convey by quitclaim deed without compensation to the State of Louisiana that portion of land constituting the Jackson Barracks Military Reservation situated in Orleans Parish, La, together with the buildings and other improvements thereto, and the rights and appurtenances thereto belonging or appertaining, determined to be surplus to the requirements of the War Department.

SEC. 2. Such conveyance shall contain the provision that whenever the Congress of the United States shall declare a state of war or other national emergency to exist, upon the determination by the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy that the property so conveyed is useful or necessary for military or naval purposes, or in the interest of national defense, the United States shall have a right without paying compensation to reenter upon such property and use the same or any part thereof for the duration of such state of war or other national emergency.

SEC. 3. Such conveyance shall contain the further provision that if the State of Louisiana shall at any time cease to use the property so conveyed for military purposes, title thereto shall revert to the United States.

SEC. 4. Such conveyance shall contain the further provision that the action of the Governor of the State of Louisiana in receiving the property described herein on behalf of the State of Louisiana shall be subject to the power of the Legislature of Louisiana to rescind the donation and stipulations made pursuant thereto, as required by section 64 of Act 164 of the Regular Session of 1940, as amended, acts of the Legislature of Louisiana.

With the following committee amendments:

The committee amendments were agreed to.

Mr. ELSTON. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. ELSTON:

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read:
"A bill providing for the conveyance to the State of Louisiana of that portion of the Jackson Barracks Military Reservation determined to be surplus to the needs of the Department of the Army."

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

CONVEYANCE OF LAND AT NEW YORK NAVAL SHIPYARD

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 6709) to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to convey to the city of New York a perpetual easement in, over, and upon a twenty-nine one-hundredths acre parcel of land at the New York Naval Shipyard.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to grant to the city of New York without cost to said city, and under such terms and conditions as the Secretary of the Navy may consider appropriate, a perpetual easement for publichighway purposes in, over, and upon a parcel of land containing twenty-nine one-hundredths acre, more or less, lying between the New York Naval Shipyard, Hudson Avenue and York Street in the Borough of Brooklyn, city of New York, metes-and-bounds description of which is on file in the Navy Department.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

MILITARY JUSTICE IN THE UNITED STATES AIR FORCE

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 5937) to provide for the administration of military justice within the United States Air Force, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. CARROLL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to have this bill explained.

Mr. ELSTON. Mr. Speaker, this bill is for the purpose of providing for the administration of military justice in the United States Air Force. A similar bill has passed the other body. I might say to the gentleman that the only purpose in asking for the passage of this legislation is to take care of the situation that exists in the Air Force by reason of the opinion of the Judge Advocate General of the Air Force to the effect that if this legislation is not passed some habeas corpus proceedings might be brought by new enlistees.

Under the National Security Act, and an administrative order issued thereunder, the Air Force, for a period of 2 years beginning July 26, 1947, was vested with the same authority exercised by the Army in court-martial cases, except as to cases on appeal.

The purpose of this bill is to establish in the United States Air Force the office of the Judge Advocate General of the United States Air Force. The Judge Advocate General shall be an officer with the rank of major general. That does not mean a new general is to be created. It will simply result in the assignment of a major general from the Department of the Army to the Department of the Air Force.

Mr. CARROLL. The gentleman is not trying to set up a separate military judicial system for the Air Corps?

Mr. ELSTON. Not at all; and I might say to the gentleman that the Secretary of Defense has already appointed a committee with a view to having that committee recommend a uniform system of military justice for all the services.

Mr. CARROLL. Is this bill recommended by the Judge Advocate of the Army?

Mr. ELSTON. Yes; and by the Secretary of Defense. The primary purpose of this bill is to permit the Air Force to handle its own cases including those on appeal until a uniform system is set up, and to remove any doubt as to the legality of any proceedings in the Air Force.

Mr. CARROLL. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

Mr. EVINS. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, does the gentleman think we need three systems of military justice in the three services, the Army, the Navy, and the Air Force? I thought there was to be a major consolidation with unification of the services, that whereas we have heretofore had two systems of military justice, one for the Navy and one for the Army, that there would be one that applied to all the services. It now appears that there is to be a third system of military justice, this time for the Air Corps, and instead of having unification we are having an expansion and an increase. Does the gentleman think there should be three systems of military justice in the service?

Mr. ELSTON. I do not permanently. I asked the same question, I might say, when we began hearings on the Army justice bill. There is a difference between the systems in the Army and the Navy. It would not be possible for the Army system to apply in all respects to the Navy. Since our hearings were completed and after the passage of the Army bill, the Secretary of Defense indicated he intended to appoint a committee for the purpose of recommending to the next Congress a unified bill that will be applicable to all the services.

Mr. EVINS. The gentleman is the author of the bill which was passed in the House setting up the system of military justice in the Army. That bill was debated for several days. This is a highly important bill. Does the gentleman think this type of bill should be passed on the Consent Calendar?

Mr. ELSTON. Yes; I think as far as this bill is concerned it should because I consider it simply stopgap legislation until a unified plan can be prepared.

Mr. EVINS. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

Mr. ELSTON. Mr. Speaker, the purpose of the proposed legislation is to empower the Secretary of the United States Air Force to administer military justice under existing law over its own personnel to the same extent as the Army and the Navy. The bill specifically provides that the Articles of War shall be of equal force and effect with respect to the United States Air Force as they presently apply to the United States Army, creates the Office of the Judge Advocate General, United States Air Force, with the rank of major general, and provides for designation of the United States Air Force officers as judge advocates.

The responsibilities and duties of the Judge Advocate General, United States Air Force, and judge advocates, United States Air Force, will be identical with those of the Judge Advocate General of the Army and members of his department, respectively.

Following the passage of the National Security Act of 1947 the Secretaries of Defense, Army, and Air Force agreed that, since military justice is a judicial function, the establishment of such functions in the United States Air Force should be by congressional action, rather than by means of a transfer order of the Secretary of Defense under the National Security Act.

Pursuant to the foregoing agreements, the air judge advocate assumes all judge advocate functions within the Air Force. relative to military justice, except appellate review and confirmation of sentences. Staff judge advocates, trial judge advocates, defense counsel, members of the court, and convening authorities are Air Force personnel appointed by Air Force officers. In spite of the fact that the Air Force personnel are accomplishing more than 90 percent of the judgeadvocate duties in the Department of Air, the Department of the Air Force ceases to have any further responsibility or authority over a general-court-martial case after findings and sentence of the court. The record of trial is forwarded directly to the Department of the Army for appellate review in the Office of the Judge Advocate General of the Army and, when required by statute, for confirmation by the Secretary of the Army.

At the present time there are a total of 46 active court-martial jurisdictions of the United States Air Force in the United States and overseas. A recent summary, covering a 6 months' period, revealed that the Air Force was processing courtmartial cases at the following rates per thousand: General-court-martial cases, 0.45; special-court-martial cases, summary-court-martial cases, 4.52.

In furtherance of the agreement of the Secretaries that the Air Force would assume complete responsibility for the administration of military justice in the Air Force, 60 former officers of the Judge Advocate General's Department of the Army have been transferred to the United States Air Force, and an additional 125 qualified lawyers were commissioned in the Air Force for the performance of military-justice functions, all of whom had wartime experience in judge-advocate duties. In addition, approximately 158 Reserve officers are now performing judge-advocate duties with the Air Force on extended active duty. While it is not considered that this is an adequate number of legally qualified personnel to properly perform the legal duties, including military justice, in the Air Force, the ratio compares favorably with that maintained in the Army and the Navy.

The Chief of Staff, United States Air Force, is responsible for the mainteand enforcement of discipline within the entire Air Force, and the Air Force submits that this total responsibility should not be subjected to policies and supervision of a sister service. The Air Judge Advocate is the military legal adviser to the Chief of Staff, and in the discharge of his duties relating to the administration of military justice, it is considered advisable to recognize his professional position.

At the direction of the Secretary of Defense a committee consisting of representatives of the Army, Navy, and Air Force has been formed for the purpose of making a thorough study of the many problems involved in attempting to make more uniform the administration of military justice in the three services. It is certain that no legislative recommendations can come from this committee before the convening of the Eightyfirst Congress. In the meantime a reasonable doubt has arisen as to whether or not the Department of the Air Force has jurisdiction over transferees into the Air Force and those who may subsequently be drafted into the Air Force. While there is substantial opinion that the Department of Air will have adequate jurisdiction over such personnel, it is considered advisable to remove all doubt by the enactment of the present legislation rather than perpetuate the possibility that the Department of Air will find it necessary to defend its jurisdiction in habeas corpus proceedings.

Favorable consideration of the proposed legislation by the Committee on Armed Services making the Articles of War equally applicable to the Department of Air is not intended to indicate an approval of the present Articles of War. This committee of the House of Representatives have previously expressed themselves on this subject through the passage of H. R. 2575, a bill for the revision of the Articles of War and the improvement of military justice. It is considered that nothing less than the provisions of H. R. 2575 will provide an adequate system of military justice. Therefore, the present legislation is considered to be stopgap legislation which will legalize beyond doubt the present activities of the Air Judge Advocate and subordinate personnel until such time as the Congress shall enact legislation for an improved and unified system of justice, equally applicable, insofar as the basic differences of the services will permit, to all of the armed services.

The Secretary of Defense endorses the legislation upon the above-stated basis. It is not anticipated that the enactment of the legislation will result in any additional cost to the Government, except for minor administrative costs for clerical personnel in the Office of the Air Judge Advocate.

The Secretary of Defense and the Secretary of Air recommend the enactment of the proposed legislation, as is evidenced by their respective letters which were made a part of our report on this bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby stablished in the United States Air Force the office of the Judge Advocate General, United States Air Force. The office of the Judge Advocate General, United States Air Force, shall be occupied by the Judge Advocate General, United States Air Force, with the rank of major general, who shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, from among qualified officers of the United States Air Force, for a term of 4 years. The Judge Advocate General, United States Air Force, shall be charged with supervising the administration of military justice in the United States Air Force and the performance of such other legal duties as may be directed by the Chief of Staff, United States Air

SEC. 2. The Articles of War and all other laws now in effect relating to the Judge Advo-cate General's Department, The Judge Advocate General of the Army, and the administration of military justice within the United States Army shall be applicable to the De-partment of the Air Force with respect to the personnel hereof, and all references in such laws to the Department of the Army (War), the Army of the United States and its components, the Secretary of the Army (War), The Judge Advocate General, Assistant Judge Advocates General, and officers of or assigned to the Judge Advocate General's Department shall be construed for the pur-poses of this act, as referring to, and vesting like authority, duties, functions, and re-sponsibilities in, the Department of the Air Force, the Air Force of the United States and its components, the Secretary of the Air Force, the Judge Advocate General, United States Air Force, and officers of the States Air Force designated by the Chief of Staff, United States Air Force, as judge advo-cates, respectively: Provided, That until the expiration of the transfer period prescribed by section 208 (e) of the National Security Act of 1947 (Public Law 253, 80th Cong.), the jurisdiction conferred hereby may be exercised with respect to personnel of any component of the Department of the Army who may be under the command and authority of the Chief of Staff, United States Air Force.

SEC. 3. Any officer of the United States Air Force who shall have served as The Judge Advocate General, United States Air Force, shall, upon retirement, or if recalled to active duty from the retired list upon release from active duty, be advanced on the retired list to the highest active-duty grade held while so serving and shall receive retired pay computed upon such higher active-duty grade.

SEC. 4. Nothing contained herein shall be construed to prevent the prosecution, punishment, mitigation, or other action, by the United States acting through appropriate officers of either the Department of the Army or the Department of the Air Force as to any offense made punishable by the Articles of War committed prior to the date of this act by any person subject to military law, and either of those departments may enforce or mitigate any penalty, forfeiture, fine, or liability, heretofore adjudged against such person.

With the following committee amendment:

On page 3, line 8, after the word "retirement", strike out the balance of line 8, all of line 9, and the word "duty" on line 10.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ELSTON. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Elston: On page 3, line 7, after the word "served", insert the words "not less than 4 years."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. ELSTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to substitute a similar Senate bill, S. 2401, an act to provide for the administration of military justice within the United States Air Force, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There being no objection, the Clerkread the Senate bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby established in the United States Air Force the office of the Judge Advocate General, United States Air Force. The office of the Judge Advocate General, United States Air Force, shall be occupied by the Judge Advocate General, United States Air Force, with the rank of major general, who shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, from among qualified officers of the United States Air Force, for a term of 4 years. The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

By unanimous consent the proceedings by which the bill (H. R. 5937) was passed were vacated and that bill laid on the table.

SUMMARY TERMINATION OF EMPLOY-MENT TO PROTECT NATIONAL SECU-EITY

The Clerk called the bill (S. 1561) to protect the national security of the United States by permitting the summary termination of employment of civilian officers and employees of various departments and agencies of the Government, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. CARROLL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I should like to have the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. Rees] explain the bill.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, in order to save time, I have studied this bill. I think it is a dangerous bill to the right of civil-service employees, and I am constrained to object.

Mr. Speaker, I object.

CONVEYANCE OF CERTAIN LAND IN THE STATE OF OKLAHOMA

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 5861) to direct the Secretary of Agriculture to convey certain land to the State of Oklahoma.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby directed to convey to the State of Oklahoma, without consideration and on behalf of the United States, the southeast quarter and the east half of the southwest quarter of section 9 and the northeast quarter and the east half of the northwest quarter of section 16, township 3 north, range 23 east, of the Indian meridian, Le Flore County, Okla., for the purpose of constructing a dam.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

AMENDING DEPARTMENT OF AGRICUL-TURE ORGANIC ACT OF 1944

The Clerk called the bill (S. 1087) to amend section 502 (a) of the Department of Agriculture Organic Act of 1944. There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 502 (a) of the Department of Agriculture Organic Act of 1944 (Public Law 425, 78th Cong., 58 Stat. 739, 740), as amended by Public Law 563, Seventy-eighth Congress (58 Stat. 925), is further amended by inserting after the words "to cooperative associations" the words "and municipalities"; and by inserting after the words "said cooperative associations" a comma and the words "and municipalities to the extent that such indebtedness was incurred with respect to electric transmission and distribution lines or systems or portions thereof serving persons in rural areas."

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

MAINTENANCE OF MILITARY AND NAVAL ACADEMIES AT FULL STRENGTH

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 4984) to provide for the maintaining of the corps of cadets at the United States Military Academy and the regiment of midshipmen at the United States Naval Academy at full strength, and for other purposes.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 2 of the act of June 3, 1942 (56 Stat. 306; 10 U. S. C. 1091d), is amended to read: "When on the date of admission of a new class the total number of cadets is below the number au-thorized, the Secretary of the Army may, in his discretion, bring the corps of cadets to full strength by appointing qualified candidates recommended by the academic board: Provided, That at least two-thirds of the existing vacancies shall be set aside for the appointment of qualified recommended alternate candidates nominated by the Vice President, Members of the Senate and the House of Representatives of the United States, Delegates and Resident Commissioners, and the Commissioners of the District of Columbia. the Governor of the Panama Canal, and not more than one-third of the existing vacancles may be filled by the appointment of qualified recommended candidates, other than those for whom two-thirds of the existing vacancies are reserved: Provided further, That any appointment made under this section shall be an additional appoint-ment and shall not constitute an appointment otherwise authorized by law."

SEC. 2. When upon the admission of a new class to the United States Naval Academy the total number of midshipmen is less than the number authorized, the Secretary Navy may bring the regiment of the midship-men to full authorized strength by appointing alternates and candidates recommended by the academic board who have been found to be qualified as provided by law, at least two-thirds thereof from among alternates qualified for appointments allowed under ection 1 of the act of December 20, 1917 (40 Stat. 430), as amended, upon the nomination of Members of Congress and not more than one-third thereof from among candidates and alternates, other than those nominated by Members of Congress, qualified for appointments authorized under section 1 of said act of December 20, 1917, and other provisions of law: Provided, That any appoint-ments made hereunder shall be in addition to and not in lieu of appointments otherwise authorized by law.

With the following committee amendments:

THE WEST VIRGINIA PLAN

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 6439) to authorize and direct the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs to conduct an investigation and study of the feasibility and desirability of adopting the plan, known as the West Virginia plan, for the construction and financing of low-cost housing facilities for veterans.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs is authorized and directed to conduct a full and complete investigation and study of all matters relating to the plan, known as the West Virginia plan, for the construction and financing of low-cost housing facilities for veterans of World War II and to the feasibility and desirability of adopting, developing, and extending such plan throughout the United States. Such investigation and study shall include, among other matters, the following aspects of the West Virginia plan:

(1) Financial arrangements by corporations, labor unions, and cooperatives for the acquisition of land and for the construction of housing facilities for their employees and members who are veterans of World War II;

(2) The use of production-line methods in the construction of such housing facilities.

(3) Acquisition of housing facilities by veterans under contracts of sale with corporations, labor unions, and cooperatives;

(4) Individual loans to veterans by banks and building and loan associations and the guaranty of such loans under title III of the Servicemen's Readjustment Act of 1944, as amended: and

(5) The operation of the West Virginia plan generally in West Virginia and other States where such plan, or a similar plan, has been used.

SEC. 2. The Administrator of Veterans' Affairs shall report to the Congress, at the earliest practicable date, the result of his investigation and study of the West Virginia plan, together with such recommendations as he deems advisable.

Sec. 3. The Administrator of Veterans' Affairs is authorized, in carrying out his functions under this act, to utilize the services, information, facilities, and personnel of the departments and independent agencies of the Government of the United States.

Sec. 4. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated the sum of $100,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to carry out the provisions of this act.

With the following committee amendment:

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

THE SECRETARY OF THE AIR FORCE

The Clerk called the bill (S. 2505) to amend the act of August 1, 1947, to clarify the position of the Secretary of the Air Force with respect to such act, and to authorize the Secretary of Defense to establish six additional positions in the professional and scientific service, and for other purposes.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the first section of the act, entitled "An act to authorize the creation of additional positions in the professional and scientific service in the War and Navy Departments", approved August 1, 1947. is amended, to read as follows:

"That the Secretary of the Army, the Secretary of the Navy, and the Secretary of the Air Force are respectively authorized to establish and fix the compensation for, within their respective departments, not more than 13 positions each, and the Secretary of De-fense is authorized to establish and fix the compensation for not more than 6 positions, compensation for not more than 6 posterois, each such position being established to ef-fectuate those research and development functions, relating to the national defense, military and naval medicine, and any and all other activities of the National Military Establishment which requires the services of specially qualified scientific or professional personnel: Provided, That the rates of compensation for positions established pursuant to the provisions of this act shall not be less than $10,000 per annum nor more than $15,-000 per annum, and shall be subject to the approval of the Civil Service Commission."

SEC. 2. Section 3 of such act is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 3. The Secretary of Defense shall submit to the Congress, not later than December 31 of each year, a report setting forth the number of positions established pursuant to this act in the National Military Establishment during that calendar year, and the name, rate of compensation, and description of the qualifications of each incumbent, to-gether with a statement of the functions performed by each. In any instance where the Secretary may consider full public report on these items detrimental to the national security, he is authorized to omit such items from his annual report and, in lieu thereof, to present such information in executive sessions of such committees of the Senate and House of Representatives as the presiding officers of those bodies shall designate."

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The Clerk called the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 158) to authorize the issuance of a special series of stamps commemorative of the eighty-fifth anniversary of Lincoln's Gettysburg Address.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the Senate joint resolution, as fol-

Resolved, etc., That the Postmaster General is authorized and directed to prepare for issuance on November 19, 1948, a special series of 3-cent postage stamps, of such design as he shall prescribe, in commemoration of the eighty-fifth anniversary of Lincoln's Gettysburg Address.

The joint resolution was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GRANTING PENSIONS TO CERTAIN PERSONS

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 451) to extend pension benefits under the laws reenacted by Public Law 269, Seventyfourth Congress, August 13, 1935, as now or hereafter amended to certain persons who served with the United States military or naval forces engaged in hostilities in the Moro Province, including Mindanao, or in the islands of Samar and Leyte, after July 4, 1902, and prior to January 1, 1914, and to their unremarried widows, child, or children.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. KEAN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

GRATUITOUS INSURANCE FOR CERTAIN PERSONS

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 4159) to provide for equitable adjustment of the insurance status of certain members of the armed forces.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. KEAN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to say to the gentleman from Iowa, the Veterans' Administration is against this bill as they say it would go to any time in the future.

Mr. LECOMPTE. Mr. Speaker, may I say to the gentleman from New Jersey that this bill undertakes to correct an injustice with respect to a small group of Army and Navy cadets who were taking flight training, a few of whom were killed on authorized flights during the war and found themselves without the customary national life insurance with the premium paid by the Government. There are only a very few cases involved. The information that was obtained from the Veterans' Administration was that the reason these men had been classified as cadets rather than as flying cadets was perhaps partly due to an oversight in one of the departments or perhaps because of excessive paper work.

Mr. KEAN. The Veterans' Administration says that this would apply, respectively, to any time in the future.

Mr. LECOMPTE. Any time in the future, if they were so listed? As a matter of fact, this applies only to a group of men who were taking flight training but had not been so classified during the war.

Mr. KEAN. Does it not apply to men in the future?

Mr. LECOMPTE. If they were having flight training.

Mr. KEAN. Why should we give preference to those?

Mr. LECOMPTE. We gave all flight trainees war-risk insurance with the premiums paid by the Government, but there were a few who, because of the classification, were not brought under the same coverage.

Mr. Mackinnon. Mr. Speaker, further reserving the right to object, I will say to the gentleman from Iowa that I am very much in sympathy with the general purpose of this particular bill, but it provides that payments be made to the parents of the deceased without regard to dependency. I have no objection to that if it were the general rule, but that is more than we did for the men who were killed during the war and who had not taken out insurance.

Mr. LECOMPTE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MacKINNON. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. LECOMPTE. I think the gentleman is mistaken about that. It provides the same order of payment as in the other cases.

Mr. Mackinnon. The order is the same but the dependency requirement is not present in this bill. I have in my district the case of a boy who in the early days of the war was on duty on a destroyer in the Far East, who died in a hospital at Surabaya, in Java, and he had absolutely no opportunity to take out insurance. I have gone into the matter very carefully, and the Veterans' Administration will not pay any insurance to his parents, because they were not de-pendent upon him. Yet, by this lan-guage here they would be forced to pay that to the parents of these few individuals, many of whom did not die in actual service, regardless of dependency.

Mr. LECOMPTE. It applies to no one in the world except those who died in training in the Army or in the service.

Mr. MacKINNON. Yes, but I am talking about dying in actual battle.

Mr. LeCOMPTE. War-risk insurance applies to all soldiers and seamen who carried the insurance, whether they died in camp, in combat, or in the hospitals.

Mr. MacKINNON. Yes, but what we are talking about is gratuitous insurance provided in instances where the men did not have an opportunity to make appli-cation therefor. That is the identical situation you are covering here, and which is covered with respect to other men who were in the position as was the boy in my district, who had no opportunity at the start of the war, and who was injured immediately. Under the general law applicable to these situations those boys who were on actual duty in the Pacific when the war started, and who were killed, get no insurance money at all unless their parents were dependent upon them. But this bill would make payments to this small class of parents regardless of dependency, and I cannot justify that discrimination against those who were killed in the early days of the Pacific war.

I therefore object, Mr. Speaker.

AMENDING THE CIVIL AERONAUTICS ACT OF 1938

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 4435) to amend the Civil Aeronautics Act of 1938, as amended, by redefining certain powers of the Administrator, and for other purposes.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 302 (a) of the Civil Aeronautics Act of 1938, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 302. (a) The Administrator is authorized and directed to designate and establish such civil airways as may be required in the public interest. The Administrator is authorized, within the limits of available appropriations made by the Congress, (1) to acquire, establish, and improve air navigation facilities wherever necessary; (2) to operate and maintain such air navigation facilities; (3) to arrange for publication of aeronautical maps and charts necessary for the safe and efficient movement of aircraft in civil air navigation utilizing the facilities and assistance of existing agencies of the Government so far as practicable; and (4) to provide necessary facilities and personnel for the regulation and protection of air traffic."

SEC. 2. Section 302 of the Civil Aeronautics Act of 1938, as amended, is amended by striking out subsection (c) of such section and by inserting in lieu thereof the following "ACQUISITION AND DISPOSAL OF PROPERTY

"(c) The Administrator, on behalf of the United States, is authorized, where appropriate to carry out this section, (1) to accept any conditional or unconditional gift or donation of money or other property, real or personal, or of services; (2) within the limits of available appropriations made by the Congress therefor, to acquire by purchase, con-demnation, lease, or otherwise, real property or interests therein, including easements through or other interests in air space; and (3) for adequate compensation, by sale, lease, or otherwise, to dispose of any real or per-sonal property or interest therein, so ac-quired. Any such acquisition by condem-nation may be made in accordance with the provisions of the act of August 1, 1888 (40 U. S. C. 257; 25 Stat. 357), the act of February 26, 1931 (40 U. S. C. 258a-258e; 46 Stat. 1421), or any other applicable act of Con-

SEC. 3. Title III of the Civil Aeronautics Act of 1938, as amended, is amended by adding thereto a new section as follows:

"POWER TO CONDUCT HEARINGS AND INVESTIGATIONS

"SEC. —. In the conduct of any public hearings or investigations authorized by this act or by Public Law 377, Seventy-ninth Congress, the Administrator or any duly designated examiner shall have the same powers to take evidence, issue subpenas, take depositions, and compel testimony as are vested in members of the Board and its duly designated examiners by section 1004 of this act. Actions of the Administrator or his examiners in such cases shall be governed by the proenforced in the manner provided therein."

With the following committee amendment:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert: "That section 302 (a) of the Civil Aeronautics Act of 1938, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

" GENERAL

"'SEC. 302. (a) The Administrator is authorized and directed to designate and establish such civil airways as may be required in the public interest. #### PENSIONS FOR WIDOWS OF SPANISH-AMERICAN WAR VETERANS

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 4962) to provide pensions for certain widows of veterans of the Spanish-American War, including the Boxer Rebellion and the Philippine Insurrection.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the dependent unemarried widow of a veteran of the Spanish-American War, including the Boxer Rebellion and the Philippine Insurrection, who is barred from the receipt of pension because her marriage to the veteran occurred subsequent to December 31, 1937, but who is otherwise entitled to such pension under the act of May 1, 1926 (44 Stat. 382; 38 U. S. C., 364a), as reenacted by the act of August 13, 1935 (49 Stat. 614; 38 U.S. C., 368), shall be entitled to pension in her own right under said act, as amended, under the conditions specified therein (except date of marriage) and at the rate authorized by section 4 of the act of August 7, 1946 (Public Law 611, 79th Cong.), as amended by the act of July 30, 1947 (Public Law 270, 80th Cong.), and to the additional pension provided for chil-dren under the act of May 1, 1926, as amended, provided she married the veteran 10 or more years prior to his death and lived with him continuously from the date of marriage to the date of his death except where there was a separation which was due to misconduct of or procured by the veteran without the fault of the widow: Provided, That if pension has been granted to a child or children of the veteran, the widow shall not be entitled to the pension authorized by this section until the pension to the child or children terminates, unless such child or children be a member or members of her family and cared for by her; and when these conditions are fulfilled and the pension is granted to the widow, payment of pension to such child or children shall cease; except that in the event the amount being paid to such child or children is less than the amount authorized to the widow by this act, then the difference between said amounts will be paid to the widow: Provided further, That no pension shall be payable under this section to a widow under 60 years

SEC. 2. Payment of pension as provided in section 1 shall be effective as of the date of the death of the veteran, if application is filed within 1 year after the death of such veteran, otherwise as of the date of receipt of application in the Veterans' Administration, and in no event prior to the date of the enactment of this act.. Pension under section 1 hereof shall not be paid to the widow of a veteran of the Spanish-American War, including the Boxer Rebellion and the Philippine Insurrection, who has remarried either once or more than once since the death of the veteran, and upon the remarriage of such widow her pension shall be terminated. The penal and forfeiture provisions of laws and regulations administered by the Veterans' Administration providing pensions for veterans of the Spanish-American War, including the Boxer Rebellion and Philippine Insurrection, shall be applicable to the provisions of this act.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

HOSPITALIZATION OF SPANISH-AMERI-CAN WAR VETERANS

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 5464) to provide greater security for veterans of the Spanish-American War, including the Boxer Rebellion and Philippine Insurrection, in the granting of hospitalization by the Veterans' Administration.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? Mr. KEAN. I object, Mr. Speaker.

AMENDING THE PUBLIC HEALTH ACT

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 6868) to amend section 326 (b) of the Public Health Service Act, with respect to widows of certain deceased Coast Guard personnel.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted. etc, That section 326 (b) of the Public Health Service Act, as amended (42 U.S. C. 253 (b)), is amended by adding at the end thereof the following: "The widows of deceased Coast Guard per-

"The widows of deceased Coast Guard personnel who died while on active duty during the period from November 1, 1941, to January 1, 1946, both dates inclusive, other than widows of deceased temporary members of the Coast Guard Reserve, shall be entitled to medical advice, out-patient treatment, and hospitalization in like manner as dependents of active-duty personnel of the Coast Guard."

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

AMENDING THE FEDERAL AIRPORT ACT

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 6860) to amend the Federal Airport Act.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. DEANE. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, in view of the brief title of the bill, would the author of the bill or a committee member explain the purposes of this legislation.

Mr. HINSHAW. During the war the military services created certain damage upon municipal airports. This bill authorizes the assaying of the damages done, and when so accomplished, it becomes a contractual obligation of the United States to repair the damages.

Mr. DEANE. I withdraw my reservation of objection, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 17 of the Federal Airport Act is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 17. (a) Reimbursement shall be made to public agencies, as provided in this section, for the necessary rehabilitation or repair of public airports heretofore or here-after substantially damaged by any Federal agency. The Administrator is authorized to render such assistance as he deems necessary to public agencies in the preparation of re-quests for reimbursement for the cost of rehabilitation or repair of public airports, under the control or management of such public agencies, which have been substantially damaged by any Federal agency and, upon receipt of such a request from a public agency, the Administrator is further authorized, on behalf of the United States, to consider, ascertain, and determine, in accordance with regulations he shall prescribe pursuant to this section, the actual or estimated cost of such necessary rehabilitation or repair for which such public agency is entitled to re-imbursement from the United States.

"(b) Such amount as may be found by the Administrator to be the actual or estimated cost of such rehabilitation or repair shall be certified by the Administrator to Congress, which certification shall include a brief statement of the character of the damage upon which the request for reimbursement is based and of the work performed or to be performed to accomplish such rehabilitation or repair. In the event that, upon completion of such rehabilitation or repair, it is determined that the actual cost thereof, as approved by the Administrator, exceeds the amount of the estimate certified to Congress by him, the Administrator shall certify to Congress the amount by which such actual cost exceeds such estimate including in such certification a brief statement of the cause of the variation between the estimated and the actual cost of such rehabilitation and repair. Certifications made hereunder by the Administrator shall be deemed contractual obligations of the United States, payable as hereinafter provided.

"(c) There are hereby authorized to be appropriated such amounts as may be necessary to enable the Administrator to make payments as provided for in this section to public agencies, either upon completion of the rehabilitation or repair involved, or as such rehabilitation or repair progresses, it being the purpose of this subsection to authorize the Administrator to make payments to public agencies, out of funds appropriated pursuant to this section, as reimbursement for the cost of such public agencies of work performed in accomplishing rehabilitation or repair prior to final completion of such work and at such time or times as may be determined by the Administrator, after consultation with the public agency involved: Provided, That no such payment made by the Administrator shall be in an amount which, together with all previous payments made to reimburse such public agency for the cost of such rehabilitation or repair, shall exceed the estimated cost of the work then performed. If the Administrator shall determine at any time that the aggregate of such payments exceeds the actual cost of the work then performed the United States shall be entitled to recover such excess. In the event the estimate of the cost of rehabilitation or repair of an airport as certified to Congress by the Administrator exceeds the actual cost of such rehabilitation or repair, the amount of such excess shall be covered into the Treasury of the United States as miscellaneous receipts. Appropriations made pursuant to this subsection shall remain available until June 30, 1953, unless sooner expended.

"(d) No request for reimbursement of the cost of rehabilitation or repair to a public airport submitted pursuant to this section shall be considered by the Administrator unless such request has been submitted to him within 6 months after the occurrence of the damage upon which the request is based, except that in case of a request relating to damage caused by operations of a military nature during time of war, such request may be submitted within 6 months after the date of termination of such war unless the airport is under the control and management of the United States at the time of termination of such war, in which event the request may be submitted to the Administrator within 6 months after the transfer of such control or management of the airport to the public agency involved."

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

STOPPAGE OF WORK ON CERTAIN COMBATANT VESSELS

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 6049) to authorize the President, in his discretion, to permit the stoppage of work on certain combatant vessels.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the proviso of title III of the Second Supplemental Surplus Appropriation Rescission Act, 1946, under the heading "Increase and replacement of naval vessels" (60 Stat. 227), in the discretion of the President shall not apply to the following vessels: Kentucky (BB66), Havaii (CB3), Wagner (DE539), Vandiver (DE540), Castle (DD720), Woodrow R. Thompson (DD721), Lansdale (DD766), Seymour D. Owens (DD767), Hoel (DD768), Abner Read (DD769), Seaman (DD791), Unicorn (SS436), and Walrus (SS437).

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. KEAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of a similar Senate bill (S. 2400) to authorize the President, in his discretion, to permit the stoppage of work on certain combatant vessels.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersev?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the proviso of title III of the Second Supplemental Surplus Appropriation Rescission Act, 1946, under the heading "Increase and replacement of naval (60 Stat. 227), in the discretion of vessels" (60 Stat. 227), in the discretion of the President shall not apply to the follow-ing vessels: Kentucky (BB66), Hawaii (CB3), Wagner (DE539), Vandiver (DE540), Castle (DD720), Woodrow R. Thompson (DD721), Lansdale (DD766), Seymour D. Owens (DD767), Hoel (DD768), Abner Read (DD769), Seaman (DD791), Unicorn (SS436), and Walrus (SS437).

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

A similar House bill (H. R. 6049) was laid on the table.

DEVELOPMENT OF CIVIL TRANSPORT AIR-CRAFT ADAPTABLE FOR AUXILIARY MILITARY SERVICE

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 6501) to provide for the development of civil transport aircraft adaptable for auxiliary military service, and for other purposes.

Mr. KEAN. Mr. Speaker, this bill provides for too large an expenditure of money to be considered on the Consent Calendar. I ask unanimous that it be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

EXTENDING BENEFITS OF CIVIL SERVICE RETIREMENT ACT TO CERTAIN EM-

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 5715) to extend the benefits of section 1 (c) of the Civil Service Retirement Act of May 29, 1930, as amended, to employees who were involuntarily separated during the period from July 1, 1945, to July 1, 1947, after having rendered 25 years of service but prior to attainment of age 55.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the last sentence of subsection (c) of section 1 of the civil service retirement act of May 29, 1930, as amended, is amended to read as follows: This subsection shall become effective as of July 1, 1945."

SEC. 2. Nothing contained in this act shall be construed to reduce the annuity or in any way to affect the rights of any person who is receiving an annuity under the provisions of the amendment to section 1 of the Civil Service Retirement Act of May 29, 1930, as amended, made by the act approved August 8, 1946 (Public Law 638, 79th Cong).

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 3, strike out lines 3 to 6 inclusive and insert the following: "That subsection (c) of section 1 of the Civil Service Retirement Act of May 29, 1930, as amended, is amended by inserting before the period at the end thereof a colon and the following: 'Provided, That any officer or employee so sep arated between July 1, 1945, and June 30, 1947, both dates inclusive, who is living on the date of enactment of this proviso, shall be considered as having been separated as of the date of such enactment, except that no credit for service under this act shall be allowed for the period following actual separation."

The committee amendment was agreed

IMPORTATION OF FOREIGN WILD ANIMALS AND BIRDS

The Clerk called the bill (S. 1447) to prohibit the importation of foreign wild animals and birds under conditions other than humane, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, as I understand this bill, it provides for humane housing in connection with the importation of foreign wild animals and birds. I am not going to object to its consideration. However, I think we should give some thought to the consideration of providing humane housing for the onethird of our Nation who are ill-housed. A bill has been reported out of the Committee on Banking and Currency providing for public housing. That bill is now fouled up in the Rules Committee. I want to be kind to these foreign wild animals, and I shall not object to the consideration of this bill, but at the same time I urge that the Rules Committee bring out that housing bill so that we can be kind to our people who are ill-housed.
The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 241 of the Act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the penal laws of the United States. approved March 4, 1909 (U. S. C., title 18, sec. 391), is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 241. (a) The importation into the United States or any Territory or district thereof, of the mongoose, the so-called 'flying foxes' or fruit bats, the English sparrow, the starling, and such other birds and animals as the Secretary of the Interior may from time to time declare to be injurious to the interests of agriculture or horticulture, is hereby prohibited; and all such birds and animals shall, upon arrival at any port of the United States, be destroyed or returned at the expense of the owner. Nothing in this subsection shall restrict the importation of natural-history specimens for museums or scientific collections, or of certain cage birds, such as domesticated canaries, parrots, or such other birds as the Secretary of the Interior may designate. The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to make regulations for carrying into effect the provisions of this subsection and subsection (b)

"(b) The Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe such requirements and issue such permits as he may deem necessary for the transportation of wild animals and birds under humane and healthful conditions, and it shall be unlawful for any person, including any importer, knowingly to cause or per mit any wild animal or bird to be transported to the United States, or any Territory or district thereof, under inhumane or un-healthful conditions or in violation of such requirements. In any criminal prosecution for violation of this subsection and in any administrative proceeding for the suspension of the issuance of further permits-

"(1) The condition of any vessel or conveyance, or the enclosures in which wild animals or birds are confined therein, upon its arrival in the United States, or any Territory or district thereof, shall constitute relevant evidence in determining whether the provisions of this subsection have been violated; and

"(2) The presence in such vessel or conveyance at such time of a substantial ratio of dead, crippled, diseased, or starving wild ani-mals or birds shall be deemed prima facte evidence of the violation of the provisions of this subsection."

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

AMENDMENT OF HOSPITAL SURVEY AND CONSTRUCTION ACT

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 5807) to amend the Hospital Survey and Construction Act.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 625 (a) of the Hospital Survey and Construction Act, approved August 13, 1946 (60 Stat. 1040), is amended by inserting before the last sentence thereof the following: "In the case of any project on which construction has begun between August 13, 1946, and the date of the approval of the State plan, the Surgeon General, with the concurrence of the State agency, may waive compliance with any requirement of this subsection, if he finds that the purpose of such requirement has been fulfilled."

SEC. 2. Section 631 (i) of such act is amended by inserting before the period at the end thereof the following: "(including, in the case of projects on which construc-tion has begun after August 13, 1946, and before approval of the State plan, costs in-curred before such approval)."

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. That is the last eligible bill on the Consent Calendar.

O'SULLIVAN DAM

Mr. HOLMES. Mr. Speaker, after consulting the majority and minority leaders, I ask unanimous consent to return for immediate consideration to Consent Calendar No. 795, the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 202) to change the name of the South Coulee Dam in the Columbia Basin project to O'Sullivan Dam.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the joint resolution, as Resolved, etc., That the dam known as South Coulee Dam in the Columbia Basin project shall hereafter be known as O'Sullivan Dam, and any law, regulation, document, or record of the United States in which such dam is designated or referred to under the name of South Coulee Dam shall be held to refer to such dam under and by the name

Amend the title so as to read: "Joint resolution to change the name of the Potholes Dam in the Columbia Basin project to O'Sullivan Dam."

With the following committee amend-

Page 1, line 3, strike out "South Coulee" and insert "Potholes" and on line 7 strike out "South Coulee" and insert "Potholes."

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "Joint resolution to change the name of the Potholes Dam in the Columbia Basin project to O'Sullivan Dam."

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

A similar House bill was laid on the table.

ASSISTANT TO THE CHIEF OF ENGINEERS

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (S. 2770) a bill to fix the rank of the Assistant to the Chief of Engineers in charge of river and harbor and flood-control improvements. That bill is identical to the bill on the Consent Calendar No. 769, H. R. 6751, which was just passed.

The Clerk read the title of the Senate

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the officer of the Corps of Engineers assigned to duty as Assistant to the Chief of Engineers in charge of civil works, including river and harbor and flood-control improvements, shall, while assigned to such duty, have the rank, pay, and allowances of a brigadier general: Provided, That this position shall not be charged against the authorized strength of general officers of the Regular Army: Provided further, That the pay and allowances, mileage and travel allowances, of the officer holding such position shall be paid from the appropriations for the work or works upon which he is engaged.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The proceedings whereby the House bill, H. R. 6751, was passed were vacated and that bill laid on the table.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Speaker, this bill is not a long one but it is an important one. The bill will make the rank of Assistant to the Chief of Engineers in charge of river and harbor and floodcontrol improvements that of a brigadier general. It will give this position the same rank as held by the assistant in charge of Army construction. It will give proper recognition to the office of the assistant engineer who handles the great flood-control and river and harbor program.

The official who serves as assistant engineer in charge of river and harbor and flood-control projects has a vast responsibility imposed upon him. He is required to handle hundreds of millions of dollars in projects annually and his work takes him into every department of the Government and every State in the Union. He is required to deal with Cabinet members and the highest officers in Army, Navy, and diplomatic corps. Heretofore he has been a colonel and it has been difficult for a colonel to carry on his work and deal with officials so much higher in rank than the one he

In addition to this, the bill is important because it creates an additional incentive for young engineers to remain in river and harbor and flood-control work. These young men now have the incentive of working up to a position of more importance with the engineers department. They know that when they handle their work competently they may be rewarded proportionately for the fine type of service rendered.

Mr. Speaker, my heart is in this great program of flood control. When a small matter such as giving this additional rank and importance to the position of assistant engineer can mean so much to the program of flood control and rivers and harbors, I cannot be otherwise than most enthusiastically for the bill.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. HOBBS asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks with two additions in two instances, one at that point in the RECORD where Consent Calendar No. 725, S. 1052, was under consideration, the addition being the bill itself, S. 1052, and a letter which he wrote to the Delegate from Hawaii [Mr. FARRINGTON].

Mr. LARCADE asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a newspaper article.

Mr. HEFFERNAN asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include the platform of the Affiliated Young Democrats of New York.

Mr. DURHAM asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an editorial.

Mr. HAND asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and to include extraneous material in connection with certain remarks he made in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. CLASON asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Rec-ORD and include a newspaper article.

Mr. SCHWABE of Missouri. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and include certain letters from the Union Trust Co. I am informed by the Public Printer that this material comprises two and a quarter pages and will cost $159.75.

The SPEAKER. Without objection and notwithstanding the cost, the extension may be made.

There was no objection.

Mr. HINSHAW asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

UNITED STATES CODE

Mr. REED of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's desk the bill (H. R. 3214) to revise, codify, and enact into law title 28 of the United States Code entitled "Judicial Code and Judiciary," with Senate amendments thereto and concur in the Senate amendments.

The Clerk read the title of the bill. The Clerk read the Senate amendments, as follows:

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. REED of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, the bill H. R. 3214, to revise, codify, and enact into law title 28 of the United States Code entitled "Judicial Code and Judiciary," which, in my opinion, represents one of the most important improvements in the structure of the Federal statutory law since the adoption of the United States Code more than 20 years ago, was prepared by a group of experts under the supervision of Subcommittee No. 1 of the Committee on the Judiciary and its law revision counsel with the active cooperation and advice of an outstanding group of judges and lawyers. This bill as reported by the Committee on the Judiciary, and as it passed the House, transferred the provisions relating to the Tax Court for the Internal Revenue Code to the Judicial Code. After hearings before a subcommittee of the Senate Judiciary Committee at which testimony was adduced revealing a controversy between bar associations and accountants groups as to whether the right of accountants to practice before that court should be preserved, the bill was amended by the Senate Judiciary Committee to eliminate Tax Court provisions. Your committee being apprehensive that a controversy of this nature might cause undue delay and interfere with final action on the bill at this session accordingly has authorized me to request unanimous consent to take the bill from the Speaker's table and concur in the Senate amendments. We believe, however, that the Tax Court provisions should be incorporated in the Judicial Code at the earliest date.

H. R. 3214 includes a provision designed to eliminate the effects of the decision of Dobson v. Commission (320 U.S. The hearings in the Senate make absolutely clear the purpose of this provision, but it seems desirable to enlarge upon the brief statement in the Senate committee report with respect to that provision so that there can be no question about the intent of Congress.

Section 36 of the bill, as it passed the Senate, removes all traces of the Dobson decision. Prior to the decision in that case the statutory provision for review of Tax Court decisions by circuit courts of appeal had always been construed to grant the same scope of review over Tax Court decisions as over decisions of United States district courts. This meant that questions of law were fully reviewable and questions of fact were subject to the same sort of limited review as is available in review of district court decisions. However, in the Dobson decision, the Supreme Court created new rules as to the scope of review as to questions of law and fact, although the point had not been raised by counsel.

The present bill amends the law that is interpreted in the Dobson decision and restores to the circuit courts of appeal the power to review Tax Court decisions in the same manner and to the same extent as decisions of the district courts in civil actions tried without a jury. The bill does not attempt to define what is a question of fact or what is a question of law or to answer any of the other complicated questions which would be involved in spelling out de novo the com-plete scope of review. There is no necessity to do this. It is sufficient that whatever the scope of review over civil actions-whether tax cases or nontax cases-coming from the district courts, the same scope of review should exist over cases coming from the Tax Court.

At a meeting of the full Committee of the Judiciary on June 15, the following expression of views with respect to the Senate amendments was unanimously agreed upon for insertion in the

VIEWS OF THE COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY WITH RESPECT TO SENATE AMENDMENTS TO H. E. 3214

In order to insure and expedite final action on the bill, H. R. 3214 to revise, codify and enact into law title 28 of the United States Code entitled "Judicial Code and Judiciary", the Committee on the Judiciary authorizes the chairman of subcommittee No. 1 to take from the Speaker's table the bill with the Senate amendments and request unanimous consent to agree to said amendments.

Many of the Senate amendments are intended to eliminate from the bill all provisions relating to the Tax Court. Under the existing law those provisions are set out in title 26 of the United States Code, the Internal Revenue Code, and the bill, H. R. 3214, as agreed to by the House, transferred these provisions from the Internal Revenue Code to the Judicial Code. It is the belief of the Committee on the Judiciary that the transfer of these provisions constituted more of a change in form than in substance. The Tax Court of the United States is already a court in both name and fact. exercising purely judicial functions, but its housekeeping administration needs clarification. However, rather than to jeopardize final action upon the bill at this late date, the committee agrees to the Senate amendments eliminating those provisions from the bill. It is hoped that the judicial code will be amended early in the next Congress by incorporating the desired clarification.

THE RULE IN THE DOBSON CASE

Section 1294 of title 28 of the United States Code, set out in H. R. 3214 as it passed the House, relating to appeals from the Tax Court, provided that Tax Court decisions shall be subject to review by the courts of appeals in the same manner and to the same extent as decisions in the district courts in cases tried without a jury. That section accomplished the much-needed correction of the effects of the rule laid down by the Supreme Court in the case of Dobson v. Commissioner (320 U.S. 489 In that case, the Supreme Court held that the review of the Tax Court decisions by the circuit courts of appeal should be a very limited review because of some peculiar characteristics of the Tax Court. Accordingly, in the Dobson decision, the Supreme Court construed section 1141 of the Internal Revenue Code in such a way as to reduce the right of review in either the tax-payer or the Government in the great majority of Tax Court cases.

Section 1141 of the Internal Revenue Code provides for court review of Tax Court decisions. From the time this appellate review was established by the Revenue Act of 1926 until the Dobson decision in 1943, there had been no suggestion that the review of the Tax Court decisions was any more limited than the appellate review of decisions of the United States district courts. It was assumed by the courts that, on appeal from the Tax Court, questions of law were fully reviewable and questions of fact were subject to the same sort of limited review that prevailed on appeals from United States district courts. The Supreme Court in the Dobson case, however, created a new rule of law which would not permit even law questions to be reviewed unless they were clear-cut questions of law, and which would not permit any worth-while review of decisions of fact. In effect, it was an abdication by the Supreme Court, on behalf of itself and the circuit courts of appeal, of judicial authority conferred upon the courts by Congress.

Section 1294 of the Judicial Code set out in H. R. 3214, as passed by the House of Representatives, remedied the effect of the Dobson decision. In view of the elimination of the Tax Court provisions from the bill in the Senate, and the consequent elimination of section 1294, the Senate has substituted an amendment to section 1141 (a) of the Internal Revenue Code with the same result intended by section 1294. This provision, which is section 36 of the bill as it passed the Senate, restores to the circuit courts of appeal the power to review cases coming from the Tax Court in the same manner and to the same extent as they have power to review other caseswhether tax cases or nontax cases-coming from a district court in a case tried without a jury.

It will be noted that the bill does not attempt to define what is a question of law or what is a question of fact, or to answer any of the other complicated questions which would be involved in spelling out de novo the complete scope of review. The distinction between questions of law and questions of fact is one well-established in the law, and one with which lawyers and judges have long been familiar. Without the necessity of here defining it or answering any of the other difficult questions involved in defining the scope of review, it will suffice to say that whatever the scope of review over cases—whether tax cases or nontax cases—coming from a district court, the same scope of review should exist over cases coming from the Tax Court.

Mr. HAYS. Mr. Speaker, I regret very much that the motion is to agree to the Senate amendments rather than to request a conference with the Senate. The House, by an overwhelming vote, approved the transfer of the Tax Court from the executive to the judicial branch of the Government. Our position is impregnable from the standpoint of logic and constitutional intent, yet because of certain incidents in the peculiar history of this splendid court, it is classified technically as an agency of the executive branch. No one can question the fact that it is a court legislatively established as prescribed by the Constitution. The amendment to which we are asked to agree defeats the action of the House in approving its transfer to the department where it logically belongs. Our concurrence with the Senate perpetuates one of the strangest anomalies in the Government. This is an ideal time to accomplish the transfer, and I am keenly disappointed that it must be postponed. I recognize that the members of the House Judiciary Committee are reluctant to take any action that would jeopardize the passage of H. R. 3214 by insisting on the transfer of the Tax Court, and I must bow to their decision. I am confident, however, that steps will be taken to secure consideration of this transfer in separate measures, and I shall join the committee members in urging favorable action thereon when presented with the opportunity.

Mr. Speaker, let me again state my conviction that no court has a finer personnel or more distinguished record than the present Tax Court of the United States. Due recognition of this service should not be postponed indefinitely.

The Senate amendments were concurred in.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

(Mr. Reed of Illinois asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Record and include a memorandum expressing the views of the Committee on the Judiciary with respect to certain of the Senate amendments.)

SELECTIVE SERVICE ACT OF 1948

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 6401) to provide for the common defense by increasing the strength of the armed forces of the United States and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the further consideration of H. R. 6401, with Mr. Case of South Dakota in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill. Mr. ANDREWS of New York. Mr. Chairman, I offer a committee amendment to section 4, which is at the Clerk's

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Andrews of New York, as a committee amendment: On page 4, line 3, after the word "Act", insert a colon in lieu of the period, and insert the following proviso: "Provided, That no person shall be inducted or ordered into active service without his consent under this act until the President proclaims not earlier than 75 days after the date of enactment (1) that an insufficient number of persons is on active service in the armed forces to maintain an adequate national defense, and (2) that a sufficient number of such persons cannot, in his judgment, be attained by voluntary enlistment and by voluntary request for call to active duty. Immediately upon the issuance of such proclamation the provisions of this act authorizing the induction of persons into the armed forces and the ordering of persons into active service without their consent shall be effective, but no person shall be inducted or ordered into active service without his consent under this act prior to 90 days after the date of its enactment."

Page 5, line 2, strike out the words "and 23" and substitute the word "Section" for the word "Sections."

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. Mr. Chairman, I believe those who could hear the reading of the amendment will understand it very clearly. In effect, it puts off the invocation of the act for 75 days from the date of enactment, and leaves it to the President alone to invoke the act, depending upon whether enlistments at that time have met the demands of the armed forces.

I might say that this amendment was adopted by the full Committee on Armed Services about 2 weeks ago, and notification of the adoption of the amendment was transmitted to the Rules Committee. It was by unanimous vote of the committee.

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. I yield. Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. Was a similar amendment adopted in the other

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. The amendment was defeated in the other body by a substantial vote.

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska, I am wondering, since the gentleman is offering the amendment to defer the drafting for 90 days after the act goes into effect, and the President indicates it is necessary, why would it not be well to extend it another 90 days and accept the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. SHAFER], which would make it effective January 30?

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. It is an entirely different amendment. That amendment also calls for a concurrent resolution of the Congress. We might as well not enact this bill today. As soon as we get back in January we would have to take it up again. I am here in behalf of the committee amendment unanimously adopted in the committee.

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. I might suggest that if there is such a great emergency you should not wait 75 days. Either there is an emergency or there is not. You are attempting to smooth it over by saying, "We have got 90 days; we can wait." Now, do we have 90 days or not?

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. We have 75 days before the President can invoke any provision of this bill, during which time he cannot call any member of the Reserves, without his consent, or can anybody be inducted. That is simply and clearly what this amendment provides. It was unanimously adopted in the committee.

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. I yield. Mr. MHLLER of Nebraska. Then I wanted to ask the gentleman if there is any emergency at this time which makes it so necessary to get the draft into effect. We have been told all along that we could not delay; that we should move quickly. If that is true, why insert an amendment that will hold it up for 90 days?

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. I may not be expressing my personal opinion. I agreed with the committee to the adoption of the amendment.

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. You are sugar-coating it just a little, in other

Mr. CARROLL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. I yield to the gentleman from Colorado.

Mr. CARROLL. It is not quite clear to me. Is the effect of this amendment to place the burden upon the President to activate this program?

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. It is true it places the burden directly on the President of the United States at the time this period runs out, rather than on the Congress.

Mr. VINSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. I yield. Mr. VINSON. Is it not a fact that this does not place any more burden on the President than the other provision of the bill which requires the President to issue a proclamation as to when the draftees will have to register, and also to issue the proclamation when the doctors have to go into the service?

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. The President must issue proclamations in any case.

Mr. CARROLL. Mr. Chairman, will

the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. I yield.
Mr. CARROLL. Is not this in substance the same amendment that was proposed in another body, which was rejected there, an amendment which was intended to place the burden on the President?

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. It was defeated in the Senate by a substantial margin.

Mr. CARROLL. Is the gentleman now stating to this body that the other body has abandoned their position in refusing to place the onus upon the President rather than this Congress which should assume its own responsibility under this important plece of legislation?

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. That is a matter for each man's own judgment. The committee is offering this as a committee amendment which was unanimously adopted.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Chairman, will

the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. I yield.
Mr. HALLECK. Is it not fair to say that assuming this measure is enacted by the Congress and becomes law, then, of course, the mechanics of the act will begin to take effect and in the time which is covered by this amendment it is conceivable that the situation in the world might be so altered or changed that those who have the first responsibility in respect to the conduct of our foreign affairs, and even the Commander in Chief, might see a reason for not putting the act into effect.

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. No one could hope for a clarifying of certain things more than I.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Mansfield to the amendment offered by Mr. Andrews of New York: Strike out all of section 23 and insert: "This act shall be effective on the same day that a tax bill becomes effective which will tax all corporations 100 percent of all profits and earnings in excess of the average annual profits and earnings of such corporations engaged in the manufacture of war materials or any other service connected with the war effort and/or the Selective Service Act of 1948."

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the amendment on the ground that it is not germane to the bill.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Chairman, may I be heard on the point of order?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will be glad to hear the gentleman.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Now that we are considering the drafting of young men we had better start talking about drafting industry and dollars and do something about it.

An amendment somewhat similar to this was offered in the Senate and it was held to be germane in that body.

I feel that if this emergency which supposedly confronts us at the present time is of such a grave nature that we have got to pass this bill then we had better go all the way and do the job now while we have the chance to consider this matter calmly.

Mr. Chairman, I submit that this amendment is germane to this particular proposal because like the Andrews amendment it sets a beginning date as to the time when this law should go into operation.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Case of South Dakota). The Chair is prepared to rule.

The Chair calls attention to the fact that the amendment as presented would strike out all of section 23. This section is not now under consideration and for that reason a motion to strike it out would not be in order at this time.

The Chair may also say, however, as to the point raised by the gentleman from New York that the amendment proposes to make the effectiveness of this act contingent upon an unrelated matter and therefore would not be germane to the pending amendment.

The Chair sustains the point of order.
Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, section 23, under the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York, is stricken from this bill. Because of that I was forced to offer this amendment—voluntarily of course—to the amendment which he had offered so that it would be inserted in the right place.

Mr. Chairman, we are considering today a proposal to draft young American men through a selective service law into the armed forces of the United States. I offered my amendment because of my way of thinking nothing is more important than a man's life and if we are going to ask a man to serve, and perhaps die in the service of his country, then I feel we have just as much right to demand that a man's money or business can be drafted also.

Other Members have spoken on this floor in favor of selective service who said they were officers in the Army Reserve and who stated they were going back into camp this summer. I want to speak as one who served as an enlisted man in the Army, the Navy, and the Marine Corps.

I have a pretty good idea what these boys are going to be up against and I would like to speak on their behalf for a change. Boys who will be called under this act will enter the services as enlisted men and they are the ones who will be most affected by this measure. I offered my amendment because to my way of thinking nothing is more important than a man's life. If we are going to ask a man to serve and perhaps die in the service of his country, then I feel we have just as much right to ask that a man's money or business be drafted also.

One thing which has disturbed me in all our wars, is that we have consistently refused to take the profit out of war. We have seen this country spend the blood of its best young men and at the same time, we have in every war in which we have been engaged, noted how our huge corporations made tremendous profits. The cost of the last war was $336,000,000,000 plus a million casualties in killed, wounded, and missing. At the same time these enormous sacrifices were being made the corporations in this country made the huge profit of $56,000,000,000. That profit-taking spree has been accelerated and continued down to the present time.

This Congress should, in my opinion, have taken immediate action on my amendment because we all know if this amendment had been adopted, that we were expressing very forcibly the wishes of the great majority of the American people. If we are going to draft our manpower, as this bill contemplates, then I say let us also draft the moneythe high excess profits which have been one of the results of wars and which will be needed to pay for part of the twentyone billion needed to carry on our military program for 1949. If we are to put our boys back in uniform, let us put our corporations under the same military discipline. If this is a world crisis we have to win, I feel we should go all out in the matter of preparation for it. Selective service itself is just a piecemeal approach to a problem which I feel has been exaggerated. If we are really in difficulty, my suggestion would be to adopt this amendment so that we can be prepared thoroughly for the difficult days which lie ahead.

No democracy has a right to draft men for any immediate danger which is not great enough to justify and compel drafting dollars at the same time. The military can increase their power immeasurably through selective service and UMT. Wall Street and industry can be assured of huge profits through maintenance of a huge military establishment with its demands for goods and services. Both are powerful in Washington at this time and both can gain advantages from whipping up a war scare.

If the talk of the military is not a bluff, let them prove it by submitting industry to the draft, which they seek for living human beings. Not a man should be forced into uniform unless we are sure every dollar is enlisted too.

Corporations should be satisfied with normal, peacetime profits in time of war or national emergency. No one should complain about their dollars being drafted if we pass this measure to draft our young men. Now is the time to stand up and be counted on this vital issue of dollars versus men because what we do in this House today may well decide our future for generations to come.

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. Chairman, I notice that in the suggested amendment offered by the Committee on Armed Services it is trying to put a little sugar-coating on this bitter pill so it will be a little easier for you to swallow. I think the committee and this Congress will be dodging their responsibility if they say that the President must declare that an emergency exists, and then proceed to put the machinery into operation 75 days after the act passes, and it allows 90 days for the individuals who are going into the armed service.

We have been led to believe by the military that there is a grave emergency existing. We read in this bill that at the "earliest possible practical date" this conscription bill shall be put into effect. I submit if the Armed Services Committee are going to keep faith with this Congress they have no right to put in here machinery that is going to delay it until 4 or 5 days before the election. That is what it does.

Why do you put this sugar-coated provision in here? Do you think someone might swallow it a little easier? It would be far better to adopt the amendment to be offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. SHAFER] which provides that there must be a speed-up in our induction machinery—better pay for the enlisted man and then the President and the next Congress must take action by January 30, 1949—that amendment should be adopted. Then the Congress can have an opportunity to review the situation in the world.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, will

the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. DOUGHTON. If the emergency does not exist now, what is the excuse or the reason for this bill?

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. That is what I would like to know. The committee says that the emergency does not exist now.

Mr. DOUGHTON. That is what we have been told over and over again; that the emergency is not here. If it is not here, what is the reason for this bill?

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Chairman, will

the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. KEATING. Should it not also be pointed out that under the Shafer amendment the Army is required to take specific steps to get volunteer enlistments before the bill goes into effect, whereas under this amendment there is no such provision for any such action on the part of the Army.

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. That is correct. As I understand under the Shafer amendment there will be an increase of 10 percent in the pay of the enlisted men and the military must take some certain, definite steps to get enlistments in the Army, which they have not been doing up to this time.

Mr. BENDER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. BENDER. Dr. MILLER, how can we talk about adjourning here on Saturday and at the same time drafting these boys into the service on the basis of a great emergency existing? If an emergency exists, then we ought to stay right here and work with it.

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. In this amendment the committee tells us that the emergency no longer exists.

Mr. REDDEN. Mr. Chairman, will

the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. REDDEN. I have been led to believe that a great emergency does exist which necessitates the passage of the very type of legislation that is before the House. Frankly, I had intended to vote for this bill because I believed, in good faith, that an emergency did exist. But, if it does not exist, and the committee by this amendment admits that it does not exist, I see no reason for the law at all. Why not just let it go along until the Congress can determine that an emergency does exist?

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. Certainly I think the committee weakens the bill when they tell us there is an emergency existing, and then come in with machinery that puts the responsibility on the President, dodging our responsibility, mind you, by saying, "Well now, we think there ought to be, but you tell us, Mr. President, when it ought to be. You put it into effect."

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Nebraska has expired.

Mr. BARDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I think the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. MILLER] has raised a very pertinent question here. I am a little surprised to hear that the Committee on Military Affairs has unanimously agreed on the amendment postponing the operation of this act.

I would like to ask the gentleman from New York [Mr. Andrews] a question. As I understand the amendment, it postpones the operation of this law for 75 days, at least, and then it is 90 days before any man can be drafted; is that correct?

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. It postpones the induction of the men; that is right. In the meantime it simply defers for 75 days the date on which the President would be required to make his proclamation.

Mr. BARDEN. In doing that the committee unanimously reached the conclusion that there was no such emergency existing as to jeopardize this country or the safety of this country for 75 or 90 days; is that correct?

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. That: is correct, but while there may not be an international crisis today there is an intense manpower need. We do not know what the lack of these men is going to mean if it goes on.

Mr. BARDEN. The committee gave all that consideration at the time it adopted this committee amendment unanimously, did it not?

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. That is

Mr. BARDEN. And by so doing your committee unanimously agreed that no real emergency exists, but you have kind of salved over the situation, and now you are going to give the Army 75 days to try to recruit men, are you not?

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. No, we are going to give 75 days more to the President to decide whether it is really needed, to see if we can get them, to see if there is any improvement in the situation.

Mr. BARDEN. And to see whether or not the Army has been able to recruit the needed men, is not that right?

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. As far as I personally am concerned, I think we ought to invoke the act immediately.

today, at midnight.

Mr. BARDEN. But the gentleman did not vote that way on this amendment, did he?

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. No. Mr. BARDEN. Does not the gentleman feel that a little added inducement would enable the Army to recruit more men in the next 75 days, that is, to offer the men a little bit better pay from sergeant down?

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. No, I do not think that will make much difference. However, if selective service goes into effect today voluntary enlistments would automatically go up in all the services. Studies made throughout the war showed that that immediately takes place.

The gentleman asked me how I voted. How did he vote on the 70-group air force?

Mr. BARDEN. I voted for it. Mr. ANDREWS of New York. That is what I thought.

Mr. BARDEN. I would vote for it again. The only thing I want to do is see that it is made active and available.

Mr. GAVIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARDEN. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. GAVIN. I have a very high regard for the gentleman's opinion, and when he voted for the 70-group air force and the House voted overwhelmingly for it, 349 to 3, I believe. Where are you going to get the men to implement ground forces to support the 70-group air force? You all wanted the 70-group air force and now the question is of developing a program to support with ground forces the proposed Air Force set-up.

Mr. BARDEN. I would get the men to implement the Air Force the same way you are going to get the planes for them to fly. I would pay them to go into the Air Force, just as you will pay the men in the factories to build the airplanes they are going to use. You would force the men to go into the ranks as privates at $75 a month, but the very same gentlemen, sitting right there, will appropriate billions to pay the men who make the airplanes, and pay them at the rate of $2 an hour or better.

Mr. GAVIN. The same thing goes for the gentleman.

Mr. BARDEN. That is my answer to the gentleman's question. Voting for the Air Force has no bearing on this issue.

Mr. GAVIN. The gentleman was glad to endorse the legislation, so I say the same principle applies to him.

Mr. BARDEN. Of course, I agree with the gentleman about an enlarged Air Force. But why not be as fair to those taken in the Army as those who build

Mr. GAVIN. When the 70-group air force was being considered, and Secretary of National Defense said that we needed a rounded-out service and that 55 groups would suffice for the time being, the gentleman wanted a 70-group air force. Now you have it. How are you going to implement it?

Mr. BARDEN. I am going to implement it by being fair to the men who operate and keep up the planes and offer sufficient pay inducement and incentive that we will get sufficient vountary en-

Mr. GAVIN. The gentleman has not offered any suggestion as to how it should

Mr. BARDEN. I am going to implement it by paying the men and being fair to them. The gentleman knows it is not fair to force them into the service without fair compensation-and if fair compensation and inducements are offered you will get sufficient men without the draft.

Mr. McGARVEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. McGARVEY. Mr. Chairman, I am strongly opposed to this bill. After listening to the many arguments for and against it, and after careful reflection, I believe that the opponents of the bill have made out a strong case against

They have proved to my satisfaction that there is no need at this time for an increase in our military manpower. The voluntary system of enlistments would suffice if the Army had not raised its peacetime standards too high, and if certain reforms were made within the armed forces. It might be pointed out that the true unification of the armed services as provided by Congress during the first session of the Eightieth Congress would go further toward strengthening our national security than any draft law. Action on the part of the Defense Establishment to carry out the intent of Congress in this respect is long overdue. Until this is done, I do not advocate passage of any legislation placing the lives of the youth of the Nation at the disposal of men who cannot even resolve the differences caused by the old feuds and petty jealousies among the services. It would be worse than futile-it would be a betrayal of the trust which the American people showed when they voted us into office.

Moreover, Mr. Chairman, I apprehend that the revival of the draft would be regarded by other nations as an aggressive act on the part of the United States and proof of lack of faith in the methods of international cooperation which we have been advocating. It would tend to accelerate the armaments race and so bring us one step nearer to the third world war. A weapon is a dangerous thing to possess even when one does not intend to use it. An army of young men at the disposal of men trained to use them in warfare could be disastrous in time of peace.

I am also opposed to the draft on economy grounds. The cost of this program would be heavy. And it would inevitably be followed by an increase in the tax burden. The expenditure of billions for defense will mean a reduction in the levels of living of the American people as well as the impairment of public services of which the Nation is in great need.

I concede the necessity of the draft in time of war, Mr. Chairman, but to impose it in time of peace would be contrary to our priceless American heritage of human liberty. It would be a step in the direction of the complete militarization of the country. It would exalt the military over the civil branches of the Government. What real assurance have we that the draft will not be expanded in the future and that the safeguards proposed at this time will not be

This program may well be regarded as an effort to cover up the mistakes of our foreign policy. In my opinion, we have not yet exhausted all the other ways of dealing with the Soviet Union. It is a confession of moral bankruptcy and acknowledgment to the world that a system of government based upon the freedom and dignity of the individual has been tried in time of crises and found lacking. We must remember that our democratic traditions are supposed to function in time of stress as well as in times of peace and plenty.

But the arguments against this bill, Mr. Chairman, which seem most convincing to me are those which relate to its impact upon the young men of America. Hundreds of thousands of young men recently graduated from our high schools and colleges, are now making good in business and the professions. Others are in the midst of their college work. Passage of this bill would mean that their education and business careers would be interrupted with incalculable results. The diversion of thousands of young men from industry will cause a decline in our industrial production and a corresponding economic loss to the Nation. Other young men will be taken from the farms and service trades which depend upon their work. Are we forgetting so soon that at the time of the last peacetime draft, the youth of the country were sent to fight and die on foreign soil even though we were promised "again, and again, and again" that such a thing would not happen?

Mr. Chairman, I agree with the many labor, farm, religious, educational, and civic organizations whose leaders have opposed this bill. And for all these reasons I intend to vote against it.

Mr. CARROLL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, and ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from

There was no objection.

Mr. CARROLL. Mr. Chairman, it is quite clear to me that the chairman and other members of the Armed Services Committee evidently have been subjected to great pressure since yesterday's adjournment. I do not want to appear to be too critical but in view of the almost complete reversal of the committee's position by presenting the amendment under consideration, I feel it is my duty to comment on the situation which now confronts us.

First, however, I should like to ask the chairman of the committee to explain to the Members of the House the difference between the bill which the House has under consideration and the bill recently passed by the Senate concerning the same subject matter. In short, I want to know the difference, if any, of the date when selective service is to

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. The difference between the Senate bill and ours is that under the Senate bill the process would start immediately.

Mr. CARROLL. In other words, under the terms of the bill passed by the other body, the act becomes operative imme-

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. That is correct.

Mr. CARROLL. And according to this bill, 75 days would elapse before this selective-service law becomes effective.

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. In about 90 days, because it is presumed that it will take from 75 to 90 days to get the thing in operation.

Mr. CARROLL. Mr. Chairman, the committee's position on the pending amendment is clearly a retreat on their part from the position which they have heretofore taken. I suppose the committee is fearful that this legislation will not pass and therefore is sugar-coating the pill. This amendment is a callous attempt to shift the responsibility from this body to the executive branch of the Government, in which the President of the United States will be called upon to activate this program. If we accept this amendment this is notice to the people of our Nation that we are reluctant to meet the issue which now confronts this body-head-on. This amendment is in the nature of a defense mechanism; it is an attempt to shirk a duty which so clearly belongs to the legislative branch of this Nation.

There is no doubt that all of us have given a great deal of study and attention to this perplexing problem. It is an especially difficult situation to meet in an election year. For my part, it is a subject to which I have given weeks and months of study in the hope that somewhere along the line I would gain enough information to reach a proper conclusion. As a result of intensive study. I have come to the conclusion that it is in the interest of this Nation and of the peace of the world to have a strong nationalsecurity program.

I shall confess, frankly, the dangers involved in the passage of this type of legislation, but as I weigh them against the possible dangers that confront us if we do not act now, it seems to me there is no alternative unless we are prepared to gamble with the peace of the world and the future of our own Nation.

As I look back upon my service and acquaintance with the Members of the Eightieth Congress, I cannot help but believe that we have enough courageenough personal courage-to face our individual responsibilities—not only representing people in our particular congressional districts, but that we shall have the courage to assume our responsibilities as Members of Congress in representing that which is good for the whole Nation. How can we in good faith, how can we avoid the indictment of political cowardice if we accept this amendment, an amendment which is purely political in its nature and is designed to shift our responsibilities upon the President of the United States? The responsibility is with this body and not with the President.

There is nothing new in this amendment. As this same legislation was being debated just a week or 10 days ago in the Senate of the United States, an effort was made to enact the same amendment which would have the same effect of shifting responsibility upon the President in the drafting of the young men of this Nation. I cannot recall just how many voted for the amendment, but it is sufficient to say that it was rejected with a substantial majority.

I call upon you to assume your individual responsibility as members of a legislative body of a great democracy. Do not run away from this issue for fear of facing your people at home. If you are in favor of this legislation, vote for it. If you think selective service is not necessary at this time, vote against the bill; then go back home to meet your people and look them in the eye, giving them your honest opinion. Let every tub stand on its own bottom. Certainly consci-entious Members of the House should not try to shift their responsibility to someone else for political advancement. Do not try to put the burden upon the President of the United States.

Every Member here owes it to his people at home, and to the people of the Nation, and to the men who are going to be drafted into the service of this Nation, to stand up in a forthright and courageous manner on this important issue.

As I followed the debate in the Senate of the United States when a similar bill was under consideration, and as I have heard the debates before the House, one would be led to believe that we are discussing different bills. The truth is that the basic principle of both bills is the same. However, during the debates before the other body there seemed to be none of the fear and reluctance to face the issue that has been characteristic of this debate so far. In the Senate, as they proceeded from section to section of the bill, there was intelligent questioning-careful, calm, considered, mature judgment being exercised. Great emphasis was placed upon the future and security of this Nation and the peace of the world.

In the Senate debate the leaders talked about building up the Reserve components and the National Guard. On the other hand, in this body so far little light has been thrown upon that latter subject, although that is one of the most important aspects of the bill. In the other body there was intelligent probing by many Members, seeking the best means and the best manner to build up the forces of this Nation in order to implement a program for peace. There was little talk about the threat of war and almost every Member who spoke upon the floor of that body laid particular stress upon the point that selective service legislation is not a war measure, and that in the passage of this type of legislation this Nation was not threatening the other nations of the world: that we do not want to incite the other nations of the world to believe that this is a war measure. Again and again it was emphasized that in the light of recent events and the conditions existing in the world today that this measure had become an imperative necessity for our national security and for the peace of the world.

It is significant, Mr. Chairman, that at the conclusion of 5 days' deliberation, able men of different political philosophies voted in favor of legislation which is almost identical with the bill we have under consideration. The vote of that body was 78 for the bill and 10 against.

Mr. Chairman, as a veteran of two wars, I know something about the problems of the men in service, the problems of the families who have men in service, and the devastating effect of war. My record is known to all who care to read of my stand on the military hierarchy in general, and the possible danger of the military reaching so dominant a position in our national life.

I am bitterly opposed to war and have advocated and will continue to advocate the strengthening of the United Nations and any world cooperation program that will bring us peace. Nothing would please me more than to be able to vote against this type of legislation but in view of all the circumstances, and in view of the advice of leaders whose duty it is to know, and in view of the action of the Senate of the United States, I feel that I cannot in good conscience vote against this measure, pitting my limited knowledge against the overwhelming weight of the judgment and decisions of others whose knowledge and experience is far superior to mine.

So that the record may be crystal clear. I want it distinctly understood that I do not subscribe to the theory or the philosophy of a permanent, continuous. compulsory military program, nor am I in favor of a tremendous Reserve program except insofar as it is necessary to replenish and replace a reasonable Regular Military Establishment. Were it not for existing world conditions I would not under any circumstances, cast my vote to compel any American to serve in the military forces of this Nation. Let the record show also, that in the event the international tensions have eased at the expiration of this act, I shall vote to abolish any system of compulsory mili-

Speaking also for the record, I should like to point out that in my opinion this body has the cart before the horse. Only the urgent necessity of the occasion compels my favorable consideration of this type of legislation. The failure of this Congress to act on other important measures imperils the security of this Nation. For example, the total disregard of the leadership of this body of the problems of inflation threatens not only our own national economy but our national security and eventually the cause of world peace itself. This piecemeal treatment of basic problems may well lead us along the path to economic chaos. I cannot emphasize too strongly that an economic bust in this Nation will imperil our national security and certainly will destroy whatever position we hold as a leader in the United Nations and in the search for world peace. The leadership of this body is either ignorant of or deliberately avoids proper treatment of problems which affect millions of our people. I refer to the increase in the cost of living, housing, Federal aid to education, and similar measures which concern the welfare of the people.

I have stated my position on this measure in order to demonstrate that there is no need for one to be fearful or apprehensive as to the soundness of his decision when he goes home to face his people, if he has a sincere and abiding conviction that he is acting in the national interests and acting in the interests of world peace.

And so I repeat, Mr. Chairman, I sincerely trust that the committee's amendment will be rejected and that we, as Members of this great body, shall cast our votes honestly and courageously, and will not be a party to any political plot which seeks to throw the burden upon the President of the United States.

Under the Constitution, it is our duty to make the laws. It is the duty of the President of the United States to execute the laws which we make. In a Presidential election year, if we attempt to shirk our duty you may be assured that such action will not fool the people.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Colorado has expired.

Mr. CARROLL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for three additional minutes.

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. Mr. Chairman, I am very sorry, but we are working under pressure as we are now running into the last 3 days of this session of the Congress. It seems best that we limit ourselves accordingly.

Mr. KILDAY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of this amendment.

I do not believe it involves anything fundamental in connection with the bill. This is one bill coming before the Congress that was written by your commit-This bill was not written in any Government department. The bill went through a number of committee prints before it was ever brought to the House. Several of those committee prints contained provisions similar to the one that is now offered as a committee amendment. When the bill was offered it contained another provision. No one has mentioned it in the debate. The bill as reported by the committee had exactly the same time lag in it as is provided in this amendment.

Section 23 of the bill, on page 49, as it is pending here, provides that no person shall be inducted under this act within 90 days after the date of its enactment. This amendment does the same thing, except that if, within a period of 75 days, voluntary recruitment is sufficient, then the President would not have to put it into effect, if he did not see fit to do so.

Now, we are attempting in this bill, by many provisions, to secure voluntary enlistments and to augment the Reserve components—I agree with the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. Carroll]; I wish we could get down to discussing those provisions in the bill—we have had to spend so much time yesterday, and apparently we are going to do the same thing today, listening to opponents to any measure of this sort, attempting to perfect it. Frankly, I am a little suspicious of opponents of a bill perfecting it; but that is the situation with which we are confronted

In this bill we attempt to channel into the armed forces by voluntary recruitments and into the Reserve components, just as many men as we can.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Chairman, will

the gentleman yield?

Mr. KILDAY. I yield. Mr. HALLECK. I sought to have the gentleman from Colorado yield, but he declined to do so. If I understood him correctly, he said he was against this bill. Possibly his opposition to this amendment is because it would make it more difficult for him to vote against the bill.

Mr. KILDAY. I understood the gentleman to say that he could not in good conscience vote against the bill.

Mr. CARROLL. Mr. Chairman, will

the gentleman yield?

Mr. KILDAY. I yield. Mr. CARROLL. I thought my remarks were very clear, that I was not opposed to this bill. But whether or not I would be for it or against it, I would have the courage to cast my vote based upon my convictions, and based upon the debates held here.

Mr. KILDAY. I understood the gentleman to say that he wished in good conscience he could vote against the bill.

Mr. HALLECK. I am sorry, but I misunderstood what the gentleman from Colorado said.

Mr. KILDAY. The point about placing the burden on the President is apparent, but not real. The entire bill provides that the President must issue his proclamation for the date of registration. The President must issue a proclamation for the quotas to be inducted. He has to do everything to put this bill into effect. So that all you do by this amendment is to make it clear that the machinery is here in a stand-by position. The Army, the Navy, and the Air Force are parts of the executive department of the Government and operate under the President. They know how many they have, how many they need, how many they expect to get. When they reach the point where they feel they will not get all they need, they inform the President and he issues a proclamation. At the same time, if they do secure adequate numbers by voluntary enlistments, then they will not have the inductions. That is what we wantto get as many as we possibly can by voluntary enlistments, and to channel as many as possible into the Reserve components.

Mr. FOLGER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KILDAY. I yield. Mr. FOLGER. Under this amendment could the President make any invocation until 75 days shall have elapsed?

Mr. KILDAY. He could not. Under the provisions of the bill nothing could happen for a period of 90 days. So it is exactly the same period of time, because he must issue his proclamation no earlier than 75 days, and the inductions could not become effective in less than 90 days. So the time lag is exactly the

Mr. COLE of New York. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KILDAY. I yield.

Mr. COLE of New York. Would not the gentleman agree that if the amendment is adopted, the provisions of the bill are not held in abeyance-are not in a stand-by position?

Mr. KILDAY. It will take 90 days. Mr. COLE of New York. As a matter of fact, the mechanics of the bill start in motion when the bill is signed by the President. Men will be required to register, and it is assumed that it will require 90 days for the registration. So there is no delay and no postponement.

Mr. KILDAY. I am glad the gentleman mentioned that. The only thing that is postponed is the induction. The registration begins and even the classification.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment close in 20 minutes

Mr. SHAFER. Mr. Chairman, I object. In fact, I intend to offer a substi-

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that debate on this amendment close in 30 minutes.

Mr. SHAFER. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, the gentleman's limitation is merely to this one amend-

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. Yes, I merely ask for a limitation on this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment close in 30 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MULTER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MULTER to the amendment offered by Mr. Andrews of New York: Strike out the words "75 days" and insert "150 days."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York is recognized for 3 minutes.

Mr. MULTER. Mr. Chairman, I still believe in American ideals. I have announced on and off the floor of this House that I am for a draft; and, if you please, I am for universal military train-

I trust that this bill when it comes to final passage will be in such form that I can vote for it. I also hope that in the true spirit of our country this bill and national security are not going to be made a political football.

The 75-day provision contained in the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York would require this proclamation to be made upon the eve of a national election. If no politics are being played with this amendment and with this bill, there should be no objection to changing that time to 150 days so that it will come after the election instead of before.

I urge, therefore, that the Committee accept my amendment to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. MULTER] to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. Andrews].

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BUFFETT. Mr. Chairman-

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from Nebraska rise? Mr. BUFFETT. I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. Mr. Chairman, I submitted a consent request to the House limiting debate and based the time estimate on the number of Members standing seeking recognition. They should be recognized.

The CHAIRMAN. But unless a Member seeks recognition the Chair is not going to call any Member to speak.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will

Mr. MORRIS. If a number of those originally desired to be heard do not now desire to be heard will the rest of us have as much as 5 minutes apiece? That is all I want, but I do want that much time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair took down the names of those Members who were on their feet at the time the consent request was submitted and the Chair is endeavoring to divide the time equally between them.

Mr. SHAFER. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SHAFER. Was the limitation in the request submitted by the gentleman from New York to his own amendment only?

The CHAIRMAN. The consent agreement was that all debate on his amendment conclude in 30 minutes.

Mr. SHAFER. That would not include any amendment to the amendment or any substitute amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. It would not. The gentleman from Nebraska is recognized for 3 minutes.

Mr. BUFFETT. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to this amendment.

Mr. Chairman, either there is an emergency now on which this Congress should act or there is not an emergency. It has to be either one or the other.

Here we have a situation that involves the most important issue that mankind has ever had before it, the issue of compulsion versus freedom. Certainly there should not be any attempt to cut off debate on the most important issue before Congress: Compulsion or freedom.

I can remember 2 years ago when this House in a moment of overexcitement passed a conscription bill. Most of you remember it. Most of you also remember that 48 hours after that conscription bill was passed most of the Members of this House deeply regretted it.

That was when the President came in and wanted to draft strikers into the Army.

Now we have another proposal that would regiment the people of our land. The amendment that would put this draft off for 90 days is a device of psychological terrorism. Mr. Chairman, in my draft off for 90 days is a device of psychological terrorism. Mr. Chairman, in my opinion, it is below the dignity of this House to use one of the favorite Nazi tricks, the device of psychological terrorism, on the youth of America.

Mr. Chairman, I have one further word for my Republican colleagues. We have seen the administration throw the Atlantic Charter into the wastebasket, we have seen the administration throw the four freedoms into the wastebasket, we have seen them break one pledge after another.

Now what pledge did the Republican Party make to the people 2 years ago when we were elected to a majority in this House? Let me read it to you:

Neither the war nor any other excuse shall be justification for fastening regimentation permanently upon the American people.

Here in this House is a Republican majority elected on the pledge to end regimentation. Now that same Republican majority is going to turn around and completely repudiate its commitment to the American people.

My mind goes back to when the Republican Party was started. It was started on the glorious promise to set men free, to bring freedom to all people of America.

I can think of nothing more tragic than for this Republican Congress to reverse that tradition and surrender the freedom from the people.

Could there be any worse betrayal for our party to make, a party that rose to greatness on establishing freedom for all the people of this country?

Would it not be a tragedy for our party to turn around now and take away the freedom of its young people, those who cannot protect themselves?

It would be much more just if we were to pass a law drafting men from 40 to 50, those who would make better policemen abroad because of their age and experience.

But, no, we are going to take the 19and 20-year-olds and send them over to Germany and Japan to teach those people about freedom.

Is there anything more ridiculous than that? Is there anything more fantastic than to deprive the young men of their liberty, on the pretense of sending them to Japan or Germany to teach those peomle about freedom and liberty?

Does anybody think this kind of hypocrisy, this kind of double talk, is going to fool the people of America or of the

Mr. Chairman, you will not save this country from communism, by hypocrisy, and double dealing.

If there is an emergency, then the advocates of this measure should ask an immediate draft. They have exposed the hollowness of the whole scheme by amending the bill to delay the draft for 3 months or more.

The amendment should be defeated.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from California [Mr. HOLIFIELD].

PEACETIME CONSCRIPTION IS NOT THE ANSWER TO THE PROBLEM OF OBTAINING WORLD PEACE

Mr. HOLIFIELD. Mr. Chairman, we are faced today with a bill which calls for the enactment of peacetime conscription of young men into the armed forces for a period of 2 years.

This bill calls for a revolutionary change in a policy of American democracy which has existed for 165 years. That policy has declared heretofore that no citizen of the United States shall be forced into military service during peacetime. Our constitutional fathers specifically repudiated peacetime conscription for military service. Enforced military service in Europe was one of the strongest factors in the prolongation of tyrannical monarchies and one of the chief reasons for early migration to America.

For 165 years we have carried on in the American tradition. During that time we have fought several great wars. We have never suffered military defeat, although our military forces drew their personnel from a citizenry of nonregimented, nonprofessional military class, and was based primarily on volunteer troops. It is true that we have supplemented our volunteer troops in wartime with conscripted personnel, but we have never departed in peacetime from our traditional position of a volunteer regular military force.

We have proven in every war worthy of mention that armies of free men can outwork and outfight the nations whose armies were based on conscripted slave workers and soldiers.

I cite as examples the defeat of Germany in World War I. A Germany that practiced peacetime conscription and trained her citizens in the militaristic Prussian method for conquest by war. The free armies of England, France, and the United States defeated Germany.

the United States defeated Germany.

Again in World War II, the armies of Japan, Italy, and Germany were professionally trained through peacetime conscription of their soldiers, and yet they went down to defeat under the genius and initiative of citizen soldiers drawn from the free democracies of the United States, Great Britain, and our allies—none of whom practiced peacetime conscription.

What has happened to cause us to consider reversing the American tradition which has proven successful, and now causes us to embrace the Prussian theory of militarism contained in this bill?

In my opinion, we are falling victim to the propaganda of the professional militarists of the late war, generals and colonels and majors who see their wartime jobs disappearing and know that their return to civilian life will mean a reduction in pay, privileges, and authority. We are also falling victim to the propaganda of the war munition and matériel manufacturers, whose wartime profits have ceased.

We are also absorbing the propaganda of the people who say that war with Russia is inevitable, who in their hysteria of fear have turned their backs on the United Nations and returned to militaristic nationalism as the formula for a peaceful world. Such a formula is madness, it means an armament race which will cost us $17,500,000,000 in the next fiscal year, and $21,000,000,000 the second fiscal year, and more thereafter. These amounts are based on testimony before the Armed Services Committee. Even this cost might be absorbed, although extremely inflationary and dangerous, if militaristic nationalism was the answer, but it is not the answer to the problem of obtaining a peaceful world.

It is a return to the discredited methods which have caused all our wars. Intense nationalism plus military rearming on the part of competing nations has always been the formula for war.

If we embark on this course we turn our back on all our hopes of achieving world peace through the United Nations. We confess that we have no faith in the glorious concept of peace for mankind through international law, through peaceful negotiation under rules of justice and equity. Peace obtained by majority decision of nations sitting in calm tribunals, rendering judgment in light of the rules of international justice and the great spirited and moral precepts.

I do not believe that we are ready to desert the principles of the United Nations and discard the hope of world peace contained therein for the discredited law of the nationalistic jungle.

And yet that is the meaning of peacetime conscription. It is the first step toward militarism. It lays the foundation for a permanent military caste in the United States. We lay the foundation for a complete reversal of our former concept of democratic government, that is, the concept that the civilian shall dominate our society and the military shall be subservient to the civilian. It is the nose of the camel under the tent, the body of the camel will follow and the owner of the tent will be ejected.

Mr. Chairman, there are many reasons why peacetime conscription of our boys from 18 to 26 should not be adopted. One of the most important reasons is that the war of the future will not be fought by mass armies. The military leaders of today are planning for the wars of yesterday when they advocate peacetime conscription to build mass armies.

They are ignoring the capacity for immediate destruction contained in atomic bombs. Long wars are a thing of the past, future wars will be decided in days. Great centers of population and industrial production will be destroyed in days, not by months and years of long-range, old-style bombing.

Destruction will be so complete that occupation will be both unnecessary and unprofitable.

Complete defense against aircraft or air missiles which are atomic-armed is impossible, as proven by the testimony of our greatest military leaders, and yet anything short of complete defense is useless. Why? Because one aircraft carrying a modern atomic bomb can eliminate any modern industrial center from the war effort.

We are, in this bill for peacetime conscription, helping to perpetuate the military concept of World War II. We are duplicating the shortsighted judgment of the military leaders of the postwar I period, who court-martialed Billy Mitchell because he said the next war would be an air war.

We are building a Maginot line not of concrete and steel, as France did after World War I, but we are building a Maginot line of the bodies of our 18-year-old boys. Their bodies and all the obsolete methods of past wars will not protect us against atomic destruction.

Mankind cannot afford the luxury of another war. A war which will be decided by atomic and bacteriological methods, so destructive that civilization cannot withstand the shock.

There is only one hope for world peace, and that hope lies in the application of the principle of righteousness in the United Nations. This we can do only through the help of Almighty God. May we realize that the arm of flesh will fail us before it is too late. Let us bend all our energies, our statesmanship, and our resources to making the United Nations work.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. MARTIN].

Mr. MARTIN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, yesterday I gave you some information that was presented before the Ordnance Association in Detroit last week showing very conclusively that we do not have balanced arms or ammunition available to equip six and one-half divisions. Just a few minutes ago when the appropriation bill, H. R. 6935, was before us, there passed without comment, because of the extreme rush, consideration of the stock pile appropriation, and on page 17 of the hearings on the bill H. R. 6935 you will find that Mr. Thomas J. Hargrave, Chairman of the Munitions Board, testified before the Committee on Appropriations that in 2 years of effort since the enactment of Public Law 520 of the Seventy-ninth Congress they have actually accomplished about 10 percent of the objectives on stock piling; that we are now literally behind the eight ball, and on that basis it will take probably 10 years to achieve our objective on stock piling. I would like to know what you are going to say to your constituents when you explain to them when you go back home that you have just gone that far in the matter of providing your boys with adequate weapons, in providing them with a 10 percent stock pile to provide more modern weapons in case the war should strike. I think it is very untimely to resort to the manpower draft first and in that way get the cart before the horse. I regret very much that we have failed so miserably in providing an adequate national defense on every other front, and yet we hysterically reach out now for the drafting of men in peacetime. Unlike the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. CARROLL], I have no hesitancy in facing my constituents and telling them frankly and straightforwardly that I am opposed to the draft in peacetime. I have told them that for 27 years. I was sent to my congressional district by the War Department as a teacher of military science and tactics. My people know where I stand and I do not have to stutter about it. I think I have a thorough understanding of what is sound national defense, and I would hate terribly to see Congress place the draft for military service in peacetime ahead of the common-sense provision of the supply of arms that our boys need, and of the stock piles we need for the modernizing of equipment that will be needed in any future war.

For the better information of Congress in the consideration of the issue here under consideration I quote the questions asked of Mr. Hargrave by the gentleman from New Jersey, Hon. Gordon Canfield, member of the Appropriations Committee, and Mr. Hargrave's replies:

NEED FOR SPEEDING UP PROGRAM

Mr. Canfield. Mr. Hargrave, the goal for the completion of these stock piles is the end of the fiscal year 1951. Do you believe that this program should be speeded up in the light of the current international situation?

Mr. HARGRAVE. I believe it should. Regardless of the present situation, I have always believed that the stock piles should be materialized within the 5-year period, which is the original goal. Actually, we are very considerably behind the 8 ball now, so far as the quantity of the stock pile is concerned. Actually I believe we have built up about 10 percent of our objective in 2 years, two full years of the operation of the stock piling, and on that basis it would take considerably longer than a 10-year period. However, I will say that our accelerated rate has gone up very much during the first half of the fiscal year 1948.

Mr. Mack. Yes, indeed.

Mr. HARGRAVE. And I think that acceleration will be continued.

Mr. Canfield. Has the Board received any instructions from higher authority to accelerate this program?

Mr. HARGRAVE. None that I know of.

Mr. SHAFER. Mr. Chairman, I offer a substitute for the committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Substitute amendment offered by Mr. Shaper for the committee amendment:

"SEC. —, (a) No person shall be registered or inducted under this act before January 31, 1949, and no person shall be registered or inducted under this act on or after January 31, 1949, unless the President and the Congress (by law enacted on or after such date) find that the requisite manpower strengths of the armed forces have not been attained and maintained by an intensified voluntary enlightment campaign.

voluntary enlistment campaign.

"(b) (1) The Secretary of the Army, the Secretary of the Navy, and the Secretary of the Air Force are authorized and directed to initiate and carry forward an intensified voluntary enlistment campaign. For the purposes of such campaign and notwithstanding any other provisions of law—

"(A) the base pay of enlisted men on active duty in the armed forces of the United States is hereby increased by 10 percent:

is hereby increased by 10 percent;

"(B) the passing mark on the Army General Classification Test shall not exceed 70 points."

points;
"(C) original enlistments in the armed forces for periods of 2 years shall be accepted from among all age groups suitable for military service, with such enlistment privileges as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Army, the Secretary of the Navy, or the Secretary of the Air Force, as the case may be, which shall be the same or similar to the enlistment privileges now provided for enlistments for periods of more than 2 years; and

"(D) reenlistments in the armed forces for periods of 1 or 2 years, at the option of the person so enlisted, shall be accepted with such reenlistment privileges as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Army, the Secretary of the Navy, or the Secretary of the Air Force, as the case may be, which shall be the same or similar to the enlistment privileges now provided for reenlistments for longer periods.

"(2) The Secretary of the Army, the Secretary of the Navy, and the Secretary of the Air Force shall each consult with, and make a monthly report to, the Joint Committee on Voluntary Enlistments with respect to the methods and results of the intensified voluntary enlistment campaign carried on pursuant to this section.

"Sec. —. (a) There is hereby created a joint congressional committee to be known as the Joint Committee on Voluntary Enlistments (hereinafter referred to as the "joint committee"), to be composed of five members of the Committee on Armed Services of the Senate, to be appointed by the President pro tempore of the Senate, and five members of the Committee on Armed Services of the House of Representatives, to be appointed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives. A vacancy in the membership of the joint committee shall not affect the powers of the remaining members to execute the functions of the joint committee and shall be filled in the same manner as the original selection. The joint committee shall select a chairman and a vice chairman from among its members.

"(b) The joint committee shall conduct a thorough study and investigation of the voluntary enlistment campaign required by section 23 of this act and shall report to the Senate and the House of Representatives the results of its study and investigation, together with such recommendations as to necessary legislation and such other recommendations as it may deem advisable, not later than January 2, 1949.

'(c) The joint committee, or any subcommittee thereof, is authorized to hold hearings, to sit and act at such times and places within the United States during the sessions, recesses, and adjourned periods of the Eightieth Congress, to require, by subpena or otherwise, the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such books, papers, and documents, to administer oaths, to take such testimony, to procure such printing and binding, and to make such expenditures, as it deems advisable. The cost of stenographic services to report such hearings shall not be in excess of 25 cents per 100 words. Subpenas shall be issued under the signature of the chairman or vice chairman of the joint committee and shall be served by any person designated by them. The provisions of sections 102 to 104, inclusive, of the Revised Statutes shall apply in case of any failure of any witness to comply with a subpena or to testify when summoned under authority of this subsection.

"(d) The joint committee shall have the power to appoint and fix the compensation of such experts and such clerical, stenographic, and other assistants as it deems ad-sable."

Mr. COLE of New York. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan that it is not germane to the amendment for which it is offered as a substitute. It very obviously contains subject matter the provisions of which are not even contemplated by the bill, let alone the committee amendment for which it seeks to serve as a substitute.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Michigan desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. SHAFER. Yes, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Chairman, this amendment, I believe, is germane because it has to do with the drafting of men into the United States Army or the delaying of the drafting of men into the Army. The amend-ment just offered dealt with giving them extra time so far as putting the legislation into effect.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Case of South Dakota). The Chair is ready to rule. The Chair invites attention to the fact that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. SHAFER] is offered as a substitute for an amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. Andrews]. The amendment for which it is offered as a substitute is limited to certain things. It relates wholly to the time of induction and the determination that a sufficient number cannot in the judgment of the President be obtained by voluntary enlistment and by voluntary requests for call to active duty. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Shafer] goes far beyond the scope of the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. Andrews] and proposes to create a joint congressional committee and deals with other matters beyond the scope of the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York,

The Chair is constrained to rule that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. SHAFER] is not germane as a substitute for the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. Andrews].

The Chair sustains the point of order. Mr. SHAFER. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SHAFER. Mr. Chairman, will my amendment be germane at a later time?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is hardly in a position to pass on that at this time. The Chair will consider that when the amendment is offered. That will depend partly on what it may be offered as a substitute for; whether it is offered as a direct amendment to the bill; its relation to the matter concerned at the point that it may be offered; and upon the condition of the bill at the time it may be offered.

The question is on the committee amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. Andrews].

Mr. LECOMPTE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment may again be read for the information of the Committee.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

The Clerk again read the amendment. The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. An-DREWS].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. Mansfield) there were-ayes 145, noes 38.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ANDERSON of California. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment which is at the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Anderson of California: On page 6, after line 16, insert a new paragraph, as follows:

"No persons shall be inducted under paragraphs (1) and (2) above until and unless the President shall find and so advise the President pro tempore of the Senate and Speaker of the House of Representatives, not before 3 months after the date of enact-ment of this act, that insufficient numbers of doctors of medicine, dentists, veterinarians, optometrists, osteopaths, and pharmacists have volunteered for service in the armed forces to maintain the ratio specified in said subsections. Upon such advice to the President pro tempore of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives, the authority in said subsections to induct persons into the armed forces shall become effective immediately."

Mr. ANDERSON of California. Mr. Chairman, I want to make it clear first of all that I am definitely supporting this legislation. I voted for it as a member of the committee. I intend to support it, whether or not my amendment is adopted.

The amendment which I now offer was also offered in committee, and I think, primarily due to a misunderstanding, it was defeated by a rather close vote.

The amendment does not prevent, if necessary, the drafting of doctors, veterinarians, or any of the others mentioned in the amendment, but it does give the voluntary system with respect to those classifications an opportunity to work.

I should like to call to the attention of the members of the committee the fact that never in the history of the country have we found it necessary to draft doctors.

During World War II, through the Procurement and Assignment Service that was set up by the medical profession itself, we were able to obtain all the doctors necessary to properly care for the health needs of the men in the service. I think that at this time, in the passage of this legislation, it would be unwise, indeed, for us to provide for the drafting of doctors if they can be obtained through the Procurement and Assignment Service and by voluntary means.

Mr. VINSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDERSON of California. I am delighted to yield to the distinguished gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. VINSON. I will state to the gentleman that as far as those at this table are concerned, we do not have any objection.

Mr. ANDERSON of California. If the other table will agree to my amendment I will revise and extend my remarks.

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. I may say that as far as I am concerned I have no objection to the gentleman's amendment.

Mr. ANDERSON of California. If I am to understand there is no objection on the part of the committee, I will not proceed further.

Mr. FENTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDERSON of California. I yield.

Mr. FENTON. Has the committee made any endeavor to find out how many medical men are now in the Reserve Corps?

ANDERSON of California. I Mr. think the committee has that information available; but there are not sufficient doctors now in the service to take care of the expanded needs of each branch of the armed forces.

Mr. FENTON. If the committee had seen fit to make inquiry up until yesterday they would have found that there are now in the medical reserve corps of the Army 14,162 physicians, and in the Navy 14,450, or a total of 40,960 already in the Reserve Corps.

Mr. ANDERSON of California. I am sure the gentleman agrees with me, then, that the drafting of doctors at this time is not necessary

Mr. FENTON. I certainly agree with the gentleman.

Mr. DURHAM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDERSON of California, I yield.

Mr. DURHAM. I am glad the gentleman has offered this amendment. It is, of course, a departure from all previous practices to draft doctors. We have always been able to get all the medical services, not only doctors, but all the rest of the professional services on a volunteer basis. I feel that the gentleman's amendment is a good amendment and I expect to support it.

Mr. ANDERSON of California. I thank the gentleman for his observa-

Mr. JENNINGS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDERSON of California. I

Mr. JENNINGS. Like my colleague from California I too have been in contact with doctors all over my State of Tennessee. They are ready to offer their services whenever they are needed.

Mr. ANDERSON of California. They have always done so throughout the history of our country.

Mr. JENNINGS. And they ought not to be drafted

Mr. ANDERSON of California. That is correct.

Mr. BRADLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDERSON of California. I yield to my colleague from California.

Mr. BRADLEY. I wish to say to my colleague that I am entirely in support of his amendment. The medical profes-sion in my district likewise supports his amendment.

I wonder if the gentleman who is a member of the committee could tell us what you are going to do with 1 veterinarian for every 2,000 men. I thought they had gotten rid of all the horses in

Mr. ANDERSON of California. I think they have, but the term veterinary, as far as the armed forces is concerned, is out of date.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDERSON of California. I vield.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. What is the additional number of physicians who will be needed if this bill goes into effect?

Mr. ANDERSON of California. I cannot answer the gentleman, but he will find that information in the hearings.

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield, in response to the gentleman from California [Mr. Bradley] with regard to the veterinarians, the title "veterinarian" is obsolete: These veterinarians are really food inspectors.

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDERSON of California. I yield.

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. Does not the gentleman feel that an amendment should be offered on page 5 as well, correcting the age limit 45, that it should be changed? Why discriminate against doctors, why draft doctors up to age 45?

Mr. ANDERSON of California. No, I do not think that age limit ought to be

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. Why should you discriminate against the doctor?

Mr. ANDERSON of California. I do not think we are discriminating against the doctors. They will come in on a voluntary basis under the terms of my amendment.

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. Yes, you are, because that will still be in the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.
Mr. MILLER of Connecticut. Mr. Chairman, I offer a substitute amendment

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair may state to the gentleman from Connecticut that the Chair has examined the gentleman's amendment and is prepared to state that it is not in the nature of a substitute, but may be offered after the amendment offered by the gentleman from California is disposed of.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. ANDERSON].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MILLER of Connecticut. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Miller of Connecticut: On page 5, strike out all of page 5 and down to line 16 on page 6.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Connecticut is recognized for 5 minutes in support of his amendment.

Mr. MILLER of Connecticut. Mr. Chairman, the amendment just adopted is fine as far as it goes, but it certainly does not deal with this whole question whether or not we should draft into the service doctors, veterinarians, pharmacists, osteopaths, and others associated and affiliated with the medical profession. I may say at the outset that I have no personal interest in any doctor. No relative of mine is a physician. But no Member of the House has a higher regard for the medical profession and those who work with that profession than does the gentleman now addressing you.

The medical profession over the years has demonstrated that it has been ahead of our Army and Navy. It has always been ready for any national emergency and ready for the call of the Army and Navy. In 1917 the medical profession and the hospitals went out and organized medical units and then they had to sit around week after week waiting for orders to bring them to active duty. The same thing was true in preparation for World War II. The medical profession was ready. In my own State, and I am sure the same situation prevailed in other States, the medical profession had to set up committees to go around and urge some of the doctors who were badly needed at home to stay at home. They all wanted to leave and go into the armed

I am sure we do not want to pass any section of this bill that will cast any reflection on the patriotism of the medical profession or write any language in the bill that the medical profession feels does cast a reflection on their patriotism. I would remind you that a physician may be called into service under the terms of this bill and I admit that with the adoption of the Anderson amendment there would be very few inducted, certainly in the older age brackets. But take a doctor who is 36, 38, or 40, you call him into service in peacetime to simply serve a 2-year enlistment in the Army and you will ruin that man's practice. He is willing to do that in time of war. He is willing to leave his practice for 1, 5, or 6 years, but we are asking something of the medical profession under the terms of this bill that we do not ask of any other profession in the United States. is true as to all doctors, osteopaths, veterinarians, and so forth, who are over age 26.

I hope the committee will strike out this whole section and permit the Medical Corps of the Army and Navy to get the doctors as they have up to this date, through the Officers Reserve Corps and through the procurement initiated and carried on by the medical profession itself.

Mr. Chairman, I hope my amendment will receive serious consideration and that it will be adopted.

Mr. FENTON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the pending amendment because never before in the history of our country have the doctors and dentists been charged with failure to respond to service when called.

This bill calls for the registration of doctors up to 45 years of age in contrast to all other male citizens up to 31 years. It therefore creates an assumption that medical men are lacking in patriotism and that they are singled out, specifically, as far as age is concerned.

I believe the records will show that the medical profession was the first to create a Reserve corps in the Army. Physicians leaving active service usually join the Reserve Corps. The Navy continues its service in the Reserve Corps indefinitely; the Army allows retirement from the Reserve Corps after 5 years. And, the records will further show that in the last two wars great numbers of physicians applied for commissions long before these wars were actually declared.

I am well experienced and very familiar with the work done by my profession in World Wars I and II—both in the field and in the hospitals. As a battalion surgeon of infantry in 1917–18 and 1919 I know, personally, of their accomplishments.

As a member of the Military Affairs Committee of the House during all of World War II, I naturally took a great interest in the work of my profession. As a matter of fact I visited in 1944, along with other members of that committee, the European theater of war. It was gratifying to me and my colleagues to hear day after day of the magnificent job the medical men were doing—and when I say medical men I mean also to include the Medical Corps—enlisted personnel and officers.

The members of our committee will forever remember what our great Army chiefs told us about the Medical Corps—Yes, Generals Eisenhower, Bradley, Paton, Clark, and dozens of other high ranking officers gave glowing accounts of the high type of work done by the medics.

My colleagues, the medical profession was the first to be prepared for the emergencies in 1917 and 1941. We not only volunteered as individuals but we prepared medical units for the field and organized many hospital units. I saw many of those hospital units in action in 1944—what a grand job they did.

Our national medical association—the AMA, our various State medical societies, our country medical societies working together and cooperating with the Procurement and Assignment Service of the War Manpower Commission recruited 60,000 physicians for the armed services in World War II—60,000 physicians for an Army and Navy of 14,000,000—and they did a swell job.

On the basis of an armed service of a little over 2,000,000 and a ratio of 5 doctors per 1,000, there will be needed about 10,000 physicians. And you will easily get them, I am sure, by the same methods used in the past. But to place a stigma upon the patriotism of the present crop of physicians is unfair and I believe not justified.

At the close of World War II the medical profession set up another committee. called the Council on National Emergency Medical Service, which has been actively surveying the field and preparing for any new emergency or war. committee or council has interviewed the authorities of our armed services in each branch for the purpose of determining in what way it can most effectively serve, and, in accordance with instructions, has stimulated the creation of a similar council in each State. The medical profession through these councils is preparing to meet not only the immediate demands of the armed services but also the problems that will arise among the civilians if and when they are exposed to an atomic explosion and the problems caused by invasion or an epiYes, the medical profession is ahead of important groups in preparedness such as industry, transportation, and fuel.

Our medical schools have in their curricula appropriate courses to handle problems arising from atomic and biologic warfare and are cooperating with the Atomic Energy Commission as well as the Army, Navy, and Public Health Service.

At the present time the Army has 14,-162 physicians in the Officers Reserve Corps and 5,508 dentists in the Officers Reserve Corps. In the Navy there are 14,215 physicians in the Naval Officers Reserve Corps and 7,075 dentists.

My colleagues, the medical profession will serve its country—draft or no draft—as it always has done. I hope that this amendment will be adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired

Mr. FENTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. VINSON. Mr. Chairman, under the agreement that we have, I deeply regret that we will have to be confined to 5 minutes. Therefore I object, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. JUDD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. Chairman, the statement has just been made that we must not draft these young men into the armed services without making very sure that they will have proper medical care. That is a wholly justified statement. But where is there a shred of evidence in the history of the United States that there were ever any men in our armed forces who did not have proper medical care voluntarily provided by members of the medical profession themselves? We did not have to draft a single doctor in the last war or in World War I. The medical profession itself provided more than enough. Doctors volunteered as individuals. They organized medical units for field service and hospital units at bases. Most were organized and ready months before the service called them. In addition the profession regulated itself by providing specialists where needed. It persuaded those of its members to go who had least obligations here at home, and who could render the greatest service in the armed forces. With remarkable success it tried to spread around those left at home, persuading men to go into those rural areas whose doctors had volunteered and left people without medical

Mr. Chairman, it seems to me wholly unnecessary and utterly unjustified officially to stigmatize as unpatriotic the very professions that had the best record of volunteering of any groups in our whole population. They have not only done a superb job of being ready ahead of wars in the past; they are preparing for any future war right now. They have organized reserve units. They are voluntarily training their members and those of the nursing profession to take care of victims of possible atomic warfare and bacteriological warfare and every conceivable new type of injury that might be developed in another war.

So for us to single out for drafting up to 45 years of age the members of these professions which in the past, have rendered such outstanding service and have the highest percentage of volunteering, seems to me unnecessary, unjustified, unfair to the professions, and most of all unfair to the public.

What man is going to take his children or his wife to that doctor over whose head hangs the threat of being called at any moment into the armed services for 2 years? Just about the time that she will be ready to have her baby, Uncle Sam may call him up.

How will it be possible for him to build up his practice if he is likely to be pulled out at the age of 40 and taken into the service for 2 years? How can he establish himself when he gets back?

It is bad for the doctors, but far worse for the public itself to have all the healing professions in our country thrown into chaos and uncertainty.

In our country today there are about one and a half doctors for each one thousand of population. This bill authorizes the armed services to draft five for each thousand men. What patients require most of the doctors' time in civilian life? Three groups, the children, the aged, and women. The average for our civilian population including those who have the highest rate of illnesses is only one and a half doctors per one thousand. Yet here we are to take five for each thousand of young able bodied, carefully selected men who have been innoculated and vaccinated against diseases, fed vitamins and special foods, given maximum protection and in peacetime need the least medical care and not the most.

Mr. Chairman, I hope this amendment will be adopted. Physicians, nurses, dentists and the other professions have a high sense of duty. They have never failed this country in the past. They never will in the future. It will be better for all concerned, and especially for the civilian sick, to eliminate this unnecessary subsection 4 (c).

Mr. BREHM. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The Committee may be interested in the statement, that the Navy sent out their recruiting officers to recruit dentists. Two thousand and seven hundred dentists signed up, expressing willingness to go into the service as of now, but as of this minute not one of the 2.700 has been taken; not one of them will be taken until this bill becomes law. They are waiting until this proposed legislation does become law before they will accept the 2,700 dentists who are pleading to enlist in the services. You see, it might hurt the chances of passage of this bill if these dentists were permitted to enlist and no shortage existed. I just thought you might be interested in knowing this fact.

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

I do this just to call attention to the fact that there are 5,000 doctors that would come in the first category. The committee took this into very careful consideration. There are 5,000 doctors, trained at Government expense, in the Army or the Navy—

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. Just a moment.

Those men have no prior service. They are in the first category that would be drawn. In the first year that would just about meet the need.

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. I yield. Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. How many of those 5,000 are 45 years of age?

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. None of them, but the 45-year-old men are in the last category, and very few of them would ever be taken except in a supervisory way.

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. Then, why do you have the draft age up to 45?

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. Simply to have them listed so we will know who they are.

Mr. JUDD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. I yield.
Mr. JUDD. Under present bill, all men up to 31 have to register and are eligible to be drafted, are they not?

eligible to be drafted, are they not?

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. No; they are not eligible for drafting. They are registered from 26 to 31. The registration figures are for one specific reason. Dr. Bush, of the Bureau of Scientific Research and Development, wanted to get an accurate estimate of the men who were in the service and to know where those men are in scientific fields and what they are doing. It is merely for the Bureau of Scientific Research and Development. That was the only reason for registering men from 26 to 31.

Mr. JUDD. Does not the gentleman know, from his work on the committee all during the last war, that the medical profession itself sorted out pretty well those of its members who ought to go into the service and could best be spared from the community needs, and succeeded in getting them to volunteer first?

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. That is true.

Mr. JUDD. Then, why are you afraid the medical profession will fall down this time?

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. I am particularly anxious to get the first category that are provided in this bill.

Mr. JUDD. And so in the medical profession.

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. Well, I am not so sure. I know one thing, that numbers of the medical profession are very anxious to have jobs in certain hospitals that are taken care of today by men in the service.

Mr. DURHAM. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I hope we do not adopt this amendment. We have gone far enough in adopting the Anderson amendment, in my opinion. Under that amendment the President will have the right to set up a priority system. That is the procedure under which we procured doctors in World War II. At the present time we have 8,150 doctors in the Medical Corps. That includes the Air Force also. The number of doctors required for this expanded program is 11,350. So we will be short 2,100 doctors with the expanded program. The Navy also in their program at the present time have 2,750 doctors. That is based on 5.76 to each 1,000, which is a little more than this bill at this time carries. Under the expanded program the Navy will require 3,850 doctors and will be short 1,100 doctors.

This will make a total of 3,300 doctors short under the expanded program.

The 5,000 the chairman of the committee just mentioned are ASTP students with no prior service, and under this bill will be obligated to serve exclusive of the Anderson amendment. So you have a pool there of 5,000 students who have received practically all of their training paid for by the Government and should render some service. So the picture is not as bad as one would believe it to be. I know that at the present time that all of the medical schools in the country want doctors released. I have a wire today urging me to try to get a doctor out of the service to teach in a medical school. We are also faced with a situation in many parts of the country where there is a shortage of doctors.

Mr. FENTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DURHAM. I yield.

Mr. FENTON. I am sure the gentleman is very fair. The gentleman, of course, is in favor of the Reserve Corps.

Mr. DURHAM. Certainly. Mr. FENTON. Does the gentleman

Mr. FENTON. Does the gentleman know there are now in the Army Reserve Corps 14,162 physicians and in the Navy Reserve Corps, 14,250?

Mr. DURHAM. I am glad to hear the doctor say that. I am not familiar with the exact number in the Reserve Corps. I am very much in favor of the Army and I hope it will be further extended.

Mr. FENTON. If the gentleman will yield further, the gentleman also has been very fair in his past deliberations on the Military Affairs Committee and he knows that the Committee on Procurement and Assignment in the last war did a very fine job.

Mr. DURHAM. A very excellent job. That is why I supported the Anderson amendment.

Mr. FENTON. And we certainly should leave it in the same hands to procure our physicians.

Mr. DURHAM. That is exactly what we have done if I understand the effect of the Anderson amendment.

Mr. EVINS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DURHAM. I yield.

Mr. EVINS. In view of the very excellent record that the medical profession made in the last world war, does the gentleman think it necessary to call our medical men to register up to 44?

Mr. DURHAM. I do not see anything wrong with having them register up to that age when you leave it up to a board like the one we operated under in the last World War. We need surgeons as well as doctors, and you do not get surgeons at age 25, you get them from age 35 to 40. You cannot run this on the basis of an age schedule like you can your ground forces and many other things because you have got to have these specialists who do not finish their training as specialists until they are much older.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from North Carolina has expired.

The Chair is advised that two or three Members wish to revise and extend their remarks at this point. The Chair will entertain such requests at this time.

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, I wish to be recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. Mr. Chairman, I wonder if we can come to an agreement in the matter of limiting debate on this amendment.

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. I do not yield to the gentleman for that purpose if this comes out of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. It will not be taken out of the gentleman's time.

The Committee will rise informally to receive a message.

Accordingly the Committee rose, and the Speaker resumed the chair.

FURTHER MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A further message from the Senate, by Mr. Carrell, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate having proceeded to reconsider the bill (S. 110) entitled "An act to amend the Interstate Commerce Act with respect to certain agreements between carriers," returned by the President of the United States with his objections, to the Senate, in which it originated, it was—

Resolved, That the said bill pass, twothirds of the Senators present having voted in the affirmative.

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 2239) entitled "An act to amend section 13 (a) of the Surplus Property Act of 1944, as amended."

The message also announced that the Senate insists upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 4051) entitled "An act to amend sections 301 (k) and 304 (a) of the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act, as amended" disagreed to by the House; agrees to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. Capehart, Mr. Reed, Mr. Moore, Mr. Johnson of Colorado, and Mr. McMahon to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6419) entitled "An act authorizing the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors for navigation, flood control, and for other purposes."

The message also announced that the Senate having proceeded to reconsider the bill (H. R. 6355) entitled "An act making supplemental appropriations for the Federal Security agency for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1949, and for other purposes," returned by the President of the United States with his objections, to the House of Representatives, in which it originated, and passed by the House of Representatives on reconsideration of the same, it was—

Resolved, That the said bill pass, twothirds of the Senators present having voted in the affirmative.

The SPEAKER. The Committee will resume its sitting.

SELECTIVE SERVICE ACT OF 1948

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on the pending amendment close in 9 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that in this section of the bill you are taking a left-handed slap at the physicians, the osteopaths, the veterinarians, and other men who in past wars have rendered an unusual service to our country. I was rather interested when the gentleman from Florida [Mr. Sikes] stated there were 61/2 doctors in the armed services for thousand and he thought that these boys ought to have the very finest care they can get. The bill calls for 5 per 1.000. I would remind the gentleman that in civilian practice we have 1 physician to 800. He ought to be interested in seeing they get proper care before they go into the armed services.

May I also call your attention to the fact that the civilian population is made up partly of old men, women, and children, and expectant mothers, while the military services are made up of strong, healthy young men, who do not need these services. I am amazed at the gentleman that he would want to raise this to 6½ per 1,000, and that is what his words were. The bill provides for 5 per 1,000. He ought to be interested in seeing that they get pretty good care before they get into the armed services.

Mr. SIKES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. I yield to the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. SIKES. The gentleman realizes that the doctors and dentists who were in the service also cared for the children and the dependents in the service, which is not counted in the 5 to 1,000. Overseas they looked after civilian employees. You have to have a doctor on every ship of any size, you have to have a doctor at every military post regardless of size and organization, all of which makes necessary a higher percentage than you have in civilian life. I do not see how the gentleman is going to avoid that.

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. There are a number of civilians who were taken care of by the medical men in the military. I am going to offer an amendment to reduce the number of physicians to 2 per 1,000. The physicians have always been loyal in every war. They had a Reserve Corps ready to serve and right now in the Army and Navy Reserves there are more than 40,000 physicians who have signified their intention of rendering a service to the armed services if and when called. The gentleman is aware of the fact that there are about 5,000 ASTP students and the Army authorities tell me they are going to call those 5,000 under Executive order.

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. Those Reserve doctors cannot be called back to active duty without their consent. Many served in World War II.

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. There is an Executive order calling these 5,000 I am speaking of into the service now.

May I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that if there is another war the atomic bomb will cause more damage to the civilian population than to many of the soldiers. You take the atomic bomb, bacteriological warfare and the other things that could occur to the people of this country and you are not going to have sufficient doctors at home to take care of them.

Now, this bill provides a ratio of 5 to 1,000. I live in a county of 4,000 people and we have two doctors. Under this bill, with the military ratio, we would have to have 20 doctors. I do not see why they should be so hoggish and want all of the professional material.

Mr. Chairman, I think this section ought to be stricken from the bill in order to keep from putting a stigma upon the physicians, dentists, and veterinarians of this country that they are not willing to serve their country.

Mr. GAVIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. GAVIN. Just to keep the record straight, there were 10,000 ASTP students, not 5,000. I believe the record will show 10,000.

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. Five thousand of them are not eligible physically.
Mr. MILLER of Connecticut. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. I yield to the gentleman from Connecticut.

Mr. MILLER of Connecticut. In order to follow the logic of this thing through, would it not be just as proper to draft all of the old hotel chefs?

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. Yes. The gentleman asks, Why not carry this to a logical conclusion and draft all the old hotel chefs up to 45 years of age so the men will have good food in the Army.

Mr. LEMKE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. I yield to the gentleman from North Dakota.

Mr. LEMKE. Why not follow the logic still further and draft all Members of Congress who want this legislation?

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. Well, I would not go quite that far.

Mr. GILLIE. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Fenton] has pointed out that under this bill the Army plans to draft 1,238 veterinarians into peacetime service. I was amazed to learn this in view of the desperate shortage of trained veterinarians which now exists in this country.

Members of the veterinary profession are badly needed for civilian field work all over the country; they are needed by the Federal, State, and local governments for food inspection; they are needed for important research work—including research on foot-and-mouth disease, which now threatens American livestock.

Veterinary colleges in this country have not been able to train enough veterinarians for all civilian requirements. There are only 10 such colleges now, and, although 3 more are being added, it will be years before this will have any great effect on the situation.

I earnestly believe that the Army should give further consideration to their plans for the drafting of such a large number of veterinarians.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New York [Mr. KEATING].

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Chairman, I am not sure whether my remarks are properly addressed to this amendment or to the one which the gentleman from Nebraska says he is about to offer. Of course, if this amendment carries, that will dispose of the issues embraced within the gentleman's proposal.

I say what I am about to say with the utmost charity and feeling of gratitude toward the Medical Corps of the Army. They are a fine group of men, and there are many splendid physicians and surgeons among them. To them I personally owe a deep debt as regards my own good health and possibly my life. But, in all frankness, it was my experience in the Army that they had too many doctors. Wherever I went, the doctors, with few exceptions, certainly were not working as hard as doctors in civilian life.

Mr. JENKINS of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEATING. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. JENKINS of Pennsylvania. Apropos of the position taken on this amendment, I would like to remind the gentleman, and I know he knows, that in the theater in which he and I served one of the very finest hospitals, the Twentieth General Hospital, was entirely composed, from the commanding officer down through the doctors and the nurses, and practically all of the orderlies by voluntary enlistment from the University of Pennsylvania Hospital.

Mr. KEATING. That is perfectly true. Not a conscript doctor among them. And a fine outfit they were, I might say to the gentleman.

Mr. SMATHERS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEATING. I yield to the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. SMATHERS. I would like to subscribe to what the gentleman is saying about the number of doctors in the service. I was in the other theater of war, and it seemed to me that when we were not in battle we had more doctors than we had use for. While my service was not as broad or extensive as that of the gentleman from New York, wherever I did serve I always found that to be the

Mr. KEATING. I thank my friend from Florida for his observation. I know the gentleman's service was effective wherever he served, and I am interested to learn that his experience was the same as mine. I really feel, gentlemen of the Committee, that this amendment should carry. Nothing has been adduced in argument or in the record which I have read which convinces me that this compulsory service of doctors and other professional men is necessary. Its passage will work a great hardship on our civilians in many parts of the country where there is a serious shortage of doctors.

Mr. DAVIS of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEATING. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. DAVIS of Wisconsin. I think something might well be said at this point also about what is going to happen to the morale and the skill of those doctors and dentists and veterinarians who are called into the service against their will.

Mr. KEATING. That is right. The gentleman's point is well taken.

Mr. KERSTEN of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEATING. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. KERSTEN of Wisconsin. Does not the gentleman agree that if the original form of the bill were to go through it would probably create a very bad situation so far as the civilian needs are concerned?

Mr. KEATING. I think it would. I think that is borne out by what the gentleman from Nebraska told us.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MEADE].

Mr. MEADE of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I rise to point out that in some sections, if not in all parts of this country, there is a great shortage of civilian care on the part of the medical profession. I have in my district a county of over 10,000 people without one single physician to care for those people. In all other counties in my district there is a shortage of physicians. During my service in the Navy, after the war was over, I noticed that we had more doctors than we could even find good billets for.

Mr. SMATHERS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MEADE of Kentucky. I yield to the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. SMATHERS. Does the gentleman have any idea as to what the proportion of doctors to men are in this bill as compared to what they were during the war?

Mr. MEADE of Kentucky. It looks to me about the same.

Mr. SMATHERS. Is it not a fact that obviously you need more doctors when you are actually in a shooting war than you do when you are entering the service?

Mr. MEADE of Kentucky. Of course, we take the cream of physicians crop into the service due to this draft and due to the high physical standards required.

Mr. MORTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MEADE of Kentucky. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. MORTON. Are not these 5,000 doctors that come under this first category subject to call now with or without their consent, if they have not already served?

Mr. MEADE of Kentucky. These 5,000 young men who were trained by the Army and Navy are still subject to call. It was part of the contract during their training period, and they will be called as needed and are being called as needed.

Mr. MORTON. Without this legisla-

Mr. MEADE of Kentucky. Without this legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has expired. All time has expired.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. MILLER].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COUDERT. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. COUDERT: On page 4, line 23, strike out "twenty-four" and insert "twelve."

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COUDERT. I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment on the desk similar to the one just offered by the gentleman from New York. I withdraw my amendment, and shall support his amendment.
Mr. COUDERT. Mr. Chairman, this is the amendment to reduce the term of service of the draftees to 12 months. Coming after the amendment to strike out completely the drafting of doctors. it would seem to me wholly in order to reduce the period of service of a drafted boy to a period of 1 year instead of 2 years, having in mind that in France and England and all the other countries of western Europe there is no country that drafts its boys for more than 1 year, and they all select them from the age groups of 19, 20, and 21.

I call your attention to the fact there is on the Speaker's desk a bill from the other end of the Capitol which drafts these boys for 2 full years. When a 2year bill meets a 1-year bill in direct collision, the result may very well be an 18-month bill, so I think both the Members who favor a 1-year term of service and those who favor an 18-month term of service should support this amendment.

Mr. Chairman, there will come of age each year 1,140,000 boys. If this bill passes and we reduce the ages to make it from 19 through 21 as I propose to do in a later amendment, the Army will begin with three classes, and each additional year they will acquire another 1,100,000 men. If our generals and if our Secretaries have not the ability to operate an army with such a draft, together with the voluntary system, then let us get some generals with the ingenuity, ability, and intelligence to manage it.

The argument is made that it will be more expensive to take our boys for 1 year rather than for 2 years. Perhaps it will be. But for my part, I would rather pay the additional expense, and I would rather spare the boy and his family and the community the burden of two full years of service. I do not have to belabor the fact that 2 years taken out of a boy's life at his most formative period is far more serious to his future life and the development of a career.

Mr. PLOESER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COUDERT. I yield.

Mr. PLOESER. While it might be more expensive to the Army, it would be a great deal less expensive to the boys who are selected and put into the serv-

Mr. COUDERT. Precisely.

Mr. Chairman, one further point that will be made against this is that a 1-year term of service is inefficient. Perhaps it is less efficient. I have no doubt that the generals would like to have a 7-year term of service. The old professional armies of Europe were composed of 7year men. Perhaps they were better soldiers for some purposes-they were certainly better parade ground soldiers. They also complain, I understand, that this will make it a little more difficult to serve the occupied areas. Well, gentlemen, the military occupation is a police operation. It is a token garrison operation, and if it takes a little more trouble to send the 1-year man over there and turn them around and send them back. I would much rather do that than impose a wholly unjustified and harsh 2-year term on a handful of in-

Mr. Chairman, a third point. Liabili-ty to the draft should certainly be based upon a broad democratic foundation. A 2-year draft based upon figures that the Department of Defense now relies upon will mean a limited number of men only. A 1-year period will double the number serving and extend the foundation.

Mr. SMATHERS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word and rise in support of the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to say at the outset that I expect to support the draft bill. I do think, however, it could be improved in several particulars. This is one particular. You remember in 1945 we had almost 12,000,000 men under arms. At that time the recruiting sergeants and the recruiting officers were literally beating the drums everywhere saying that we needed more men. were figting then, of course, in World War II, which encompased the whole world. If we get into another war, obviously it will not be any less in diameter; it will not be any less in intensity, nor any less in magnitude. The bill we are now considering takes into the service 2,500,000 men, one-sixth of those that we had in 1945. Therefore, obviously this bill is not designed to take in enough men to do us any good in the event we actually get into a shooting war. It is not designed to do that. It seems to me the purpose of it is to make those countries that are stamping out freedom throughout the world realize that we are getting ourselves ready and that we will go forward to resist aggression and totalitarianism.

The men who will be drafted under this bill will not be the colonels or the majors or the lieutenants. They will be the privates, the privates first class, and the sergeants. They will be the boys who are the orderlies for the colonels. They are the boys who will drive the jeeps and do the cooking and the baking. They are the boys who will do the police duty. They will also be given basic training. They will learn to shoot mortars, BAR's, flame throwers, and rifles. They can learn all that within a period of 1 year. There is no sense in keeping those boys in the service for 2 years to learn what they can get within 1 year. It is not fair to those young men to take them at the most formative period in their lives, as has been said, and keep them for over 1 year when to keep them is not necessary. What will they do the second year? They will pick up cigarette butts, wash down the barracks, and take long wasteful week ends.

Another thing, if they say it cuts down national defense, it cannot possibly be so, because under this bill, if we limit the time to 1 year, instead of training 2,500,-000 we will train 4,010,000. So, if the purpose of the bill is to increase national defense, by this amendment we increase the number of trained men 100 percent.

Mr. KILDAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMATHERS. I gladly yield.

Mr. KILDAY. Will you please tell us where you are going to get those 4,000,000 men? Are you going to take veterans or married men? There simply are not that many eligible in the pool.

Mr. SMATHERS. If the gentleman is going to ask me a question, I assume he will let me answer it. Under this bill the provisions of it will supply you with the number of men you need. As I un-derstand from the chairman, you need only about 200,000 men. Certainly, we have enough men becoming eligible every year and within the provisions of this draft to meet the needs for each year.

Mr. KILDAY. Your figure is 600,000 rather than 200,000.

Mr. COUDERT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMATHERS. I yield. Mr. COUDERT. Does the gentleman know that under the figures of the Department of Defense, 1,140,000 young men turn 18 each year?

Mr. SMATHERS. So, obviously, if this bill is designed to increase national defense, it will do it by 100 percent, if we lessen the time that each man serves. Its clear that these men can get their basic training in 1 year.

Mr. KILDAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMATHERS. I am happy to yield to the distinguished gentleman from Texas.

Mr. KILDAY. The gentleman is correct as to the number who will become 18, but he is not correct as to the number who will become eligible for military service. Our experience has been throughout selective service that you lose about 50 percent.

Mr. SMATHERS. I would like to add one other thought. That is the problem of morale. Young men can serve for 1 year and do a good job and feel like it has been a democratic process, and that they have done their duty but if you take him for 2 years and keep him overseas, doing nothing but walking post he will get discouraged. He does not like the Army, he does not like the country. He does not like anything. Obviously, it is much more democratic to broaden the base of this bill and have more men serve and make each individual sacrifice less

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, will

the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMATHERS. Gladly to the able gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I am in agreement with the gentleman on this 1-year proposition. I want to call to his attention the fact that in the last war we took men out of civilian life and trained them to be finished fighter and bomber pilots in 9 or 10 months. We took men out of civilian life and sent them through officer's candidate school in 3 months. and they came out and made good officers. I just cannot see the need for giving these men 2 years' service.

Mr. SMATHERS. I thank the gentleman very much.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SMATHERS] has expired.

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the

Mr. Chairman, I well understand what prompts the amendment. The facts are that it does not gibe with the situation and the number we have in the available pool. The committee took into consideration the exemptions that it wanted to make, with the result that the effective pool is right down to hardpan now, on the basis of 2 years' service.

Of course, it is clear that if men go into the service they must be trained. In case of service overseas, in Japan or Germany or other places, they must be transported. They must be brought back home when they are discharged. Then, if you take a man into service for a year. he is certainly out of the picture. In the induction pool there are today 1,300,000

In the first year the Army will need 250,000 new men to go from 540,000 to 790,000. That takes no account of the attrition that is going on in this year, men we are going to lose on short-term enlistments, enlistments longer even than 1 year. Every time you enlist a man for a year or 18 months you are going to face the same situation a year or 18 months later, you are going to have men going out every month.

The Navy will need 33,000 more to go from 437,000 to 460,000, plus 100,000 more to replace men leaving the Navy.

The Air Force needs 56,000 men to go from its present strength of 397,000 to 413,000, plus 166,000 to replace men leaving the Air Force, making a total of 222,-000 for the Air Force.
The Marines need 10,000.

All this adds up to a total need of 903,-000 men in the next year, during the coming fiscal year.

There will be 349,000 more men in the services to raise their strength, combined, from 1,466,000 on July 1, 1948, to 1,795,000 on July 1, 1949. This will leave 555,000 more men to replace the many leaving the services during the year.

Even if you got these men by enlistment rather than by induction it takes longer to train men in the Air Corps than in any other service. We have voted for a 70-group air force. It is going to take thousands of trained men to man that air force. The Air Force is not taking any enlistment under 3 years.

If the period of service is cut in half, twice as many men will be needed. Twice as many men will be needed under a 1year period than under the proposed bill. There are simply not that many men in the pool under the bill as now drafted and we have endeavored to set up exemptions and deferments with the result that the pool is just about equal to the number of men that will be needed in the next fiscal year, considering the increase in the Army, Navy, and Air Force, and the replacements that will be necessary to fill the spaces created by those who drop out who had short-term enlistments. It just would not work with the pool. I want to remind you that according to the House bill we defer all fathers, we defer all those who have dependents, we defer all those under 18 years of age. Only in the 19-20 year group do we have a big pool, because after you get into and past the 21-year group you get into the group that saw service during the past war. We defer all members of the National Guard, we defer all members of the Reserve Corps, and all men who had 12 months' service in this war. The Senate bill does not do that

The House defers all men who had 12 months of service in the past war or even 12 months' Federal service since the war provided they are now in the National Guard or Reserve Corps.

This amendment does not jibe with the facts and will leave us in a hopeless situation.

Mr. LYLE. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, there is no easy road to peace. Witness the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Teague] and the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS]. There is no happy way in which men can defend their country. There is no happiness in the heart, I am sure, of any man in this House when he reaches into the home, into the life of the people and asks them to serve their country.

I did not have anything to do with the mess that the world is in today. Perhaps if 15 or 20 years ago this Congress had had the courage to realize the cost of peace we would not be faced with this unfortunate position today.

Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to this amendment because it will render useless both the 12 months of training of the soldier, the money it has cost the taxpayers, and the time of the Army.

This is not a training bill. It is, we hope, an opportunity to have military strength which, we pray God, we may never need, rather than military weakness in time of need. I, too, wish that the service of TEAGUE, WILLIAMS, and 16,-000,000 other people, approximately, could have saved the House this terrible responsibility. But unfortunately, that is not true. I sincerely hope that no American will ever be called upon to engage in combat, for I know the dirty, nasty business of war; consequently, I shall accept my responsibility and ask young America to invest 2 years of their lives if necessary in the future of the world. If there is to be a future perhaps it will be decided by the courage and the foresight of this Congress.

Mr. BUFFETT. Mr. Chairman, will

the gentleman yield?

Mr. LYLE. I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. BUFFETT. Does the gentleman know of any country in history where conscription has prevented it from getting into war?

Mr. LYLE. I know of no period of western civilization in which there has never been a war.

Mr. SMATHERS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LYLE. I yield to the gentleman from Florida

Mr. SMATHERS. I want to subscribe to the very worthy sentiments which the gentleman is expressing. If the gentleman says that what we need is more manpower, 1 year's training will give us twice as much manpower as the present set-up. That is one of the reasons for the amendment.

Mr. LYLE. This is not a training bill; this is a service bill. The training bill is still in the Rules Committee.

Mr. SMATHERS. Can the gentleman tell me of any new land that the United States intends to occupy other than what it is occupying right now?

Mr. LYLE. I join with the gentleman in the prayer that we never occupy one single bit of land that does not belong to America; but, if necessary, I want an army equipped, first, to defend my country, and, second, to occupy that which is necessary to defend my country.

Mr. SMATHERS. Does the gentleman maintain when it took 12,000,000 men to defend us in World War II that 2,000,000 men can do it in world war III?

Mr. LYLE. I am assuming if this bill is passed and if we meet our responsibility and meet the challenge that is ours today and develop a striking, effective combat force, we will not have a

Mr. BREHM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LYLE. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. BREHM. The gentleman says this is not a training bill. If this is not to train our young men to fill a niche in the defense of our beloved Republic and to help preserve it, what is the purpose of the bill?

Mr. LYLE. The purpose of it is to build up the dwindling ranks of the Army.

Mr. BREHM. Then it is a training program?

Mr. LYLE. Necessarily, training is involved in it because these men will be given 12 or 13 weeks of basic training before they are assigned to a unit.

Mr. BREHM. It is either a training program to help defend America or it is preparation for war. It must be one or the other. The gentleman says it is not a training program, so we must deduce then that it is a direct preparation for war. Basic training can be obtained in 13 weeks or less, why 2 years if it is not for general training provisions?

Mr. LYLE. I hope not, I sincerely hone not.

Mr. BREHM. That is the only logical conclusion to be drawn from the gentleman's statement.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Chairman, will

the gentleman yield?

Mr. LYLE. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. RAYBURN. Does not the gentleman think that this amendment is a determination of whether we will have a strong army or a weak one?

Mr. LYLE. I think if the pending amendment is adopted, the whole bill is useless.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired. Mr. ANDREWS of New York.

Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on the pending amendment and all amendments thereto close in 10

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

Mr. PLOESER, Mr. Chairman, I ob-

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. Chairman, I move

to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of this amendment to limit the period of service to 1 year. This ominously broad bill is disturbing many people throughout the Republic. It is disturbing many in this Congress. It has been said that if you draft these young men for only 1 year that it will not work; that you will take the heart out of the program; that you will ruin the service. Oh, how many times have we heard that? How many bills have passed this Congress, gone into effect, and worked, when we have been told on this floor that the departments involved say, "It will not work; we cannot do it that way." This is a measure that reaches out into some families and takes a young man to serve in the armed forces while it passes by other families. On one hand it takes a young man to serve for 2 years. I maintain that 1 year is long enough. What harm can come from trying 1 year? What mistake can be made at this time in trying it for 1 year?

Mr. Chairman, it has been pointed out that if this period of service is for 1 year it will result in having more men trained to serve their country. It will be more uniform; it will treat the boys and families alike if they are drafted for only 1 year. It will make a lasting difference in the educational, business, and family plans of many young men. It will enable them to hang onto the things which they hold dear to a far greater degree than if they are taken for 2 years. A boy may be able to serve a year without completely destroying his educational and life plans. With 2 years taken out of his life the danger is much greater.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to call attention to one other thing. We have talked about the available pool and that there would be certain exemptions and deferments. Do you realize that the number of deferments can and will be cut down if the draft is only for 1 year?

This is not, as has been pointed out, purely a training program. I am inclined to think that this country ought to have some sort of a training program. However, we are embarking upon a matter of selective service. This proposal is to draft boys for twice as long as did the Selective Service Act of 1940. It should be reduced to 1 year. You are voting for a law that is going to reach into some homes where there is a young man and it is going to pass by others. Why should you have it for 2 years? Let us trv 1 year.

Mr. PLOESER. Mr. Chairman, will

the gentleman yield?

Mr. CURTIS. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. PLOESER. Is it not true that if it is ineffective for 1 year, that then we are to believe that the whole UMT program proposed before this was under a false argument?

Mr. CURTIS. That is right. I refuse yet to bow to the departments and bureaus of government which always advance the stock argument that any change in their proposals will render those proposals unworkable. Let us try

Mr. FULTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer a substitute amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Fulton as a substitute amendment for the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. COUDERT]: Page 4, line 23, strike out "24" and insert "18."

Mr. FULTON. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is simply to give you a choice between 24 months, 18 months, and 12 months. It has been urged that 12 months is probably too short, when you take off the time that is to be spent in boot or basic training. If you are going to have a training program along with a program that makes up the deficit of the services, we may need not only a time for training but also a time for duties other than training, that is, field duty and occupation duty. So to be worth while to the Army, we are now arguing between something that may defeat the entire program, 12 months, on one hand, and 24 months on the other, and the 24 months may defeat the younger generation. As a compromise, I am offering 18 months.

Mr. PLOESER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FULTON. I yield to the distinguished gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. PLOESER. If the gentleman really wants, and I am sure he does, to give the House an absolute choice, would it not be better to permit a vote on the 12-month provision before we have a vote on the 18-month provision? If that is not the choice of the House, we still would have an opportunity to vote on the 18-month provision.

Mr. FULTON. No; I am sorry that I cannot agree.

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on the pending amendment and all amendments thereto close in one-half hour.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and forty-three Members are present, a quorum.

Mr. VINSON. Mr. Chairman, in view of the number of Members who have indicated a desire to speak on this amendment, I ask unanimous consent that the action just taken limiting debate to 30 minutes be vacated and that debate on the pending amendment and all amendments thereto be fixed at 50 minutes

SMATHERS. Reserving Mr. right to object, Mr. Chairman, are we going to have an opportunity to vote tonight on this amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. That is within the control of the Committee.

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. I might state that with the adoption of the suggestion of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. VINSON] it will be my plan, once this amendment is voted up or down tonight, to move that the Committee rise.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HOFFMAN. How long will this last limitation of time give each Member who wants to speak on this amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has not counted all the Members standing but has noted the names of the Members and will divide the time accordingly.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Might we know so that we might prepare our addresses?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Florida Mr.

Mr. SIKES. Mr. Chairman, let us be sure that we understand what this bill is for. It is not a training bill. We are not seeking a big backlog of trained men. We are not making gestures to other powers. We are filling the gaps in our armed services. This is a general service bill. We are at least a quarter of a million men short of the number of men who are needed for the efficient operation of the armed services today. Voluntary enlistments have failed to provide those men, despite inducements never before equalled. We have to have enough men to carry on the essential operations of the services and enough to insure an adequate measure of national security. Selective service is a democratic method of selection and it appears to be the only way to get essential men. I think we should remember that. Half of the men in the services roughly are overseas today. Let us see what we would do if we were to cut the period of service to 12 months for inductees. I think everyone realizes that it would be a waste of time to send a 12-month man overseas. It takes approximately 4 months to induct a man and to give him his basic training. After you have given a man 4 months of training, you have not made a soldier out of him. He is still a kid who has learned something about wearing the uniform, military courtesy, and how to handle a gun. He does not know anything about the complex unit training which must be taught today. After 4 months of basic training he does not know how to conduct himself in a combat organization. If he were called on to do so to protect his country at that period he would be but little more than cannon fodder. If you give him another 4 months in unit training before you send him overseas you have just about enough time to stage him and ship him and then turn around and stage him and send him home from overseas.

This is a highly inefficient and a costly procedure. It is of little value to the services. But more than that, much more than that, it would not permit rotation of the men who are now overseas. A 12month draft would virtually condemn men who are overseas to remain there. Certainly that is neither fair nor desirable. They too have loved ones at home. They too want to be at home.

Mr. COUDERT. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment offered to my amendment, for a very simple reason. I say to those Members who want 18 months' service that the only possible chance they will have of getting 18 months' service is to vote for the original amendment putting a 1-year period in the House bill. We are only one-half of this Legislature. There is on the Speaker's table another bill from another body providing for 2 years. When a bill with a 2-year provision meets a bill with a 1-year provision in headlong collision, 18 months may be the result.

Mr. JUDD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COUDERT. I yield.

Mr. JUDD. Is it true to say that your real objective is 18 months, and the way to get 18 months is to vote for your amendment.

Mr. COUDERT. My real objective is 1 year, but I have no illusions that we are likely to get anything better than

Mr. JUDD. But if somebody has an objective of 18 months, the way to get it is to vote for your amendment?

Mr. COUDERT. Precisely.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York [Mr. COUDERT] has expired.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS].

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, I am heartily in accord with this 12-month amendment. If it is true that it is impossible to train men to fight in 12 months, then a whole lot of fellows who did not know how to fight just finished whipping the devil out of Japan and Germany, because a whole lot of them were not in the Army 12 months.

As I said a while ago, pilot training in the United States Army, one of the highest of the technical-training divisions. only consists of 9 or 10 months. same is true of navigation and bombardier training. It took only 3 months during the war to make an officer out of a man, to take him out of civilian life and make a second lieutenant out of him and send him overseas. The success of a military-training program depends on the manner in which the time of the trainee is applied. If he is kept in the Army for 2 years under this program, I venture to say that much of it will be wasted in such chores as picking up cigarette butts. That is what I fear if you do not vote this 12-month amendment. As a matter of fact. I think it is not entirely impossible that they could concentrate this training and make it in 6 months.

I hope that the 12-month period is voted in order that we can make sure that these boys will get sufficient training and yet not have them going around these various Army posts doing nothing and having nothing to do.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Hoffman] for 2 minutes.

Mrs. ST. GEORGE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOFFMAN. I yield.

Mrs. ST. GEORGE. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the Coudert amend-

A great deal has been said on the floor of this House about the necessity of having a 2-year training period. I never thought I would stand in the well of this House and hear such a proposition come before the American Congress. I have lived a great part of my life in conscript countries. It has been said today that in the conscript nations of Europe 1 year of training is considered enough.

We had a great deal of talk here about our lack of preparation and why we did not have bigger and better armies. Has anyone ever stopped to think that this Nation has never lost a war? As the gentleman from Mississippi has just very accurately said, we have no apologies to offer for our armies of freemen. They have always done the job. They always will.

We have heard talk today about 1 year being too short to train a man and send him abroad in the army of occupation. I submit to you that we do not want to send these young men over to take their places as armies of occupation. It is bad for the morale. They are not doing a good job now with these young recruits in Germany and Japan. Ask any Army officer who comes back from there.

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. Will the lady yield?

Mrs. ST. GEORGE. I yield.

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. hundred thousand of them are overseas now. It is very difficult to find a way of rotating them home.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired. The gentlewoman from New York is recognized for 2 minutes.

Mrs. ST. GEORGE. One year's training out of the university career of many of these young men is certainly enough. If it is enough to build up the conscript armies of Europe, it is enough to build up our armies, becase we have a bigger pool from which to draw.

What are we trying to do?

Are we trying to compete in numbers with the Soviet Union? Then we are wasting our time and our breath. You cannot outbreed Russia. But freemenwill win; they won at Marathon; they have won all through the ages, and they will win today.

Let us do this in the American way. Let us not try and imitate conscription as it has been carried out in Europe, as it is carried out under a totalitarian regime. That is not what we want for our boys, for our young people. We do not want them to go over there and act as policemen at the age of 21. That is not good training for any man. That is the best way in the world to build up the bullying instinct that is in a great many of us. No; let the occupation be taken care of by the seasoned men who have been in the service. Even they will not do too good a job and they are not too good for it.

Mr. SMATHERS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentlewoman yield?

Mrs. ST. GEORGE. I yield. Mr. SMATHERS. Is it not a fact that the gentlewoman from New York, myself, and many other Members have received letters from constituents who have been in the service and are seeking to get back in? We send the letters to the War Department, but never seem able to get those men back in the service.

Mrs. ST. GEORGE. The gentleman is entirely correct; and I state again that I think the Army has raised their standards too high on purpose because the military want a conscript army.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentlewoman from New York has ex-

The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CROW] is recognized for 2 minutes.

Mr. CROW. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the 12-month amendment. I personally am opposed to breaking up or interfering with the education of our young men.

An amendment has been suggested to make the length of training 18 months. If you adopt such an amendment you might as well go to 2 years because you are going to interfere with 2 years of the boys' college work; but I am heartily in favor of the 12-month training period.

It is rather surpising to hear these remarks that training cannot be accomplished in 12 months. We have heard so much about UMT. They wanted the boys in for only 6 months. They have been trying to tell everybody that a 6month period would be sufficient for UMT. Now they say 12 months is not enough.

On Sunday afternoon I talked to about seven college boys and I want to tell you members of the committee that we have really disturbed their college life. I have never heard so many questions such as: What are you going to do with us? What is the best thing for us to do? Should we go into the Army today? Should we enlist now? We do not know what to do. We cannot study.'

Mr. Chairman, the damage has already been done. I hope the 12-month amendment is adopted, so that their education will be interrupted for only 1 year.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. REES] is recognized for 2 minutes.

Mr. REES. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment providing for a 12-month period of training. I have listened pretty carefully to a number of World War II veterans who have spoken in support of the 1-year training period. I am impressed with the statements of these men, our own Members who are combat veterans, men who were right on The gentleman from the firing line. Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS], who not only saw service but is badly crippled for life. has made a very convincing argument in favor of this 1-year amendment. He calls particular attention to the fact that these boys will get all necessary training in a period of 6 months, as far as training is concerned, and the military will have plenty to do to keep them occupied the remainder of the time. Attention is further directed to the fact that if this is a matter of training, then under the amendment, more men would have training than if the period of training is 2 years. Furthermore, the training would be equalized among more men who may be inducted under this proposed legislation. More than that, the young men who are called would not be required to sacrifice so much of their time from their regular pursuits. The chairman of the committee in charge of this measure has indicated there is no immediate demand. He has offered an amendment that postpones the effective date of this act for 75 days plus 60 days. He also says the requirement of the Army program is for approximately 200,000 men and that other components have all the men they need.

As I understand the program, it is intended that older men who are in the Regular Army will be expected to do whatever is required in the way of occupation forces in foreign countries. Most of the men inducted under this measure will be from 19 to 21 years of age. I am inclined to go along with the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] when he says that boys, after they are inducted, should be given plenty to do in the way of training. In other words, kept busy in training that is worth while. Mr. Chairman, another thing that ought to be observed is that in countries where they have conscripted men in the armies for years, and have more or less militaristic governments, the period of training in many of these countries is for 1 year. I do not believe, just because some of our military leaders want a 2-year period of training, that should be the compelling reason why we should follow their advice. If our country were in immediate need for a large armed force, the situation would be different. I am for adequate security. I voted for the big air force and for all appropriations for our defenses-Army, Navy, and Air Corps. I believe 1 year of intensive training for inductees is not only adequate but more practical and more recognized for 2 minutes.

Mr. NICHOLSON. Mr. Chairman, I am glad once in my life to stand before the Congress and tell why I am against all of these proposals of sending your boys and my boys to war. I had two of them myself. I went through all of this. When the Congress of the United States says something about war it is bad. It is bad because we invite trouble.

Mr. Chairman, why should we draft anybody? I would like to ask someone to get up here and tell me why we should draft anybody to go to war? We are a peace-loving people, we can maintain peace if the State Department and the rest of the people who are apparently running this country will tell us why we should draft a single, solitary soul in this country to go to war. They talk about 6 months. Well, I was just as good a soldier in 6 months as I was in a year. Anyone who takes the intensive training of the Army, Navy, or anywhere else will be a good soldier if he has got it in his heart. If he has not, he will not be a good soldier.

Mr. Chairman, why does not someone get up here and tell me why I should draft my neighbor's boy and his daughter and somebody else to go to war? If they can tell me, I will vote with them. If it is in defense of my country, I will go myself, old as I am, but do not tell me that you have to draft anybody to go to war in this country. If we need it, let the President of the United States call for volunteers and he will get them.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Maryland [Mr.

Mr. MILLER of Maryland. Chairman, the duty before us is to keep an eye on the objective. It is a very unpleasant thing to have to draft men in time of peace, but if the purpose of it is to fill an active need in our armed services right now, economy indicates we should not reduce the period of training to a point where we would defeat the very purpose we are seeking. I am sorry to have to disagree with some of the gallant and eminent members who have spoken. We must remember, for one thing, that the intense training the gentleman from Mississippi and others went through in the last war was under the tremendous incentive of a fighting war. You cannot train men as fast as that in time of peace as I have learned from hard experience. The expense of training a recruit is great, both on account of other men required to train him and because of the need of taking care of him. His service should be long enough so that by the time he is ready to do a job he is not almost ready to quit. It does not seem to me fair to give up a sound scheme because somebody's boy may not have to go at all.

Mr. Chairman, we have to think of the real objective, which is to meet a present

We are about to act on a measure to draft our young men in time of peace. The only sound excuse for such a departure from our previous national policy is the belief that our safety and that of the freedom-loving nations of the world is at stake.

The weight of the evidence that has been presented to the Congress is to that effect; that the personnel of our armed services, particularly in the case of the Army, is inadequate, and the needed numbers cannot be secured by voluntary enlistments. Obviously we cannot take the appalling risk of again being unprepared to defend ourselves, while our potential enemies are armed to the teeth. That chance we must not take-even if the claims that our military leaders are exaggerating the situation have some foundation. This Congress cannot afford to repudiate the judgment of the overwhelming majority of our generals, admirals, and other military experts—not to mention our own fine Committee on Armed Services. If we cannot have confidence in them, we better get a whole new set of technical experts.

Yes, we will undoubtedly do what the admirals and the generals recommend. I hope, however, that the Pentagon planners will take heed of signs of dissatisfaction that are developing on many sides. I hope they will not be misled by this vote into believing that the Members of this body are satisfied or will, in the end, be tolerant of their inept and disinterested handling of the programs of the civilian components of the Army and Air Force. The National Guard and Organized Reserves have been badly neglected. During recent debates here in the House, Member after Member has voiced his dissatisfaction in this regard.

In reporting the military functions bill just the other day, the Appropriations Committee said on page 16 of its report:

The committee was not impressed with the presentation of the needs for the funds requested or with the manner in which this program is apparently being conducted. Too many men are encouraged to enlist in the Reserves and then hear nothing further from

Those of us who are in close touch with the Reserve and National Guard affairs know that there is much disappointment and discontent in their ranks.

These are some of the manifestations of which the G2's and public relations experts better take note. The Pentagon planners and the high Army brass will be very badly fooled if they take the vote on this bill as a vote of confidence in the way they are handling the problems of the civilian components. I trust they will not be so misled. The fine soldiers and flyers that make up the National Guard and Army and and Air Corps Reserves are entitled to more understanding leadership. The Navy is doing much better in that regard. The Congress and the country want sound national preparedness with a minimum of expense and regimentation. This can only be accomplished by developing the volunteer civilian components to a maximum extent. It cannot be done if they are treated as unwelcome stepchildren of the regular establishments.

I hope the people of the country, as a whole, will also take to heart the situation that is confronting us.

Here we are drafting and spending billions on the armed services within less than 3 years after victory in the greatest war of all time. The pace is getting very fast. If democracy is to succeed our citizens must all work at it. It is a dangerous disregard of duty for an individual to fail to register, or to vote. The lack of interest shown in some localities in recent primaries is a danger signal. This country needs now, as never before, the best available leadership at each level of government.

We do not draft people to vote. It is a service, however, for which all good citizens should willingly volunteer. Manpower is not only needed on the farms and in the factories and the armed services—it is needed at the polls.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. Lemke].

Mr. LEMKE. Mr. Chairman, the step that we are asked to take is a serious one. It is in violation of the traditions of this Nation. It is aping the military clique of Hitler, as well as bygone ages. Peacetime conscription is foreign to America. It is un-American and it has no business here. It is an armament race which always has and always will end in disaster. Where are the Caesars, the Alexanders, the Napoleons, and Hitlers today? What became of their military machines and their nations? History tells us.

The fact remains that we are told by the militarists that we were unprepared in the last two wars, but yet we won the wars that others started, and we can do it again, if necessary, without destroying ourselves first.

This bill is unconstitutional, but what is the use of talking about constitutionality when the Executive controls the courts? This bill has been brought here by the military clique during the closing days of Congress. This is unfair to the Members of this body and unfortunate for America. Why this rush? Before we enact this bill we should at least discuss it with our masters, we the people, during the coming election. Involuntary servitude is not national defense. Selective service is not voluntary.

We are all for national defense, but to destroy ourselves is not national defense. Just what is national defense? Is it huge bodies of men, right face, column right, column left, and to the rear march, or are these performances obsolete? We must not repeat the blunders that the Army made when they court-martialed Billy Mitchell for telling them that its methods of war were obsolete. Time has proven that Billy Mitchell was right and the brass hats were wrong.

Future wars will be fought from the air. They will be fought not only with explosives, but also by spreading disease germs. The fighting forces in the future will consist largely of aviators, technicians, electricians, biologists, scientists, and mechanics.

These can best be trained in our high schools, colleges, universities, National Guard, and ROTC. I believe some such program was adopted by the American Legion a year ago in San Francisco. Many retired Army and Navy officers, and some generals and admirals still in the armed forces, agree that this would be the best national defense. There are other matters of far greater importance to our national defense than to take teen-age youngsters out of their homes and place them in voluntary service in military camps, where, to say the least, the morals are none too high.

As part of our national defense, we must stock-pile necessary metals. We must stop the depletion of our natural resources. We are in far greater need of a stock pile than we are for teen-age youngsters. The testimony before my Subcommittee on Mines has brought out this deplorable fact, that in case of war we would be out of manganese in 1 year, and completely out of chromium in 6 months.

You cannot manufacture steel without manganese, nor stainless steel without chromium. We have had members of the Munitions Board and National Resources Board before us, and they all admitted the deplorable condition which we are in, in case of war. This not only in regard to these two metals, but many others. They all admitted that something should be done, and it was up to Congress to do it.

Yet some of the Members that sponsored this un-American bill have and are opposing real national defense—the Russell bill. They have succeeded temporarily in blocking that bill from coming up for a vote. In place of this brass-hat bill, we should now be debating the Russell bill. Are we afraid of real national defense? Do we wish to embark and sail unknown seas—involuntary servitude—selective service?

There is a woodchuck in the wood pile. Someone is trying to prevent real national defense. Let us stop shadow boxing. We are in a dangerous and precarious condition because we lack a stock pile of essential and necessary metals. Our national defense has been neglected and blocked in this Congress.

The public has a right to know the situation. Secretary Krug stated before the Appropriations Committee that our stock pile was nil. The testimony before our subcommittee shows that it is even worse than nil.

If those back of this un-American bill want real national defense, then they should assist us in getting the Russell bill—in getting a stock pile—in place of throwing monkey wrenches into the machinery.

In place of taking teen-age youngsters from their homes and placing them in military camps, we should see to it that in case of war our armed forces have the implements with which to defend themselves and their Nation. Here is a real emergency. We should see that we have a sufficient stock pile.

In place of passing this bill and taking the teen-age youngsters from their homes, education, and work, to waste a year or two in outmoded and obsolete training, we should pass the Russell bill.

I realize that the brass hats say that they are going to educate these youngsters. Let me ask the fathers and mothers of these youngsters and the Members of this Congress, Do you wish to duplicate our educational system? Do you wish to have the brass hats educate your youngsters in their way of thinking? If you do, then you had better say goodby to your liberty,

I am for national defense, but real national defense and not the kind that is proposed in this bill, which to say the least is questionable national defense.

Real soldiers are not teen-age drafted boys, but men who wish to make the Army their life work. These can be gotten in sufficient number and more than we need if the Army and Navy removes some of the uncalled-for and unnecessary restrictions. Through the ages the best soldiers and fighters were not perfect physical specimens.

I am informed that some 45 percent of the men offering to enlist have been rejected. Some because they are slightly flat-footed, although they can run faster and shoot straighter than the officers who reject them.

Our admirals, generals, and enlisted men of the Army and Navy have made a splendid record on all battle fronts. We are justly proud of them. But the Army and Navy Departments here in Washington are just bureaucracies. They are just as fallible as other bureaucracies. They are everlastingly asking for more money and more men.

Both the Army and Navy Departments are in a rut. In place of following their dictates blindly, let us protect our Nation, and our youth. Let us get them out of the rut and bring them up to date.

It costs billions to continue the selective draft, whereas stock pile would cost less than $80,000,000 a year. Yet there are those who object to the stock pile, and say that it costs too much, and then blindly support this un-American involuntary selective service in peacetime. They are among my erring friends who have voted billions for grafting, foreign politicians, and inefficient, and in some cases, corrupt foreign governments.

Why an armament race? What has happened to the 52 peace-loving nations? What is wrong with the UN, which was to bring about permanent peace? Thus, and thus alone, can our liberties be preserved and our form of government be protected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from California [Mr. Bradley].

Mr. BRADLEY. Mr. Chairman, I shall take the first minute, at least, of my time to try to save the time of the committee tomorrow. At the proper time tomorrow the gentleman from New York [Mr. Buck] will introduce an amendment concerning the exemption of certain wartime merchant seamen. I know from experience what the first reaction is going to be. They got too much money; they got twice what the armed services did, and all that sort of thing which I have been listening to for years. It is not the truth.

Yesterday I put into the Record on pages 8370 to 8372 tables submitted by the Navy Department and the Maritime Commission showing the facts. I ask that you who have that feeling look at those tables, study them over, and then do not raise that particular bogey unless you want to have it knocked down quickly by the figures. Perhaps we can save some time if you will just do that.

Insofar as this particular amendment is concerned, I hope that we do not stand for the 18 months. I should like to see a clean-cut vote on the 12 months one way or the other. If we adopt the 12 months we will probably get 18, but let us not pussyfoot; let us vote for the 12 months and see where we stand.

Mr. SARBACHER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRADLEY. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. SARBACHER. I would like to add my voice to that of the other World War II veterans of the Eightieth Congress and say that as an ex-member of the Marine Corps I am strongly in favor of the 1year period and shall support this amendment wholeheartedly. It was proven beyond doubt in my judgment during the past war that this is an adequate training period.

Mr. BRADLEY. I thank the gentle-

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. MILLER].

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, the gentlewoman from New York [Mrs. St. George] made a very eloquent appeal to this body a few minutes ago. The words that she spoke should be echoed from coast to coast. She is a mother and was speaking for the mothers of America.

I want to tell this Committee briefly about the number of individuals rejected by the armed services. It took me about 2 months to find out how many men were actually being rejected: young men who came to the service saying, "I would like to get into the Army, the Navy, or the Air Corps." It is interesting to note that the Air Corps and the Navy and the Marine Corps have all the men they want, but do you know how many they rejected of those who volunteered to come in? Fifty-three percent. What did the Army do? I searched the records several weeks ago, as well as letters from the armed services. They rejected 37 percent of all the boys that applied to them for voluntary service. They wanted to get in. Why were they rejected? Because the Army saw fit to raise the standards higher than they had been during the draft days. I am not sure that they wanted them in the Army. I think they wanted to convince the Congres, that they could not get them. That standard should be lowered. The men who want to go into the Army on a voluntary basis should certainly be permitted to go in.

Mr. Chairman, I am going to support this amendment for 12 months. I think it is the horse-sense approach to it. I think it is time for this Congress, as we say in Nebraska, to use a little common horse sense. There is no need of making this 24 months, 2 years. A war is not on. If war breaks out, there would be no difficulty in this country getting men who had served before, in all groups and classes, to come to the defense of their country. So I say to you, Mr. Chairman, you ought to support this amendment for 12 months.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. FOLGER].

Mr. FOLGER. Mr. Chairman, I think I am patriotic. I believe I love my country and its security no better than you do but as well. But for the life of me I cannot see any logic or reason in declining to accept this amendment of 12 months instead of 2 years.

You heard one of the members of the Committee on Armed Services, in answer to a question propounded to him as to what they would do during these 12 months, "Is it a training program or is it something else," finally answer that they would receive 13 weeks of basic training. What is the idea of keeping them there 2 years instead of 1 to do something else, I do not know what? There might come a war, and it would last about 90 days. The bombing that would be done either in this country or in other countries that might be our enemy countries would end the whole thing in less than 6 months. The trouble we are in in talking about this draft bill on this occasion is that we are trying to prepare for a war upon the basis of using the weapons and the men in the manner we did in 1860, or prior even to the first war. I am going to support the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAWFORD].

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, we are here debating the method of raising the personnel for the most expensive game in which man has ever participated, and that is, war and the preparation for war.

I have come to the conclusion in my own mind that it is less costly to this country from every standpoint to have men voluntarily inducted into the military service, regardless of the dollar cost, than it is to incur the cost of bringing them into the service through conscription or enforced service or selective draft. Therefore, I am going to support this amendment. I have great admiration for the gentleman from New York who has offered this amendment. I find myself in agreement with him on many things, and that adds diginity to this amendment.

I understand the Shafer amendment will be offered again, and if it comes up I shall vote for that amendment. Unless this bill is very materially altered from its present form, I shall vote against the bill because I so terribly detest the bringing into our life and our ideals and institutions of the great forces which are here proposed.

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. Mr. Chairman, in view of the fact that two or three Members who have time are not here. I move that the Committee do now rise.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. Andrews].

Mr. SMATHERS. Mr. Chairman, I would like to be heard on that.

The CHAIRMAN. That is not a debatable motion. It is always within the discretion of the gentleman handling the bill to move that the Committee rise.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Chairman, under the arrangement entered into limiting debate on this amendment, will the Members who were scheduled to be recognized be recognized when the Committee resumes its deliberations?

The CHAIRMAN. They will be recognized, if the Committee should vote to rise, when the Committee meets again.

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. My understanding is that all those gentlemen whose names are on the list will be recognized immediately tomorrow.

The CHAIRMAN. The statement of the gentleman from New York is correct. Mr. COUDERT. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. COUDERT. Did not the gentleman from New York agree that there would be a vote on this amendment tonight? The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman does not state a parliamentary inquiry. gentleman from New York can speak for himself as to that.

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. My recollection is that I moved that the Committee continue debate on this amendment for 30 minutes, which motion was agreed to. After which the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. VINSON] asked unanimous consent that the time be extended to 50 minutes, which was agreed to, and also to vacate the proceedings by which the motion was agreed to to limit debate for 30 minutes. That was all that there was in that agreement.

The regular order was demanded.
The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. Andrews] that the Committee do now rise.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. Andrews of New York) there were-ayes 79, noes 94. Mr. ANDREWS of New York. Mr. Chairman, I ask for tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chairman appointed as tellers Mr. Andrews of New York and Mr. SMATHERS.

The Committee again divided; and the tellers reported there were-ayes 76, noes 139.

So the motion was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Missouri IMr. PLOESER]

Mr. PLOESER. Mr. Chairman, think this is a good time for the committee to vote on the amendment.

Vote down the 18-month amendment and vote for the 12-month amendment. Mr. Chairman, I yield back my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New York [Mr. Powelll for 2 minutes.

Mr. POWELL. Mr. Chairman, I yield back my time. I think it is time to vote

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LANDISI for 2 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Gross] for 2 minutes

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from West Virginia for 2 minutes.

Mr. ELLIS. Mr. Chairman, I shall support this amendment and I expect to vote against this bill.

The gentleman from Minnesota a while ago said that if they had consulted history they would not have proposed to induct doctors into the Army. I would suggest that if the committee had considered history at all this bill would not be on the floor today.

Mr. Chairman, it seems rather tragic that after 160 years of glorious history. after demonstrating on two occasions a military might that surpassed anything in all history, a superiority in manpower and equipment that amazed the world, our leaders are now ready to forsake a system that made all this possible and accept a system that has never prevented a war, has never won a war, a system that had kept Europe in turmoil for centuries and has brought it to the depths of despair and financial and economic collapse.

Every page of history cries out against this damnable thing-peacetime conscription.

Peace or the will to fight is built in the moral fiber and the hearts of men, and not in statute books.

Fortitude in war has its roots in the morality of peace, for courage is not a chance gift of nature like an aptitude for games.

A man of character in peace is a man of courage in war. And character is a habit—the daily choice between right and wrong. It is a quality which grows and the bearing of an army provides an index to the character of the Nation.

In the long run a nation finds that its strongest defense lines are back in the homes and schools of this Nation where character is built. That is what gives free people the power to win and hold their freedom. In this we have the greatest defense.

It is ironical that this Congress appropriates billions for relief all over the world and the proposal before us, certainly of questionable value, will consume $2,000,000,000 or $3,000,000,000 annually, and we have nothing for aid to education.

Here you present a proposal that strikes at the very heart of a system that has created our strongest defense-the character, courage, and creative genius of our people.

All America rebels against regimentation. Every red-blooded American youth has an inherent hatred for compulsion. It is not the way of free people. It is un-American.

General Foch, generalissimo of the Allied armies in World War I said: "A nation has the kind of army it deserves."

His own beloved France in two decades offers an example by giving us the two

In 1914 France had a stable government and was economically sound. Her people were imbued with a patriotic fervor that gave her an army that received the admiration of all the world. How different in 1942.

France, after a decade of New Dealism under Premier Blum, became completely demoralized-morally, economically, and financially. This decadence was reflected in her armies which were literally trampled under foot by the German hordes. What a tragedy, and they had peacetime conscription.

Later in 1942 and 1943 we found the conscription armies of the United Nations waiting. Waiting for what? They were waiting for the production and armed might of the United States-the product of free enterprise and a free people; factors that won this war.

In the name of God and humanity do not destroy the greatest asset we have-the genius of America.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New York [Mr. KEATING] for 2 minutes.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and yield back the balance of my time

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection. the gentleman may revise and extend his

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. SHAFER] for 2 minutes.

Mr. SHAFER. Mr. Chairman, I yield back my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Georgia IMr. VINSON] for 2 minutes.

Mr. VINSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield my time to the distinguished gentleman from Texas [Mr. KILDAY] to close the debate on the amendment.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Chairman, I object. He cannot do it under the rules.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman may not do that, but the gentleman from Georgia may claim his time and yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. VINSON. Mr. Chairman, I claim my time.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Will the Chair instruct the Members how to proceed?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia is recognized for 2 minutes.

Mr. VINSON. Mr. Chairman— Mr. KILDAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON. I yield. Mr. KILDAY. Mr. Chairman, I realize the situation that confronts me now. On the other hand, I do not feel that I would be justified in not taking the time inasmuch as I was charged with the obligation of handling the bill on behalf of the minority. So I hope I may have the attention of the membership.

I have been very much interested in noticing how many are voting for this amendment and against the bill. Again I realize the situation as it exists to-

I have also been interested in noticing that those who spoke in favor of the 12month amendment very carefully avoided referring to the bill by the title which it bears: The Selective Service Act of 1948. They have insisted in referring to it as training rather than as service.

The bill comes before us because the armed forces are not up to strength, cannot be and have not been brought up to strength by voluntary enlistments and some form of compulsion is necessary.

I have no complaint with any man who votes against the bill. I do not impugn his motives or his patriotism. I am sure that each is voting in accordance with the dictates of his own conscience. I do sincerely wish, however, that members of this committee would face the facts and vote for the bill or against the bill rather than to vote for amendments that will kill the bill. Each is responsible to his own conscience. the present parliamentary manner satisfies your conscience, well and good.

Another thing I want to mention is the reference to 4,000,000 men that are going to be trained. There are not 4,000,000 in the pool.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. VINSON] has expired.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Texas [Mr. KILDAY].

Mr. KILDAY. Mr. Chairman, the pool will not furnish that many men. What it means if you take them for 12 months is that those who have voluntarily enlisted for a period of 3 years remain overseas without any replacements. Those who are overseas stay there. There will be no replacement of those men. You do not want to take these men without training. We have said these men were to be trained. You want them to receive the same sort of basic training that the men received before. If you do that it means you are going to have a training period of 110 days; then if you make any sort of specialist out of him he is going to take an additional training period of 98 days. He is going to get, unless you do not want him to have it. 12 days' leave at the end of his training period.

It has been figured over a period of many years, and it always applied in the Regular Army, that a man was not sent overseas who had less than a full year of service. At the present time it is regarded that 15 months is the minimum of service remaining a man should have before he is sent overseas.

Mr. Chairman, this is a service bill. If you do not intend it to be that, just be frank, be honest, and vote against the whole bill and not resort to the device of attempting to kill it by inserting a period of 12 months of training. The situation is clear. The matter is up to you. Those of us on the committee have studied the matter and have analyzed the period of training necessary in order to secure some service out of these men, and we have brought you our recommendations.

I hope that there are enough Members here who will serve the best interests of the Nation by voting "no" on this amendment, that it will be defeated.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Chairman, at the Clerk's desk I have an amendment to reduce the period of service to 18 months. I therefore support, of course, the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania. There may be great practical force in the argument made by the gentleman from New York that his amendment should be supported in order to obtain in conference a compromise on 18 months, in view of the action taken in the other body requiring a 2year period of service. Indeed, the gen-tleman has indicated that is his objective. For that reason, and with that understanding, I shall also support his amendment in the likely event that the substitute fails.

Despite the great amount of thought and study I have given to this measure, it is not yet entirely clear to me how I shall vote at the conclusion of the debate. It depends to a considerable degree on the extent to which this bill may be perfected by amendment here.

In due course I shall support the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Shaffer], designed to require that every effort be made to secure voluntary enlistments before imposing conscription.

If a bill is passed, however, and whether or not my conscience shall eventually dictate support or otherwise, it is my hope, in the best interests of my country, that the measure finally adopted will be designed and worded in the manner most likely to achieve the underlying objective of strengthening our national defense.

It therefore seems important to me for us to bear in mind with regard to the precise issue now before us, that this is not a measure to provide for a program of universal military training but is a so-called selective-service bill to meet what is said, admittedly with much justification, to be in the nature of an existing emergency or, as others have phrased it, a period of tension.

The young men to be inducted under this program are to serve in the Army, not simply as trainees, as envisioned in the UMT measures, but as soldiers. In other words, if this bill passes they will be required to perform overseas duties and any and all required functions of a Regular soldier.

There is much merit, therefore, in the argument that if the bill is accepted it is not militarily or economically sound to shorten this period to 1 year. In fact, such a result would virtually preclude the possibility of any service for any inductees beyond the continental limits of this country.

On the other hand, if a 3- or 4-month training period be subtracted from the total, provided the period of service is made 18 months, it still leaves a possible period of more than 1 year's service overseas if the requirements of the Army are such that this disposition is considered militarily necessary.

The training programs to which the gentleman from New York has referred, in the various European countries, are more closely parallel to such a program as is envisioned within UMT legislation than a draft measure like that before us. One year, in my judgment, is too long for a training period, but is too short for service as a soldier. Two years, on the other hand, strikes me as unnecessarily long for a compulsory period of service as a soldier. For that reason, 18 months impresses me as a reasonable compromise. If, in order to achieve this period of time, it is necessary to vote for the amendment of the gentleman from New York, I bow to the exigencies of the situation.

Therefore, although I still reserve judgment on the final action which I shall take on this legislation, I shall support both of these amendments.

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired.

The question is on the substitute offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Fulton]. Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the substitute be again reported.

Resolved, That during the remainder of this week it shall be in order for the Speaker at any time to entertain motions to suspend the rules, notwithstanding the provisions of clause 1, rule XXVII; it shall also be in order at any time during the balance of this week for the majority leader or the chairman of the Committee on Rules to move that the House take a recess, and said motion is hereby made of the highest privilege; and it shall also be in order at any time during the balance of this week to consider reports from the Committee on Rules as provided in clause (2) (b), rule XI, except that the provision requiring a two-thirds vote to consider said reports is hereby suspended during the balance of this week.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

The SPEAKER. The Chair lays before the House a message from the Senate. The Clerk read as follows:

The Senate having proceeded to reconsider the bill (S. 110) entitled "An act to amend the Interstate Commerce Act with respect to certain agreements between carriers," returned by the President of the United States with his objections, to the Senate, in which it originated, it was

Resolved, That the said bill pass two-thirds of the Senators present having voted in the affirmative

AMENDMENT TO INTERSTATE COMMERCE ACT-MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES (H. DOC. NO.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the message of the President.

The Clerk read as follows:

To the Senate:

I return herewith, without my approval, S. 110, a bill to amend the Interstate Commerce Act with respect to certain agreements between carriers, because it would permit an important segment of the economy to obtain immunity from the antitrust laws, and would do so without providing adequate safeguards to protect the public interest.

This bill would authorize exemption from the antitrust laws for any carrier acting in concert with one or more competing carriers in the establishment of rates and related matters, if the Interstate Commerce Commission approves the procedural agreements under which such action would be taken. The Commission would be required to approve these agreements, if it should find that exemption from the antitrust laws would be in "furtherance of the national transportation policy.

Under this bill private carrier associations and rate bureaus, free from the restraints of the antitrust laws, could exercise broad powers over most forms of domestic transportation, including railroads, trucks and busses, water carriers, pipe lines, and freight forwarders. Carriers could agree privately among themselves upon the rates to be filed with, or withheld from, the Interstate Commerce Commission. Acting through these bureaus, groups of carriers could exercise a powerful deterrent influence upon the filing by an individual carrier of proposed rates which might benefit the public.

The exercise by private groups of this substantial control over the transportation industry involves serious potential harm to the public. Transportation rates affect the cost of goods as they move through each phase of production-from raw materials, through finished products, to the consumer. Power to control transportation rates is power to influence the competitive success or failure of other businesses. Legislation furthering the exercise of this power by private groups would clearly be contrary to the public interest.

My disapproval of this bill does not signify opposition to carrier associations as such, or to all of their present functions. Many of their activities are useful and desirable. However, this legislation is not necessary for the continuation of such activities.

No legislation giving a major industry immunity from the antitrust laws should be enacted unless adequate alternative safeguards are provided for the public interest. This measure fails to provide such safeguards. Even the limited safeguards incorporated in the bill as originally passed by the Senate are omitted from the bill in its present form. It would require the Interstate Commerce Commission to approve any agreement which it finds to be in furtherance of the national transportation policy. This is a vague and general standard and is manifestly neither adequate nor appropriate as a criterion for waiving the protection afforded the public by the antitrust laws.

Furthermore, the Commission would be placed in the position of applying this general criterion to the basic procedural agreements without being able to foresee fully the nature and effect of the joint actions which would be taken thereunder. Nevertheless, the exemption from the antitrust laws would extend to these subsequent actions without the necessity of further Commission approval. It would extend, moreover, even beyond the parties to the basic agreement to any "other persons" who participate in such

Even though transportation rates are subject to regulation by the Interstate Commerce Commission, the public interest nevertheless demands that the general national policy of maintaining competition continue to be applied to the industry. Our present transportation policy contemplates a pattern of partial regulation, within the framework of which the pressures of competition will remain substantially effective. Regulation cannot entirely replace these competitive pressures. It can guard against some of the potential abuses of monopoly power, but it cannot be an effective substitute for the affirmative stimulus toward improved service and lower rates which competition provides. By sanctioning rate control by groups of carriers, this legislation would represent a departure from the present transportation policy of regulated competition. This, I believe, would be a serious mistake, with far-reaching effects on our economy.

Antitrust cases are now before the courts challenging some of the very activities which would be covered by this bill. Pending judicial clarification of the issues raised in these proceedings, it would be inappropriate to provide the immunity proposed by this bill.

I have repeatedly urged upon the Congress the necessity for a vigorous antimonopoly program. This bill would be inconsistent with such a program.

For these compelling reasons, I find it necessary to withhold my approval from the measure.

HARRY S. TRUMAN. THE WHITE HOUSE, June 10, 1948.

The SPEAKER. The objections of the President will be spread upon the Journal and the message and the bill printed as a public document.

Mr. WOLVERTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that further proceedings under the veto message be postponed until tomorrow.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

FEDERAL-AID ROAD ACT

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the conferees on the bill (H. R. 5888) to amend and supplement the Federal-Aid Road Act, approved July 11, 1916 (39 Stat. 355), as amended and supplemented, to authorize appropriations for continuing the construction of highways, and for other purposes, may have until midnight to file a conference report.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

COMMITTEE ON BANKING AND CURRENCY

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection. Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I am calling a meeting of the Committee on Banking and Currency to convene at 9 o'clock tomorrow morning in the Banking and Currency Committee room. I take this time to notify members so that they will all know that we will meet on the housing bill, H. R. 6959, at that time. INTERNATIONAL LABOR ORGANIZATION

Mr. JACKSON of California submitted a conference report and statement on the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 117) providing for acceptance by the United States of America of the constitution of the International Labor Organization instrument of amendment, and further authorizing an appropriation for payment of the United States share of the expenses of membership and for expenses of participation by the United States.

SPECIAL ORDER

The SPEAKER. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from Florida [Mr. Peterson] is recognized for 60 minutes.

Mr. PETERSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the time allotted to the Florida delegation be vacated, in view of the lateness of the hour.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

There was no objection.

FORT MOULTRIE MILITARY RESERVATION

Mr. ELSTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the proceedings whereby the bill (H. R. 2912) providing for the conveyance to the State of South Carolina of that portion of the Fort Moultrie Military Reservation determined to be surplus to the military needs of the War Department, was passed on the Consent Calendar this afternoon, be vacated, and that the bill be considered at this time for the purpose of offering a clarifying amendment.

The Clerk read the title of the bill. The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio? There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War is authorized and directed to convey by quitclaim deed without compensation to the State of South Carolina, that portion of land constituting the Fort Moultrie Military Reservation, together with the buildings and other improvements thereto, and the rights and appurtenances thereto belonging or ap-pertaining, determined by him to be surplus to the requirements of the War Department.

SEC. 2. Such conveyance shall contain the provision that whenever the Congress of the United States shall declare a state of war or other national emergency to exist, upon the determination by the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy, that the property so conveyed is useful or necessary for military or naval purposes, or in the interest of national defense, the United States shall have a right without paying compensation to reenter upon such property and use the same or any part thereof for the duration of such state of war or other national emergency.

SEC. 3. Such conveyance shall contain the further provision that if the State of South Carolina shall, at any time, cease to use the property so conveyed for public purposes, title thereto shall revert to the United States.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 3, strike out "War" and insert "the Army."

Page 1, line 10, strike out "War" and after "Department" insert "of the Army."

Page 2, line 4, strike out "War or" and insert "the Army."

Page 2, line 5, after "Navy", insert "or the Secretary of the Air Force."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

Mr. ELSTON. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Elston:

On page 1, line 3, strike "war" and insert "the Department of the Army."

On page 1, line 4, after the word "to", insert "the Board of Township Commissioners for Sullivans Island, as trustee for."

On page 1, line 10, strike "War", delete the period after the word "Department", and insert "of the Army."

On page 2, section 2, lines 3, 4, and 5, strike "to exist, upon the determination by the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy", and insert "and when any of the armed services shall determine."

On page 2, section 3, line 12, after the word "the", insert "Board of Township Commissioners for Sullivans Island, as trustees for

On page 2, section 3, line 14, strike "use" and insert "retain fee simple title to", and in the same line strike "for public purposes", and insert "or cease to be used in the public

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill providing for the conveyance to the State of South Carolina of that portion of the Fort Moultrie Military Reservation determined to be surplus to the needs of the Department of the Army."

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. BLATNIK asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a newspaper article.

PERMISSION TO EXTEND REMARKS AT THIS POINT

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. Speaker, Mr. McCORMACK. while Members were denied the opportunity of speaking in defense of President Truman's veto and to the previous question having moved, the President's veto of H. R. 6355 once again gave us the opportunity to reflect upon and reconsider the action taken by this House to carve up the Department of Labor. By substantive legislation in the form of an appropriation rider it transfers the United States Employment Service from the Department of Labor to the Federal Security Agency.

This, Mr. Speaker, is a form of legislative process which the Congress itself in the Congressional Reorganization Act of 1946 renounced. This, Mr. Speaker, is a usurpation by the Appropriations Committee of the proper functions and prerogatives of the legislative committees. This action, Mr. Speaker, is a repudiation of sound and deliberate legislative processes.

The question of transferring the United States Employment Service to the Federal Security Agency has been long and carefully deliberated upon by the appropriate legislative committees. In 1947 the President submitted Reorganization Plan No. 2, which provided for the permanent retention of the United States Employment Service in the Department of Labor where it properly belongs. That plan was rejected by the Congress on the grounds that the unemployment compensation and employment service programs which were closely interrelated should be administered in the same department of Government. In January of this year, consistent with the expressed desire of the Congress that both of these programs be administered in the same governmental agency, the President submitted Reorganization Plan No. 1 of 1948, which, if it had been adopted, would have achieved this objective. This time it was rejected by the Congress because it was considered appropriate to await the report of the Hoover Commission which is making a study of the entire executive branch of the Government. Every Member of this House who spoke against Reorganization Plan No. 1 of 1948, advocated that no action be taken to effect any transfer within the executive branch of the Government until Congress had had an opportunity to study the report of the Hoover Commission. Every Member of the Senate who spoke in opposition to that plan took precisely the same position. A prominent candidate for Republican nomination sounded the keynote on the floor of the Senate during the consideration of that plan and I quote from his statement.

My own conclusion is that until we have more comprehensive study of the whole Federal Government, and until we have a comprehensive reorganization plan, we ought to leave things as they are. The report of the Hoover Commission, I understand, is proceeding and is expected to be made by the first of next January, where it will be before the Congress.

Thus, Mr. Speaker, after full and deliberate consideration by both Houses of the Congress the verdict was to retain the status quo.

Hard upon the heels of this decision by the Congress, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Keefel as chairman of the Labor-Federal Security Appropriations Subcommittee submitted to this body H. R. 6355 which provides for the transfer of the United States Employment Service to the Federal Security Agency, a provision which flies in the very teeth of the position taken by the Congress only a few weeks previously. This gentleman on June 11, 1946, himself made the following statement with respect to the proper location of the United States Employment Service and I quote from page 6684 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of that date:

Mr. KEEFE. I have told you about the transfer to the War Manpower Commission of the Apprentice Training Service and the United States Employment Service. These services by administrative action have now been sent back to the Department of Labor so that we now have in the Department of Labor section of the (Appropriations) bill the Apprentice Training Service and the United States Employment Service again back in the Labor Department where they very properly belong.

Since that date there has not been a single development which should make the gentleman from Wisconsin undertake to change his mind.

Mr. Speaker, the Senate Appropriations Committee in its consideration of this bill, quite properly deleted the appropriation rider transferring the Employment Service out of the Department of Labor, and the Senate itself sustained its former position to await the report of the Hoover Commission. I regret, therefore, that the conferees in their desire to reach an early agreement restored the appropriation rider.

Under the provisions of this bill, the United States Employment Service will be reduced from a bureau to a division in the Bureau of Employment Security, where once again its effectiveness will become seriously impaired and where its job-finding functions will be subordinated to the payment of unemployment compensation. I think we should bear in mind that it was precisely this organizational arrangement which the Congress intended to prohibit when in section 604 of the Servicemen's Readjustment Act of 1944 it provided that the agency administering the United States Employment Service shall administer that service as a separate operating entity. With its identity as a bureau lost, with a single appropriation for unemployment compensation and employment service activities both on the Federal and State levels, it is a foregone conclusion that the Employment Service will be unable to operate as a separate entity.

Four years ago with its eyes hopefully or frantically watching the ballot box, the majority pledged itself to consolidate in the Department of Labor all major labor functions. The action which the majority party has taken to transfer the Employment Service out of the Department of Labor completes its repudiation of its party pledge—or is this just another case of promises gibly made and just as glibly broken? If this veto is not sustained, not a single labor function will remain in the Department of Labor. Its dismemberment will be complete.

The Hoover commission report will be presented to the Congress within 10 days after it reconvenes in January 1949. In light of the position recently taken by this Congress that no action should be taken to transfer or reshuffle any functions in the executive branch of the Government, the President's veto will be sustained.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. HAGEN asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the Red Lake-Clear Water River project and include letters, communications, and newspaper articles.

Mr. WOLVERTON asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an editorial.

SENATE

THURSDAY, JUNE 17, 1948

(Legislative day of Tuesday, June 15, 1948)

The Senate met at 11 o'clock a. m., on the expiration of the recess.

Rev. Bernard Braskamp, D. D., pastor of the Gunton Temple Memorial Presby-terian Church, Washington, D. C., offered the following prayer:

O Thou gracious benefactor, whose blessings are abundantly adequate for all our needs, may this moment of prayer be for each of us a cleansing of heart and a consecration to those desires which Thou dost delight to satisfy.

Grant unto us the mind and the mood of the Master as we face the tasks and responsibilities of this day. May we never be recreant in any duty and may there be nothing in our character and conduct of which we shall be ashamed when the sun has set or at the eventide of life when Thou dost call us to Thyself.

When we stand at the crossroads and are in doubt which way to go, may we hear and heed Thy voice saying unto us: "This is the way, walk ye therein," for Thy ways are ways of pleasantness and Thy paths are paths of peace.

Hear us in the name of the Christ. Amen.

STATUS QUO IN RESPECT OF CERTAIN EMPLOYMENT TAXES AND SOCIAL-SECURITY BENEFITS

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, on behalf of my colleague the junior Senator from Alabama [Mr. Sparkman] and myself, I ask unanimous consent to introduce for appropriate reference a bill to restore the status quo in respect of certain employment taxes and social-security benefits pending action by Congress on extended social-security coverage, and I request that a statement in explanation of the bill, prepared by me, may be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the bill will be received and appropriately referred, and, without objection, the statement presented by the Senator from Alabama will be printed in the RECORD.

The bill (S. 2883) to restore the status quo in respect of certain employment taxes and social-security benefits pending action by Congress on extended social-security coverage was received, read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

The statement presented by Mr. HILL is as follows:

STATEMENT OF SENATOR HILL

The bill which Senator SPARKMAN and I have introduced repeals sections 1 and 2 of House Joint Resolution 296 which was pa over the President's veto on June 14. House Joint Resolution 296 contained two major provisions: (1) a rovision defining the term "employee" for social-security purposes so as to apply "the usual common law rules ap-plicable in determining the employer-employee relationship" (secs. 1 and 2 of the resolution); (2) to provide $5 a month additional to needy aged and blind persons and $3 additional for dependent children, in section 3.

The bill does not affect in any way whatsoever the latter provision for increasing the payments to needy aged and blind persons and dependent children. The provision increasing the Federal contribution to the needy aged, blind, and dependent children will inure to the benefit of over 3,000,000 persons now on the rolls. This is a highly meritorious provision, and, as a matter of fact, does not go far enough in our opinion in increasing payments to needy persons, which ayments are most inadequate.

The sole purpose of the bill which we have introduced is to repeal those sections of House Joint Resolution 296 which had the effect of rendering uncertain, or jeopardizing or excluding, social-security rights to many thousands of persons who should be covered. We have long favored a broadening of the coverage and the liberalizing of the benefits of the program.

Under the terms of the United States Supreme Court decision in the Silk case, which was decided by the Supreme Court on June 16, 1947, the Social Security Administration and the Treasury Department were directed to apply a very liberal interpretation of the term "employee" for social-security purposes. The intent of House Joint Resolution 296 was to give a narrow and restrictive interpretation to the term "employee" which would have the effect of adversely affecting thousands of persons in building up rights We beunder the social-security program. lieve that it is legally sound and administratively feasible to have a liberal interpretation of the term "employee" along the lines laid down by the United States Supreme Court. The bill which we have introduced would restore the status quo which existed prior to the enactment of House Joint Resolution 296, namely, that of applying the rule of law laid down by the United States Supreme Court.

We very much hope that Congress will act with expedition to assure the social-security rights of the thousands of persons adversely affected by sections 1 and 2 of House Joint Resolution 296.

FEDERAL AID TO STATES-TRAINING FACILITIES FOR NATIONAL GUARD AND NAVAL MILITIA-AMENDMENT

Mr. BALDWIN submitted an amendment in the nature of a substitute intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 1085) to provide Federal aid to the States for the construction of armories and similar training facilities for the National Guard and Naval Militia, which was referred to the Committee on Armed Services and ordered to be printed.

NATIONAL HEALTH PROBLEMS—REPORT ON ACTIVITIES OF COMMITTEE ON LABOR AND PUBLIC WELFARE

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I think it is fitting before the adjournment of the Eightieth Congress for me to make a brief report to the Congress as chairman of the Subcommittee on Health of the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare.

The Subcommittee on Health has been very active during both sessions of the Eightieth Congress. While there have been many bills covering various aspects of the health problem considered by the Committee, our principal attention has been directed to a consideration of the over-all health problem of the United States and the suggestions that have been made from time to time and incorporated in messages of the President of the United States in recommending the establishment of some form of compulsory health insurance for all our people.

The most important investigation undertaken by the committee during the hearings held in both sessions of the Eightieth Congress have been concerned with this very controversial issue of compulsory health insurance. Because of the fact that the subcommittee was unable to arrive at any definite conclusions with regard to this matter, the committee unanimously reported a resolution known as Senate Resolution 249, providing for a continuation of the study of national health problems by the committee and a report to the next Congress not later than March 15, 1949.

This matter is of such importance that I ask unanimous consent to insert in the Record at this point in my remarks the full report of the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare accompanying Senate Resolution 249. Let me note in incorporating this report that it contains a reference to the poll made by the committee of the governors of the 48 States in order to obtain their views on the correct approach to this problem, and it also contains the summary, conclusions, and recommendations of the Brookings Institution which was invited by the chairman of the subcommittee to make a report on this matter.

There being no objection, the report (No. 1571) was ordered to be printed in the Recorp as follows:

The Committee on Labor and Public Welware, to whom was referred the resolution (S. Res. 249) to provide authorization for the Subcommittee on Health of the said committee to continue its study of the health problems of the Nation and of legislative proposals relating thereto, having considered the same, report favorably thereon without amendment and recommend that it do pass.

The resolution is as follows:

"[S. Res. 249, 80th Cong., 2d sess.]

"Resolved, That the Senate Committee on Labor and Public Welfare is hereby authorized and directed through the Subcommittee on Health of the said committee to

"(a) continue its study of the health prob-lems of the Nation and of legislative proposals relating thereto which have been referred to the said subcommittee which study shall be primarily concerned with ascertaining the full extent and nature of existing national health problems and the action, if any, which the Federal Government should take in relation to said problems;

"(b) consult, in the course of such study, with Federal agencies administering health and related programs, with such other legis-lative committees of the Senate as are concerned with related matters, and with such other agencies, organizations, or persons as the subcommittee may desire to consult;

"(c) report to the Senate not later than March 15, 1949, the results of the study, together with such proposed legislation, if any, and such other recommendations as the sub-committee may deem desirable.

"SEC. 2. (a) The Senate Committee on Labor and Public Welfare, through the said Sub-committee on Health, is authorized to sit and act at such times and in such places during the sessions, recesses, and adjourned periods of the Eightieth Congress; to employ such consultants, clerical, and other assistance; to procure such printing and binding; to require by subpena or otherwise the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such books, papers, and documents; to administer such oaths; to take such testimony; and to make such expenditures, within the limits below set forth, as it deems advisable. The cost of stenographic services to report such hearings shall not be in excess of 25 cents per hundred words.

"(b) The expenses incurred under this resolution, which shall not exceed $10,000, shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers approved by the chairman of the committee."

BACKGROUND SUMMARY OF WORK OF THE SUBCOMMITTEE ON HEALTH

The Subcommittee on Health of the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare concluded on June 1, 1948, a series of extensive hearings on major bills containing proposed health legislation. These hearings have con-tinued intermittently over a period of more than a year during this Congress. Earlier hearings on corresponding measures were held during previous Congresses. A large number of witnesses representing many different organizations, groups, and individuals, and presenting different and often widely divergent views, were heard during this time. The resultant record of the direct testimony and other evidence available to the subcommittee is voluminous; it is likewise fundamental in its broad implications, as well as in its bearing on ways and means of dealing with health problems.

During the present Congress to date, a total of 27 bills on proposed health legislation have been referred to the Subcommittee on Health for consideration. Of these, S. 545, intro-duced by Mr. TAFT, for himself and others, and S. 1320, introduced by Mr. MURRAY, for himself and others, are comprehensive pro-posals containing, among their many provisions, various measures for dealing with the controversial question of medical care for individuals. Owing to the comprehensive-ness and importance of these two major proposals, and because their provisions affect, overlap, or duplicate the contents of a majority of the remaining bills before the subcommittee, it was fitting that this subcommittee should devote the greater part of its available time to the consideration of these comprehensive measures. Hearings on S. 545 and S. 1320 were convened on 26 different days during this Congress. Hearings also have been held on the following bills: S. 1290, providing for grants-in-aid to the States to assist in the development of school health services for the prevention, diagnosis, and treatment, of physical and mental defects and conditions; S. 720 and S. 2215 providing for the support of research, training, and control in diseases of the heart and circulation; S. 678, providing certain medical supplies and services to individuals; and S. 2341, authorizing an increase in the annual appropriation for the Gorgas Memorial Laboratory for research in tropical diseases. Scope of proposed legislation under consideration of the subcommittee also includes measures for the expansion and maintenance of local publichealth units (S. 2189); for the training of medical, dental, nursing, and public-health personnel (S. 1455 and S. 2588); for the construction of nursing homes for aged persons (S. 2640); and others.

During this Congress to date, the bills reported to and passed by the Senate include: S. 176, providing for research, training, and control in dental diseases; S. 1454, providing for the promotion of Public Health Service commissioned personnel and for other administrative matters; and S. 2215, providing for research, training, and control in diseases of the heart and circulation. The provisions of these bills clearly fall within the province of, and they further support, established, long-range operations of the Federal Government in the public-health field. A majority of the other basic proposals under considera-tion by the Subcommittee on Health, however, involve serious differences of opinion with respect to their proper place in the overall approach to health problems, and with respect to the proper role of the Federal Government in relation thereto. Most of these proposals must be considered in relation to other health measures, existing and proposed, rather than piecemeal.

FUNDAMENTAL ISSUES UNDERLYING THE CON-SIDERATION OF POSTPONED HEALTH LEGISLA-

The problems involved in the consideration of health legislation are numerous and frequently complex. Yet, certain fundamental issues have emerged from the findings of the subcommittee which require further investigation and study, as a prelude to any broad recommendations governing health legislation. First, the question whether a serious national health problem actually exists is a debatable issue. Evidence available to the subcommittee on this matter is quite conflicting and further inquiry into the subject is deemed necessary. The issue involves consideration of (1) the state of the health of the population, (2) the distribution of the Nation's medical. hospital, dental, and other health services, and (3) whether or not the majority of the population has access to such services.

Second, there is a fundamental question as to whether, and to what extent, it is nec-essary for the Federal Government further to expand its operations in the field of health. Available evidence raises many questions as to the desirability, as well as the necessity, of wide-scale Federal intervention, particularly in the field of medical care for indi-

Third, the basic issue involved in the provision of medical and certain other health services for individuals, in the event of further Federal expansion in this field, rests in the question of methods or systems to be employed. The two major proposals under consideration by the subcommittee, S. 545 and S. 1320, differ very fundamentally as to method. The former is essentially a grant-in-aid system to assist the States in developing their own health programs. It is predicated on the assumption that individuals and families able to pay for their own medical and other health care will do so, either through voluntary participation in existing prepayment plans or by direct pay-ment of fees for services. Wide latitude is given the States in working out plans for providing required health services for persons unable to pay the costs. On the other hand, the basic medical-care provisions of S. 1320 call for the adoption of a system of compulsory health insurance, under which all employed persons would be taxed to sup-port a central health fund. The Federal Government would have general supervision of the system, including necessary regulatory procedures and control of the central The issues raised in consideration of such a compulsory system are multitudinous and extremely controversial. Moreover, such issues frequently extend far beyond the ditions directly associated with determinable health problems, involving and affecting, as they do, the form and functioning of the economic system, the operations and responsibilities of the respective levels of government, and the whole question of the rights of individuals.

Fourth, it is apparent that individual measures in proposed health legislation must be considered in proper perspective rather than individually. It is further apparent that health legislation as a whole, enacted and proposed, must be considered in relation to other broad welfare programs of government. The fundamental issue here is that of ascertaining the long-range effects of such proposals as compulsory health insurance and wide-scale grants-in-aid programs, assuming they were to be adopted and their resultant tax levies and regulatory requirements were added to those already existing. Very little light has been shed on this whole question; yet it is of the utmost importance to further deliberation on proposed health legislation.

Fifth, there is a basic question as to the proper administrative organization for dealwith health functions. Regardless of whatever specific health programs might be adopted by Congress, the organizational issue will have to be faced. Health programs and related functions of the Federal Government are now widely scattered throughout the various governmental departments and agencies, with an accompanying lack of full coordination. Present proposals before the committee involve organizational questions, although none of them cut across all the major departmental lines involved. There has been reported for consideration of the Senate during this Congress a bill (S. 140) providing for the creation of a new executive department to be known as the Department of Health, Education, and Security. Passage of this bill, or any similar proposal, would affect the ultimate consideration and perfection of pending health measures.

Furthermore, the entire organization of the executive branch of the Government is now being studied by the Commission spe-cifically created for that purpose by Public Law 162, which was passed during the first session of this Congress. This Commission on Organization of the Executive Branch of the Government is giving detailed consideration to the existing Federal functions and organizational structure concerned with health and related matters. The Commission undoubtedly will make a number of fundamental recommendations affecting health and welfare administration when it reports to the Eighty-first Congress in January 1949. Since the Federal Government already is engaged in health and related activities to an extent much greater than may be generally realized, it is entirely fitting that the Subcommittee on Health should have the opportunity of availing itself of the Commission's recommendations on the organizational question.

Finally, it is a matter of fact, although frequently overlooked in testimony before the subcommittee, that health does not exist in a vacuum. Instead, health is the net result of the working of a very considerable range of environmental, personal, and other interrelated factors. Legislation pro-viding medical care alone, for example, will not necessarily guarantee the prevalence of good health. Should there be also an extension of the present Federal public-health program?

ORIGINAL EVIDENCE MADE AVAILABLE TO SUBCOMMITTEE ON HEALTH

In addition to the extensive hearings conducted by the Subcommittee on Health, the inquiry into proposed health legislation has led to the recent production of certain original information on the subject which, it is believed, merits the careful consideration, not only of the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare but of all Members of Congress and the public as well. This informa-tion deals, on the one hand, with the prefer-ences of the State governors in regard to national health proposals and, on the other hand, with the results of a fundamental analysis of the issues underlying such pro-posals by the Brookings Institution. The basic import of this evidence, high lights of which are outlined below, is such that it necessitates considerable rethinking and reevaluation of proposed health legislation.

PREFERENCES OF STATE GOVERNORS

In August 1947, copies of the two principal national health proposals under considera-tion, S. 545 and S. 1320, were submitted to the respective State governors. The pro-posals were submitted on behalf of the Subcommittee on Health by its chairman, and the governors were requested to indicated their views and preferences as limited to a choice between the two major proposals. Replies were received from 40 of the 48 governors, a summary of which follows:

Numbe
Classification of replies: govern	078 Favored S. 545 (with or without qualifications)	25
Favored S. 1320	0
No preference indicated	10
Not in favor of either S. 545 or
S. 1320	5
Did not report	8
mindib municipality states parameter	-
Total	48

Although this report of preferences of the governors clearly indicated their general disapproval of S. 1320, and thus of compulsory health insurance as therein provided, the reports were in no sense overwhelmingly favorable to the provisions of S. 545. 25 governors expressed preference for this grant-in-aid measure over S. 1320, most of them did so with considerable reservation as to provisions of the bill. Perhaps equally significant was the fact that 5 governors ex-pressly disapproved both of the proposals while 10 did not elect to indicate any pref-erence. Analysis of the detailed reports in-dicates that it is not unlikely that a much larger number of the governors than did would have indicated disapproval of both bills had such an alternative choice been included in the inquiry.

This inquiry was neither designed nor intended as a full-blown survey of the prob-lem and its results are obviously of limited application. Nevertheless, the broad impli-cations of the governors' reports cannot be ignored; namely, that in general the State governments, which they represent, do not appear to be confronted with health problems sufficiently serious at this time to demand either wide-scale intervention by the Federal Government or the introduction of revolutionary methods for dealing with the problems that do exist.

FINDINGS OF THE BROOKINGS INSTITUTION

In view of the controversial nature of the principal issues before the committee, a very real need has existed for a competent and expert analysis of the problem by a disinterested organization. Accordingly, in May 1947 the Brookings Institution was requested by the chairman of the subcomimttee to un-dertake such an analysis. The long-established reputation of this public service institution as an independent research foun-dation is well known in Congress and elsewhere. The Brookings Institution accepted the assignment as a public service to Congress and on February 17, 1948, transmitted an advance summary of their conclusions and recommendations to the subcommittee. Subsequently, the full context of the report, which was published by the institution in April 1948, was made available to the committee. The broad conclusions and recommendations are as follows:

CONCLUSIONS

1. Probably no great nation in the world has among its white population better health than prevails in the United States. A few small homogeneous countries, such as New Zealand with respect to its white population, are slightly ahead of the United States as a whole, but certain States of the United States with larger populations equal them.

2. It is apparent that the United States under its voluntary system of medical care has made greater progress in the application of medical and sanitary science than any other country. This progress is now reflected in low mortality and morbidity rates of infectious diseases and in increased life expec-There is every reason to believe that these trends will continue unabated under our present system of medical care.

3. The nonwhites in the United States have materially poorer health than the whites, but the evidence does not indicate that this condition is primarily or even mainly due to inadequacy of medical care.

4. The advances in health among both the whites and the nonwhites that have been made in the United States in the past four decades do not suggest basic defects in the American system.

5. Although the statistics resulting from the administration of the Selective Service Act—the so-called draft statistics—have been widely used to show bad health among the American people and the need for revolutionary changes in arrangements for medical care of individuals, they are unreliable as a measure of the health of the Nation and cannot be used to show the extent of the medical needs of the country as a whole.

6. Present medical care in the United States compares favorably with that which existed in other leading nations prior to the Second World War.

7. The conditions in extremely poor rural areas that lack the resources to support adequate public services, such as health work, education, and highways cannot be satisfac-torily solved by subsidies. This problem calls for a radically different approach, either bringing in new or improved economic activities or getting the people to more favorable and administratively less expensive areas. This condition has been accentuated by the emigration of youth from these areas to urban communities.

8. The United States has some individuals and families not possessed of the resources to enable them to pay for adequate medical care. In the future, as in the past, provision must be made for them through public funds or philanthropy. The evidence sug-gests that many of them are elderly, impaired, or underendowed or are widows or deserted women or their dependents. It is doubtful that they could be effectively covered by com-pulsory insurance because they would lack the means to attain and maintain an insured status. The large majority of American familles have the resources to pay for adequate medical care if they elect to give it a high priority among the several objects of expenditure. The issue is not whether they can afford medical care but whether they should be compelled by law to pool their risks and to give payment for medical care a top pri-ority. The major alternative for people with ability to pay is to leave them free to deter-mine for themselves what medical care they desire and whether they will pool their risks through voluntary arrangements.

9. Compulsory health insurance would necessitate a high degree of governmental regulation and control over the personnel and the agencies engaged in providing medical care. This field of regulation and control would be far more difficult than any other large field previously entered by the Gov-ernment, and past experience with governmental regulations and control in the United States causes doubt as to whether it en-courages initiative and development.

10. The problem of eliminating politics from Government administration is extremely difficult. It does not seem probable that politics could be eliminated from Medical care supplied under a governmental system.

11. Compulsory insurance would inject the Government into the relationship between practitioner and patient. A real danger exists that Government actions would impair that relationship and hence the quality of

12. The administration of compulsory insurance would require thousands of Government employees for accounting, auditing, and inspection and investigation.

13. The cost of medical care presumably would increase because of (a) administrative expenses; (b) the tendency of insured persons to make unnecessary and often unreasonable demands upon the medical-care services; and (c) the tendency of some practitioners and agencies to use the system for their own financial advantage.

14. The adoption of compulsory insurance would not immediately make available adequate medical service for all, because there are not at present the facilities nor a suffi-cient number of trained and experienced physicians, dentists, and nurses to meet the demand which would result from compulsory insurance

15. Proposals for compulsory insurance provide for payment of practitioners under one or all of three methods: (a) Fee for service, (b) per capita, or (c) salary. Use of the fee-for-service device represents the minimum degree of socialization, but it is administratively difficult. Administrative difficulties would probably result in the adoption of the per-capita system which represents a higher degree of socialization or even in the salary system which represents practically complete socialization. It seems questically complete socialization. tionable whether a country which once em-barks on compulsory insurance can turn back but must attempt to remedy defects by more complete Government control and administration.

RECOMMENDATIONS

1. For the present, in our judgment, the National Government would be wise to leave to the individual States the question of whether compulsory health insurance is to be adopted or whether the provision of pro-fessional services is to be left in the realm of free enterprise. It seems highly probable that in many communities the intelligent cooperation of consumers and practitioners will develop satisfactory arrangements that remain subject to their own control without National Government administration. It seems highly improbable that this experimentation—possible under our Federal form of government—will ultimately develop a single pattern that is applicable to all sections of the country and is desirable by a lesstions of the country and is desired by a large majority of the people. If such a pattern should develop, it will doubtless then be adopted with a great degree of unanimity. If compulsory insurance should be adopted now by a narrow vote in the Congress, large numbers of persons who are opposed to it would start with a hostile attitude toward

- the whole undertaking.
  2. For the time being the National Government and many of the State governments may well devote their resources and energies
- (a) Research and developments in the fields of public health.
  - (b) Health education at the school level. Teaching of preventive medicine. (c)
- (d) Assisting in the acquisition of physical facilities and training of personnel.

  (e) Providing systematic care for the indigent and the medically indigent. 3. From the standpoint of public relations, governments might be well advised to leave adult educational campaigns for the control and prevention of disease to the national, State, and local voluntary organizations, which have been able to enlist the active co-operation of leading laymen in most sections of the country. It must be remembered that good health is not exclusively a matter of medical care; it also impinges upon causative factors that are nonmedical, such as food, shelter, vice and crime, transportation, and industry. Its maintenance depends also upon the intelligence, interest, and cooperation of individuals, families, and local communities.

These recommendations are not widely at variance with those of the majority of the Committee on the Costs of Medical Care, arrived at in 1932 after a comprehensive study.

The report of the committee says:

" * (The) majority of the committee does not endorse the recommendation which would make health insurance a legal requirement for certain sections of the population. These members realize that such a step may ultimately be necessary and desirable in some States, but they believe that for most States and probably for almost all of them at the present time, it is much more desirable (a) to encourage voluntary measures for protection against wage loss during sickness, and (b) to develop voluntary in-surance for medical care in conjunction with group practice, with hospital service and with the related measures recommended on the preceding pages. They are of the opinion that the difficulties of these plans can be controlled by a combination of professional and community effort, and that these plans hold the promise of steady extension in scope of service and in proportion of the popula-tion served. These members believe that the various payment plans (aside from compulsory insurance) if fully carried out, would: (1) Largely solve the problem of hospital costs which constitute about 50 percent of the average family expenditure for the care of sickness; (2) provide adequately for many rural areas in which serious deficiencies of facilities exist at present; (3) make more nearly adequate provision than exists at present for the indigent and for the care of certain diseases of public importance; and (4) provide, through voluntary cooperative insurance * * medical service to a majority of the 70,000,000 people living in industrial communities and in cities."

The years since 1932 have witnessed:

1. A great growth in voluntary insurance both for hospitalization and for medical

2. State experimentation with compulsory health insurance in Rhode Island and California.

3. A growing willingness on the part of practitioners to cooperate in the development of prepayment plans and other devices to enable patients who so desire to regularize their payments for medical care.

4. A profound change in the amount and distribution of the earnings of the American people. This change greatly reduces the number who cannot afford adequate medical care if they desire to purchase it.

The experience of the United States since 1932 seems to have demonstrated the wisdom of these recommendations of the majority of the members of the Committee on the Costs of Medical Care. It would seem unwise at this time to substitute for these developments a system of compulsory health insurance by national law which would have the unfortunate tendency to freeze policies and eventually retard medical progress.

The import of these conclusions and recommendations to the work of the committee is apparent. Although the Brookings Institution has raised serious questions as to the necessity and practicability of governmental expansion in the field of medical and other health services by the imposition of a national, compulsory system, the Insti-tution has outlined certain functional areas in which problems exist and which should receive full recognition in the course of the committee's consideration of the problem.

The Brookings report fills a gap heretofore existing in the evidence available to the committee; it represents a concise and fundamental contribution which bears directly on the basic issues involved in the consideration of proposed health legislation.

CONCLUSION

In view of the considerations outlined hereinabove, it is the opinion of the committee that continued study of health problems, and proposed legislation relating thereto, is prerequisite to the formulation of basic recommendations in this field. The Committee on Labor and Public Welfare therefore unanimously report Senate Resolution 249 without amendment and recommend its approval.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, in addition to the foregoing report which accompanied the resolution for the continuing study of these national health problems, it seems to me fitting at this point in my remarks to add a summary of all the bills by number and title, reported to and passed by the Senate of the Eightieth Congress up to and including June 15, 1948. In this summary we have set forth the scope and objectives of the various measures so passed.

There being no objection, the summary was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SUMMARY OF HEALTH BILLS PASSED BY SECOND SESSION, EIGHTIETH CONGRES

1. S. 1454: Amending the Public Health Service Act in regard to matters of personnel and administration. The provisions of this bill were necessary in order to aid the Public Health Service in overcoming its personnel The bill provides for revision of problems. its promotion system and modifies the authority of the Service to make original appointments at advanced grades. It also authorizes expenditures necessary for keeping its commissioned officers trained in the latest developments in medical and related scientific and public-health fields. Through passage of the bill and its subsequent enactment into law, Congress has placed the commissioned corps of the Public Health Service on a parity with the Army and the Navy as regards rates of pay and of promotion and other personnel matters.

2. S. 176 and H. R. 6726: Providing for the creation of a National Institute of Dental Research. The committee reported and the Senate approved S. 176 during the first session of the Eightleth Congress. H. R. 6726, passed by the House, contained the same major provisions of S. 176 except for improvements made necessary owing to the lapse of time between passage of the two bills and exclusion of provisions for construction of physical laboratory facilities. The Senate amended the bill by adding the stricken provisions providing research facilities, and it was accepted in that form by the House. The bill establishes in the Public Health Service a National Institute of Dental Research for the purpose of improving the dental health of the people through the conduct of researches, investigations, experiments, and studies relating to the cause, diagnosis, and treatment of dental diseases and conditions. The bill also provides that grants may be made to other public and private agencies in order to assist and foster such researches and other activities. It also provides for training of personnel in matters relating to dental diseases and conditions. It calls for the coordination of all such research and activities and the useful application of their results with a view to the development and prompt use of the most effective methods of prevention, diagnosis, and treatment of dental diseases. There is a vast backlog of needed dental care. This backlog far exceeds the man-hours of available dental skill that can be devoted to meeting it. Only by finding new and improved techniques of prevention and treatment through research can we hope greatly to improve the dental health of the Nation within the foreseeable future.

3. S. 2215: Providing for the creation in the Public Health Service of a National Heart Institute. This bill, passed by both Houses of Congress during this session of the Eightieth Congress, provides for research and control relating to diseases of the heart and circulation. The purpose of the measure is to improve the health of the people through the conduct of researches, investigations, experiments, and demonstrations relating to the causes, prevention, and methods of diag-nosis and treatment of diseases of the heart and circulation, and to assist and foster such researches and other activities by public and private agencies, and to promote the coordination of all such researches and the useful application of their results. The bill also provides for training technicians and physicians in matters relating to heart diseases, and it calls for assistance to States and other and it calls for assistance to States and order agencies in promoting the use of the most effective methods of prevention, diagnosis, and treatment of heart diseases. The basic facts concerning the incidence of diseases of the heart and circulation present a clear-cut replacement of serious proportions. The fact problem of serious proportions. The fact that deaths from cardiovascular diseases have accounted for more than one of every three deaths in the United States each year for the last decade, ranking first among the causes of death, indicates the serious nature of the problem. Passage of S. 2215 gives full recognition to the problem and places needed emphasis on research and control in diseases of the heart and circulation.

4. S. 1969: Amending the Philippine Rehabilitation Act of 1946 to provide for the training of Filipinos in public-health meth-This bill authorizes an extension of the time during which Filipines may be trained in this country in public-health methods. This measure is important to the administration of public-health services in the Philippine Islands as a part of the reconstruction program.

5. S. 2341: Authorizing an increase in the annual appropriation for the maintenance and operation of the Gorgas Memorial Labo-ratory. This bill provides authorization of adequate funds for operation of the Gorgas Memorial Laboratory for research in tropical diseases. This public-service institution, established in 1928, provides laboratory facilities located in the Tropics and conducts research and control activities in tropical diseases in the Republic of Panama.

6. H. R. 4114: Amending the Public Health Service Act to permit expenditures for operating purposes of the Public Health Service. The bill incorporated into basic law certain authority previously authorized annually in the appropriations for the Public Health Service. Passage of the bill clarifies the basic authority of the Public Health Service and strengthens the Public Health Service Act.

7. H. R. 6339: Amending the Hospital Survey and Construction Act so as to restore to eligibility to participate in Federal grants for hospital construction those States which would cease to be eligible because of their inability to comply with provisions of the act on July 1, 1948. This bill enables any State to participate under the program after July 1, 1948, if and when such State enacts appropriate enabling legislation.

8. H. R. 6289: Providing for the voluntary admission and treatment of mental patients in St. Elizabeths Hospital. This bill authorizes residents of the District of Columbia to be admitted and treated at St. Elizabeths Hospital on a voluntary basis. Passage of the measure represents a progressive step in procedures governing the treatment of patients in mental health institutions.

9. Senate Resolution 249: Providing authorization for the subcommittee on health of the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare to continue its study of the health problems of the Nation and of legislative proposals relating thereto.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, in addition to the report and summary I have presented, I would finally like to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that the bill providing for the setting up of a National Science Foundation, which passed both the Senate and House last year, and which was vetoed by the President, was reintroduced early this year, and, in an amended form to meet some of the President's objections, was duly passed by the Senate on May 5 and sent to the House. This measure is still pending in the House, and it is my sincere hope that before Congress adjourns it may become law.

The science bill is designed to aid research in the basic sciences, and among the basic sciences the medical sciences are included, and therefore it is of vital importance in the consideration of our national health.

In closing these few remarks as chairman of the Subcommittee on Health of the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare, I want to pay a special tribute to the interest and diligence of the members of the subcommittee with whom it has been a great honor and privilege to work. The committee is composed of the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. Ball], the Senator from Montana [Mr. Murray], the Senator from Florida [Mr. Pepper], besides myself as chairman.

I also wish to pay special tribute to all the Members of the Senate who contributed to the development of the National Science Foundation bill, and particularly to those who joined with me, first, in the introduction of the bills introduced in both the first and second sessions of the Congress, and then in following through the difficult negotiations to iron out the differences and arrive at common conclusions. This group included the Senator from Oregon [Mr. Cordon], the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. Revercomb], the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Saltonstall], the Senator from Utah [Mr. Thomas], the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. Kilgore], the Senator from Washington [Mr. Magnuson], and the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. Fulbright]. I wish particularly to express my appreciation for the cooperation given by the Senator from Utah [Mr. Thomas], the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Saltonstall], and the Senator from Washington [Mr. Magnuson].

INCREASES OF COMPENSATION FOR CERTAIN VETERANS

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2821) to provide increases of compensation for certain veterans with serviceconnected disabilities who have dependents, which were, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That any person entitled to compensation at wartime rates for disability incurred in or aggravated by active service as provided in part I, or paragraph I (c), part II, Veterans Regulation No. 1 (a), as amended, or the World War Veterans' Act, 1924, as amended, and restored with limitations by Public Law 141, Seventy-third Congress, March 28, 1934, as amended, and whose disability is rated not less than 60 percent, shall be entitled to additional compensation for dependents in the following monthly amounts:

- (1) If and while rated totally disabled
- (a) has a wife but no child living, $30;
  (b) has a wife and one child living, $50;
  (c) has a wife and two children living,
- $65;
  (d) has a wife and three or more children
- living, $80;

  (e) has no wife but one child living, $20;

  (f) has no wife but two children living,
- (1) has no wife but two children living, $35;
- (g) has no wife but three or more children living, $50;
- (h) has a mother or father, either or both dependent upon him for support, then, in addition to the above amounts, $25 for each parent so dependent.

(2) If and while rated partially disabled, but not less than 60 percent, in an amount having same ratio to the amount specified in subsection (1) hereof as the degree of his disability bears to the total disability.

SEC. 2. The additional compensation for a dependent or dependents provided by this act shall not be payable to any veteran during any period he is in receipt of an increased rate of compensation or of subsistence allowance on account of a dependent or dependents under any other law administered by the Veterans' Administration: Provided, That he may elect to receive whichever is the greater.

SEC. 3. The administrative, definitive, and

SEC. 3. The administrative, definitive, and penal provisions of Public Law No. 2, Seventy-third Congress, and veterans' regulations thereunder, as amended, shall be for application under this act.

SEC. 4. This act shall take effect on the first day of the second calendar month next succeeding its enactment.

Also to amend the title so as to read:
"An act to provide increases of compensation for certain veterans with service-connected disabilities who have dependents."

Mr. MILLIKIN. I move that the Senate disagree to the amendments of the House, request a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to, and the President pro tempore appointed Mr.

MILLIKIN, Mr. TAFT, Mr. BUTLER, Mr. BARKLEY, and Mr. CONNALLY conferees on the part of the Senate.

INCREASE IN RATES OF SERVICE-CON-NECTED DEATH COMPENSATION TO CERTAIN WIDOWS, ETC.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2825) to increase the rates of service-connected death compensation payable to certain widows, children, and dependent parents of persons who served in the active military or naval service, and for other purposes, which was, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the following rates of compensation are hereby established for surviving widows, children, and dependent parents of deceased veterans of World War I or World War II whose deaths are the result of service in such wars, or the results of contingencies provided for in the United States Code, title 38, sections 501s, 501s-1, and paragraph 4, part VII, Veterans Regulation 1 (a), as amended:

Widow but no child, $75; widow with one child, $115, with $20 for each additional child (subject to apportionment regulations); no widow but one child, $50 with $20 for each additional child (total amount to be equally divided); dependent mother or father, $75; dependent mother and father, $40 each.

SEC. 2. Such compensation shall not be diminished by reason of other benefits allowed by other provisions of law.

lowed by other provisions of law.

SEC. 3. Notwithstanding any other provision of law or veterans' regulation, for the purpose of payment of compensation under laws administered by the Veterans' Administration, one parent whose annual income does not exceed $1,800, or two parents whose annual income does not exceed $3,000, shall be deemed to be dependent. In determining annual income any payments made by a parent for expense of last illness of the veteran and such expense of burial of the veteran as exceeds the amount of the allowance authorized by Veterans Regulation No. 9 (a), as amended, shall be excluded and any payments by the United States Government because of disability or death under laws administered by the Veterans' Administration shall not be considered nor shall life-insurance payments from any other source, including income therefrom in an amount less than $3,000 received in any 1 year, be considered.

SEC. 4. This act shall become effective on the first day of the second month following the date of its enactment: Provided, That no compensation shall be reduced or discontinued by the enactment of this act.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President, I move that the Senate disagree to the amendment of the House, request a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to, and the President pro tempore appointed Mr. Millikin, Mr. Taft, Mr. Butler, Mr. Barkley, and Mr. Connally conferees on the part of the Senate.

BOARDS OF VISITORS TO UNITED STATES NAVAL AND MILITARY ACADEMIES

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 239) to provide for a Board of Visitors to the United States Naval Academy and for a Board of Visitors to the United States Military Academy, and for other purposes, which was, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That there shall be appointed on or before the last day of every year a Board of Visitors to the United States Naval Academy and a Board of Visitors to the United States Military Academy.

SEC. 2. Each Board shall be constituted as

(a) The chairman of the Committee on Armed Services of the Senate or his designee;

(b) Three other Members of the Senate to be appointed by the Vice President or President pro tempore of the Senate, two of whom shall be members of the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate;

The chairman of the Committee on Armed Services of the House of Representa-tives or his designee;

(d) Four other Members of the House of Representatives to be appointed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives, two of whom shall be members of the Com-mittee on Appropriations of the House of Representatives; and

(e) Six persons to be appointed by the President. The first Board to be appointed pursuant to the provisions of this act shall, with respect to the nine Presidential appointees, consist of two persons appointed to serve for a period of 1 year, two persons appointed to serve for a period of 2 years, and two persons appointed to serve for a period of 3 years. Two Presidential appointees shall be appointed to each subsequent Board to serve for a period of 3 years.

SEC. 3. In case of the death or resignation of a member of a Board during the term for which such member was appointed, a successor shall be appointed for the unexpired portion of the term. Such successor shall be appointed by the official, or his successor, who appointed the member who died or resigned.

SEC. 4. Each Board shall visit the respective Academy for which it is appointed once annually in April, and each Board or the individual members thereof may, with the approval of the Secretary of the Navy or the Secretary of the Army, as the case may be, make such other visits on matters per-taining to the duties of the Board, or for purposes of consulting with the respective Superintendents of the Academies, as the Board or its members may determine to be

SEC. 5. (a) It shall be the duty of each Board to inquire into the state of morale and discipline, curriculum, instruction, physical equipment, fiscal affairs, academic methods, and other matters relating to the Academy concerned which the Board may decide to consider.

(b) Each Board shall, within 60 days after the meeting designated as the annual visit. submit a written annual report to the President regarding its action as such Board, together with its views and recommendations pertaining to the Academy concerned. Any report based on a visit other than the annual visit shall be submitted by the originator or originators thereof to the President within 60 days after approval of said report by at least a majority of the members of the Board.

(c) Each Board is authorized to call into consultation upon prior approval of the Secretary of the Navy or the Secretary of the Army, as the case may be, such advisers as it may deem necessary or advisable to effectuate the duties imposed upon it by the provisions of this act.

SEC. 6. (a) Each member of each Board shall receive not more than $5 per day and be reimbursed under Government travel regulations for actual expenses of travel while performing duties as a member of either Board.

(b) Advisers called for consultation by either Board in connection with the business of the Board shall be compensated in the same manner as members of the Boards in accordance with the provisions of subsection

(a) of this section.

SEC. 7. That part of the act of August 29, 1916, entitled "An act making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, and for other purposes", which relates to the Board of Visitors of the United States Naval Academy (39 Stat. 608) and reads as follows: "From and after the passage of this act there shall be appointed every year, in the following manner, a Board of Visitors, to visit the Academy, the date of the annual visit of the board aforesaid to be fixed by the Secretary of the Navy: Seven persons shall be appointed by the President and four Senators and five Members of the House of Representatives shall be designated as visitors by the Vice President or President pro tempore of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives, respectively, in the month of January of each The chairman of the Committee on year. The chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs of the Senate and chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs of the House of Representatives shall be ex officio members of said board.

Each member of said Board shall receive while engaged upon duties as a member of the Board not to exceed $5 a day and actual expenses of travel by the shortest mail routes," is hereby repealed.

SEC. 8. (a) So much of the provision of the act of August 9, 1912, entitled "An act making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and for other purwhich provides as follows: vided, That the act approved May 28, 1908, be amended and reenacted so as to read as follows: That hereafter the Board of Visitors to the Military Academy shall consist of five members of the Committee on Military Affairs of the Senate and seven members of the Committee on Military Affairs of the House of Representatives, to be appointed by the respective chairmen thereof; the members so appointed shall visit the Military Academy annually at such time as the chairman of said committees shall appoint, and the members from each of said committees may visit said Academy together or separately as the said committees may elect during the session of Congress; and the Superintendent of the Academy and the members of the Board of Visitors shall be notified of such date by the chairmen of the said committees. The expenses of the members of the Board shall be their actual expenses while engaged upon their duties as members of said Board not to exceed $5 per day and their actual expenses of travel by the shortest mail routes" is hereby repealed.

(b) The act of May 17, 1928, entitled "An act to provide for the membership of the Board of Visitors to the United States Military Academy, and for other purposes" (45 Stat. 597), is hereby repealed.

Mr. GURNEY. Mr. President, the amendments of the House are technical in character. I move that the Senate agree to the House amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

APPROPRIATION RIDERS-EDITORIAL FROM THE WASHINGTON POST

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, the Congress of the United States persists in its irresponsible, pernicious, and objectionable practice of attaching riders to appropriation bills. The veto message of the President of the United States, which was overridden yesterday by the Congress, is discussed in an important editorial published in the Washington Post of today. I hope every Senator will read the editorial because sooner or later it seems to me the Congress of the United States must begin to follow a consistent policy of legislation, which the appropriations committees have not been doing for some time in the past.

I ask unanimous consent that the editorial may appear in the body of the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

APPROPRIATION RIDERS

It was high time for a President of the United States to challenge, through his veto power, the pernicious practice of tacking legislative riders onto appropriation bills. If there was politics in Mr. Truman's message returning the billion-dollar social-security measure, it was politics of the best sort: it served to dramatize for the country an issue far greater than the issue involved in the provision of funds for an important Federal agency. The action of Congress in overriding the veto roughshod was politics of the worst sort; it was dictated more by a desire for adjournment than by any consideration of the national interest.

One need not even take into account the merits of the legislation which Congress attached to the social-security appropriation to agree with President Truman that it is not "in the interest of good government that legislation of such importance should be enacted in such a manner." It was enacted, as he said, "entirely without reference to or hearing by the legislative committees con-cerned with such matters." And what is cerned with such matters." And what is even more disquieting is the plain fact that it was enacted designedly in such a way as to make extremely difficult, if not actually to nullify, exercise of the President's constitu-tionally conferred veto power. It took rare courage as well as statesmanship for Mr. Truman to run the hazard of leaving the Social Security Administration without funds.

What Mr. Truman did was, as he called it, "unusual," but it was not unprecedented. In 1879 and 1880, during the administration of Rutherford B. Hayes, an attempt was made by Congress to impose its will on the President through just this technique of appending legislation to a vital appropriation. President Hayes denounced it as involving 'a radical, dangerous, and unconstitutional change in the character of our institutions. destroying the constitutional distribution of powers among the coordinate branches of the Government. He had this to say on the

'To say that a majority of either or both of the Houses of Congress may insist on the approval of a bill under the penalty of stopping all of the operations of the Government, for want of the necessary supplies, is to deny to the Executive that share of the legislative power which is plainly conferred by the second section of the seventh article of the Constitution. It strikes from the Constitution the qualified negative of the President."

In the controversy of that time, President Hayes persisted in vetoing the obnoxious bills until his opponents on the Hill, who could not manage to muster the votes necessary to override him, were at last compelled to yield and separate the appropriations from the riders. President Truman, unfortunately, has not had such support even from the members of his own party. But it is not impossible that he will win it from the country if Congress continues to behave so irresponsibly. Taking the fight between himself and Congress to the people, he is justified in saying, at least on this particular issue, that he has done, as he put it, his "damned-est." And this is something the people of the And this is something the people of the United States are prone to respect.

LONG-RANGE AGRICULTURAL PROGRAM

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 2318) to provide for a coordinated agricultural program.

ORDER FOR CONSIDERATION OF THE CALENDAR TOMORROW

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COOPER. I yield. Mr. WHERRY. I should like to propose a unanimous-consent request. I ask unanimous consent that upon the convening of the Senate tomorrow. June 18. 1948, the Senate proceed to the consideration of bills on the calendar to which there is no objection, beginning with Order 1504. I might state that that is the calendar number where we left off when the oleomargarine bill was under consideration.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, does that mean that the calendar will not be called today?

Mr. WHERRY. That is correct. The reason I make the request now is that several Senators have asked me when the calendar is to be called. It was my idea not to have a call of the calendar until we conclude consideration of the farm legislation. It now appears that there will be considerable debate and discussion of the pending bill. I felt that Senators would like to know definitely when the calendar will be called.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, would the Senator mind repeating his request? I was engaged in conversation.

Mr. WHERRY. I ask unanimous consent that upon the convening of the Senate tomorrow, June 18, 1948, the Senate proceed to the consideration of bills on the calendar to which there is no objection, beginning with Order No. 1504. That is the bill following the oleomargarine bill, where we left off the last time the calendar was called.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it. Mr. RUSSELL. Under that order would a motion be in order to proceed to the consideration of a bill if objection were lodged against it? The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It

Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Nebraska? The hears none, and the order is made. The Chair

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, should like to make a further announcement. It is our intention to remain in session tonight until as late an hour as necessary to conclude consideration of the unfinished business.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, what will be done with appropriation bills?

Mr. WHERRY. As fast as appropriation bills are ready, I shall ask the distinguished Senator from Vermont IMr. AIKEN] to help us out in getting them passed so that they may go to conference.

Mr. PEPPER. · Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COOPER. I yield.

Mr. PEPPER. If I may have the attention of the acting majority leader, I did not object a moment ago when the decision was being made to wait until tomorrow for a call of the calendar. However, I think we should understand that if we wait until tomorow to call the calendar, there is hardly any possibility that there could be a conference in case of disagreement between the two Houses on any measure passed on the call of the calendar. I am very much interested in a certain bill, with respect to which there may be disagreement between the two Houses on the Senate committee recommendation. I have heard other Senators make the same point. I wonder if we could not reconsider that decision and find some time during today to call the calendar for the consideration of bills to which there is no objection, so that there will be a possibility of conference in case of disagreement.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I deeply appreciate the constructive observation made by the Senator from Florida; but of course his argument would also apply to the farm bill. I have taken this question up with the distinguished Senator from Vermont, who has been most patient about displacing the farm bill for other legislation.

The difficulty arose because we did not complete the call of the calendar when it was called day before yesterday. In the meantime we have considered a number of privileged matters. We are now back on the farm bill. I appreciate the fact that the Senator from Florida did not make objection. If the distinguished Senator will allow us to proceed, I am sure that conferences can be arranged, and that there will be an opportunity for the conferees to report back, even though we must remain in session late Saturday night. I am sure that bills which go to conference will have a chance.

Mr. PEPPER. I wonder if we could not leave it to the discretion of the able acting majority leader to take up the calendar before the close of this day, after the disposition of the farm bill, if there is an opportunity. I mention that for this reason: I am told that in case of disagreement a long time is required, in the present state of congestion in the Printing Office, to get the printed reports necessary to make a conference possible. So we would at least have the intervening hours in which the Printing Office could prepare the necessary papers in case of disagreement between the two Houses.

Mr. WHERRY. I took that question up with the Printing Office. While we might gain a little time, yet very little time would be gained if we were to call the calendar late tonight. It is my definite opinion that unless a miracle happens, consideration of the agricultural program will continue until pretty late tonight. If the bill should go over, it will be temporarily displaced under the unanimous-consent order. I believe that is about as fair a compromise as we could get between the distinguished Senator from Vermont and Senators who are interested in other bills on the calendar.

Mr. PEPPER. I did not have in mind a call of the calendar preceding consideration of the farm bill: but I did want the acting majority leader not to commit himself and the Senate to the assumption that there would not be a call of the calendar if the situation permitted it during the day.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, it is better to have a set time. Then Senators may know when the calendar will be called. Furthermore, only bills which meet the approval of the Senate will be passed. One Senator may object to a bill, which will cause the bill to go over. A bill which passes the Senate unani-mously should not have much difficulty in conference. I believe that the printing item would be a minor consideration, even if the call of the calendar could not be reached this afternoon.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I should like to make a further observation. Yesterday I talked with the clerk of one of the House committees. He told me about the congestion in the Printing Office. He stated that there could not possibly be a conference on a disagreement between the two Houses unless a certain number of hours intervened, so that the Printing Office would have an opportunity to print the reports.

Mr. WHERRY. I am just as sure as I am of anything that consideration of the farm bill will not be concluded until late this evening. So far as conferences are concerned. I think they would be held tomorrow morning in any event. The Senator has offered a very constructive criticism in connection with the matter of printing. However, I believe that if we are permitted to proceed we can accomplish the purpose for which the calendar is called; and I believe that most of the conferees will cooperate in every way.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, will the

Senator yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. RUSSELL. It is a matter of no great moment to me when the calendar is called: but I am sure the Senator is taking into consideration the fact that if the calendar is not called before tomorrow morning, it will mean the death of any Senate bill on the calendar, whereas if the calendar were called today, there might be a chance of its enactment.

Mr. WHERRY. Did the Senator say that it would mean the death of any Senate bill on the calendar?

Mr. RUSSELL. It would mean the death of any Senate bill to which there was the slightest objection, if the calendar were not called until tomorrow.

Mr. WHERRY. We shall encounter that difficulty whenever it is called. I am quite satisfied that if we proceed under this order, consideration of bills on the calendar will be as greatly expedited as though we had a call of the calendar tonight.

Mr. THYE. Mr. President, will the

Senator yield?

Mr. COOPER. I yield.

Mr. THYE. I suggest that if we proceed with the business before the Senate. we shall probably have time to work on the calendar before the day is over.

LONG-RANGE AGRICULTURAL PROGRAM

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 2318) to provide for a coordinated agricultural program.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. President, I know that many Senators are busy today in committees, and I cannot expect that too many will be present at all times during the discussion of my amendment. However, I hope that Senators who come from tobacco-producing States will remain, while my distinguished colleague [Mr. BARKLEY] and I discuss this amend-

The amendment proposed by my col-league and myself reads as follows:

(5) Notwithstanding the foregoing provisions of this section, the level of price support to cooperators for any crop of tobacco for which marketing quotas are in effect shall be 90 percent of its parity price as of the beginning of the marketing year.

The effect of the amendment is to remove tobacco from the list of commodities which will be subject to the pricesupport table found on page 79 of the pending bill, which table has been characterized as a flexible or moving pricesupport plan, in which the level of support afforded to a specific commodity varies, and to give tobacco a definite, fixed support price equal to 90 percent of its parity price.

I know that this amendment will provoke, very naturally and rightfully, certion questions. It will be asked, should tobacco be treated differently than other agricultural commodities? should tobacco be guaranteed a fixed, firm support price equal to 90 percent of its parity price, when the support price of other commodities ranges between 60 and 90 percent of parity?

Mr. President, my colleague and I ask-and I know we shall be joined by others who are familiar with the problems of tobacco-that this amendment to the pending bill be adopted because the conditions under which tobacco is produced, its limited use as a raw, unprocessed product, and-and this is most important—the conditions under which it must be marketed, operate to make its sale entirely different from that of every other agricultural commodity.

It is my contention, and one which I believe is supported by the facts, that the unusual conditions under which tobacco is produced and marketed, when coupled-and this is the most important fact in the argument-with the usually limited field of buyers, operate to give a dominant bargaining position to the limited field of buyers representing the major tobacco companies, and to deprive the producer of tobacco of a free market, in the sense that a market is enjoyed by the producers of other agricultural commodities. We contend that in this limited market, the buyer pays a price which is not necessarily or always related to the law of supply and demand, but is fixed by the maximum amount the buyers must pay to get the tobacco, which in reality is the support price. For this reason we argue that the support price should be fixed at 90 percent of parity. If it means a lower percentage, prices will decline as the support price declines.

Mr. President, tobacco is a cash crop. A year's labor, nearly all of which is hand labor once the seed is sowed in the tobacco bed, is required to cultivate and market the crop. I doubt that Senators who do not live in tobacco-producing States realize that it takes a year, and sometimes more than a year, to cultivate a crop of tobacco from the time the seed is sowed in the tobacco bed, until the tobacco is sold upon the market.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will my colleague yield to me?

Mr. COOPER. I yield. Mr. BARKLEY. It has long been a common saying in the tobacco-growing areas that it takes 13 months out of every 12 to grow a crop of tobacco.

Mr. COOPER. Yes; it is very true that there is a common saying in our State that it takes 13 months out of every 12 to produce a tobacco crop. In the production of a tobacco crop, practically every process is by hand laborhard, back-breaking labor.

Due to the peculiar characteristics of tobacco, it must be sold in the year in which it is produced. Other crops can be held waiting for a good market; but tobacco must be sold in a short marketing season of 3 or 4 months, in the year in which it is produced. This is true because of inadequate marketing facilities and because the tobacco would deteriorate substantially.

Moreover-again different from other crops-tobacco cannot be marketed except as tobacco. The producer of corn or wheat can market his crop by feeding it to cattle or hogs, but the tobacco producer must sell his crop as tobacco, and nothing else.

Furthermore, when the tobacco grower is ready to sell his crop, he cannot take it to his county seat and find there several buyers, but he must take it to the place where a tobacco warehouse is located, and there it must be auctioned and sold in a strange language—familiar to you from radio programs-to one of a limited group of tobacco buyers, representing the large tobacco companies.

Unless the representatives of the tobacco companies are there, the tobacco producer cannot sell his crop. In Kentucky and other tobacco-producing States warehouses are not built merely to accommodate the producers of tobacco; they cannot be built unless prior to their building there is an agreement, or a strong reason to believe that the large tobacco companies will send their representatives to the market. Tobacco warehouses have been built in my State and, I am sure, in other States, for the purpose of accommodating the tobacco producers of the section, and then never used, because representatives of the large tobacco companies would not send their buyers to the new warehouse.

The tobacco farmer must take his crop to the place where the representatives of the great tobacco manufacturers of tobacco will come to buy his crop. Unless the representatives are there, the tobacco farmer cannot sell his tobacco. The farmer who has spent a year in backbreaking toil to produce a crop of tobacco, which is his cash crop and his principal source of income, and who has hauled it, 50 to 100 miles to a warehouse. knows that he must sell his tobacco to one of the few buyers, or else lose his year's labor. Can it be doubted that the buyers know that the farmer must sell or lose the work of a year?

I do not wish to base my argument upon unjustified criticism or attack upon the great tobacco companies who are the principal buyers; they perform a valuable service. Nevertheless I must emphasize the dominant position they hold in the tobacco market against the single producer of tobacco. In 1941 the buying methods of the several large tobacco companies were subjected to inquiry in an action brought by the Department of Justice alleging violation of the Sherman Antitrust Act. In that prosecution, the defendants-the American Tobacco Co., the Liggett & Myers Tobacco Co., the R. J. Reynolds Tobacco Co., American Suppliers, and certain subsidiaries-were charged with having conspired to violate the Antitrust Act. The defendants were convicted in the United States District Court in Kentucky: the case was appealed to the circuit court of appeals, where it was affirmed, and in 1945 the Supreme Court of the United States affirmed the action of the lower courts in finding these companies guilty of conspiring to monopolize in the tobacco field. The opinion of the Supreme Court, rendered by Mr. Justice Burton, contains a table which demonstrates the dominating position of these great tobacco companies as pur-chasers of tobacco. There are listed nine companies that are the principal purchasers of tobacco at the markets which I have described. I quote from the opinion in the case of American Tobacco Co. v. United States (66 S. Ct. 1125), respecting the table:

The first table shows that, although American, Liggett, and Reynolds gradually dropped in their percentage of the national domestic cigarette production from 90.7 percent in 1931 to 73.3 percent, 71 percent, and 68 percent, respectively, in 1937, 1938, and 1939, they have accounted at all times for more than 68 percent, and usually for more than 75 percent, of the national production. The balance of the cigarette production has come from six other companies.

The point I make is that the thousands of small tobacco growers in the tobacco-producing States, arriving at the warehouses with their tobacco, find there as the only purchasers of their tobacco, three representatives of three great companies, representing at least 68 to 75 percent of the cigarette industry, and sometimes a few others. One count of the indictment in the case to which I have referred stated in part as follows:

Said unlawful monopolization has had the effects, among others, of permitting a few companies to attain control of a bottleneck in a great industry—

Mr. STENNIS. Mr. President, a point of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state the point.

Mr. STENNIS. I desire to raise the point of order that it is impossible for a Member of the Senate who is trying to hear and understand the argument being presented by the Senator from Kentucky, and who is seated within 12 or 14 feet of the speaker, to hear and understand what is said. I do not want to be personal, but persons at the rear of the Senate Chamber who are presumed to have the privilege of the floor are abusing that privilege by conversing, not only to my disturbance but also to the disturbance of other Senators. I desire to raise a most serious point of order, that the membership of the Senate are entitled to sit under conditions which enable them to follow the debate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator's point is well taken. Those at the rear of the Chamber will either be seated or retire. The Senate will be in order. The Senator from Kentucky may proceed.

Mr. COOPER. I thank my good friend the Senator from Mississippi. Repeating, the indictment, in part, stated:

Said unlawful monopolization has had the effects, among others, of permitting a few companies to attain control of a bottleneck in a great industry, through which a major farm commodity on which several million are dependent, must pass on its way through the hands of jobbers to retailers, to the many millions who use tobacco products * * of enabling those few companies to abuse their resulting strategic and dominant position by making the income of growers of leaf tobacco lower than it would otherwise have been.

I do not say or imply that these to-bacco-products companies are now in violation of the antitrust laws as they were held to be at that time. I merely emphasize that nothing has happened since that time to equalize the bargaining position of the sellers with the buyers. I point out that in a market of this kind, limited as it is to a few powerful buyers, each of whom cannot fail to be familiar with the practices of the others, the effects described in the opinion of the Supreme Court would be substantially the same, without any agreement or conspiracy among the buyers.

I should like to ask those who are interested in other crops, such as corn, wheat, and cotton, What would they think if the thousands of people who produce those crops were forced and required to sell them to nine companies? Would they believe that they had a free market? Would an individual producer in some remote section of our farming sections have equal bargaining power with their representatives? If it can be visualized that the thousands of small producers of tobacco must channel their crops through this bottleneck, dominated by a few powerful companies, it should not be difficult to see that a tobacco market is not a free market in the common sense of the term.

I urge the opinion, which is one shared by my constituents, who know every phase of tobacco growing, buying, and selling, that the Federal Government offers through its parity and supportprice program the only substantial assurance the tobacco growers have that they will receive a reasonable price for their product. I realize it is difficult for Members of the Senate who do do not live in tobacco-producing States and who are not familiar with tobacco to understand this problem. The Committee on Agriculture and Forestry is made up of the sincerest and most sympathetic friends of agriculture I have ever talked to in my life, yet they would be required to admit that the tobacco problem is unfamiliar to them.

Tobacco buyers know that to supply their needs they must bid at least as high as the support level. By the same token they need not bid prices substantially above the support level. The net result is that the price paid to a producer will follow the support price.

I may be asked whether I have proof that this situation obtains. I think there is proof. I point first to the close relationship of actual prices paid to farmers to support prices during the past 2 years.

In 1947 the average price received by burley tobacco growers was 48.3 cents a pound, which was 20 percent in excess of the support price of 40.3 cents. In 1946 the average price was 39.7 cents a pound, or 15 percent above the support level of 33.5 cents a pound. I wonder how many other farm commodities have been selling so relatively close to their support levels of 90 percent of parity. I do not think there are many.

A second evidence that the price which the representatives of the large tobacco companies pay to the farmer is tied closely to the support price is indicated by the failure of tobacco to reflect in like degree to other farm products the inflationary influences of the past few years, which brought wide advances in practically every other farm product.

The average price received for the 1947 crop by growers of burley tobacco, which variety is a major component in the manufacture of cigarettes, was 48.3 cents a pound, or only 18 percent more than the price of 39.4 cents paid for the 1945 crop, the last crop sold under OPA price control. It is unnecessary for me to remind the Senate of advances of 50 to 100 percent and more in prices of other farm commodities over the past 2 years. This small increase in price was given to growers in the face of unprecedented demand for tobacco products.

Sales of cigarettes have increased almost uninterruptedly over a period of years. Between 1920 and 1930 cigarette sales nearly doubled, from 67,000,000,000 to 119,000,000,000. Between 1930 and 1940 sales rose about 60 percent, to 191,-000,000,000. On top of this prodigious growth, sales more than doubled again during World War II to reach 414,000,-000,000 in 1945. A glance at the sales of the leading tobacco companies will show that they have had the major share of the benefits of this spectacular record of industry growth. Certainly this unprecedented demand has not been reflected in an increase in price paid to the men and women who harvest a crop whose production requires 12 months.

Out of the total value of consumer expenditures for tobacco products the Federal Government and State governments take, in taxes, 43 percent; the producer takes 151/2 percent; the remainder goes to the great tobacco companies, If the Senate will remember that sufficient tobacco to manufacture 414,000,-000,000 cigarettes and other tobacco products must go from thousands of producers through a bottleneck of buyers representing from 6 to 10 major tobacco companies, it will have a clear understanding of the dominating influence of the buyers, which brings about in part this disparity between producer and processor.

We assert that the support price should be maintained at 90 percent of parity in order to give the individual grower some equality of bargaining power against the buyer. It may be asked, and rightfully so, if fixing the support at 90 percent will result in higher prices to the consumer. I do not believe it will. I am informed by the burley growers of my State that manufactured tobacco products are priced almost without reference to the cost of leaf tobacco. Statistics given me by the Bureau of Agricultural Economics are eloquent proof of that position.

In 1947 the retail value of 1 pound of tobacco converted into manufactured product was $2.51. The farm value of 1 pound of tobacco was 39½ cents. The farmer's share in the pound of manufactured tobacco was 16.3 percent. These figures are those of a year when 90-percent parity was in effect, and its maintenance certainly should not increase consumer prices.

Another question which will be asked 'Will the maintenance of a 90-percent support price for tobacco make it probable that at some time in the future the Commodity Credit Corporation will be required to take in loans large quantities of tobacco and make large outlays of I point out, first, that the demoney?" mand for and sale of tobacco are not diminishing; they are expanding at home. As Europe recovers there will undoubtedly be a revival of large tobacco exports. Before the war a large volume of tobacco was exported which represented a considerable proportion of the total production of tobacco. I think it is reasonable to believe that as conditions improve foreign demand will increase. The expanding consumption of tobacco products at home and abroad makes overproduction unlikely.

In 1939, 22 percent of the flue-cured tobacco was exported; 39 percent of firecured dark tobacco was exported; 21/2 percent of burley tobacco was exported.

Tobacco is now, and has been for several years, under an effective quota system which limits production. If tobacco were not under a quota system and there were a high support price, it would be probable that overproduction would follow, resulting in a heavy financial burden upon the Government. But I point out that for several years there have been effective marketing quotas for tobacco which have limited the production of individual tobacco growers and prevented overproduction.

The committee report states as follows:

It has been demonstrated that fixed price supports for farm products without reference to supplies of products, have encouraged the producer to continue to expand production without regard for the demand for his products.

That comment could not apply to tobacco, because its production is limited by quotas which are fixed with regard to supply and demand. If there should be overproduction this year, or any year, the marketing quota can and should be reduced and the penalties applied by the bill to noncooperators would become effective to prevent overproduction. The best evidence of the effectiveness of the quota system in limiting production is found in its record. It has been in effect since 1938, with the exception of the year 1939. At present there is a comparatively small amount of tobacco in loan. During 3 of the 8 years in which it has been in effect the tobacco manufacturers absorbed the entire burley crop requiring no recourse whatever to Government loans. In 3 of the remaining 5 years amounts ranging from 1.6 percent to 6.2 percent of the crop went under loans, which were rapidly liquidated, with no loans in the immediately succeeding year. In 1947 only 5.1 percent of the crop went under loan, and this amount should be absorbed by the market during 1948. In only 1 year, 1946, was any substantial proportion of the burley crop taken under loan. It was 133,000,000 pounds, or 21 percent of the crop.

Mr. President, sometimes when the question of the effectiveness of the quota system is raised, it is argued that in the year to which I have just referred it was necessary to take 21 percent of the crop in loan. But during the war tobacco growers had been encouraged to expand production, to supply the needs of our armed forces, and of our allies. It was the inducement to produce tobacco extended by the Government during the war years that resulted in the overproduction in 1946.

About 50 percent of the large takings of 1946 has been sold under the quota system with actually no loss. With tight acreage control, a safeguard is provided against the necessity of large support buying at any time except under extraordinary conditions such as those caused by war or collapse of export markets, which cannot be anticipated.

It is true that the collapse of export markets, upon which certain types of tobacco depend, resulted in accumulation of these varieties. At present 335,000,000 pounds of these types, costing $127,000,-000, are held under loan. But the size of these accumulations has little reference to the percentage of parity at which support was provided. Government loans on these export varieties would have been necessary at any support price. The exercise of quota control, however, combined with revival of exports, will correct this situation in time.

Mr. President, I should like to address myself for a few moments to the importance of tobacco, to the economy of many States. It is of vital importance to the tobacco-producing States. The total value of the crop in 1946 was $1,045,633,000. I do not have the figures for 1947, but I know the value was much larger in that year.

In 1946 its value, in terms of percentage of the total cash farm income of eight of the largest producing States, was as follows: North Carolina, 58 percent; Kentucky, 36 percent; South Carolina, 26 percent; Connecticut, 20 percent; Virginia, 18 percent; Tennessee, 13 percent; Georgia, 12 percent

I should like to have inserted in the RECORD a statement giving the names of the States, the total cash farm income, the value of the tobacco, and the percentage.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the table was ordered to be printed in the RECORD as follows:

State	Total cash farm income	Tobacco	Percent
North Carolina	$753, 193, 000	$436, 761, 000	58
Kentucky	439, 366, 000	159, 512, 000	30

Mr. COOPER. Mr. President, it is well known that tobacco is one of the great revenue producers of the Nation. Federal and State tax receipts from tobacco in 1947 amounted to $1,482,535,000. point out that that is larger than the total price paid to the farmers in 1946. The Federal tax receipts increased, from the year 1939 to 1947, from $608,000,000 plus to $1,237,000,000. State tax receipts increased, from 1939 to 1947, from $58,-000,000 plus to more than $244,000,000. I send to the desk a statement of Federal and State tax receipts from tobacco and ask that it be inserted in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the

Mr. COOPER. Mr. President, I repeat, the percentage of Federal and State taxes of the total consumer expenditure for tobacco products represents approximately 43 percent of the consumer expenditures. I repeat, also, that out of these great consumer expenditures the producer's share is only 15.6 percent.

I should like to say that Senators from States whose agricultural economy is based upon corn or wheat or cotton know the importance of maintaining the price stability of those products. Similarly, the economy of my State and of other tobacco-producing States depends upon the price stability of tobacco. Tobacco is the great cash crop of those States. Sales are made in the late fall and winter and the farmer receives his money at a time when it is needed for the payment of taxes, interest, and debts. There is no other crop in those States which can take its place.

The farms are of small size. The average farm in Kentucky contains about 80 acres. It follows that it is not possible to engage in large grazing operations, or in the production of corn, wheat, or cotton upon a farm of that size.

The farming of these comparatively small farms is based upon tobacco production. Last year tobacco sales represented 52 percent of the farm income of my State.

If tobacco prices are driven down it is not usually possible to shift from tobacco to some other crop in an effort to recoup income lost when tobacco prices are reduced. Farmers can not shift from one type of tobacco to another type. I believe there are 28 types of tobacco, and the soil conditions of a particular State or a particular section of a State are suited for the growing of one or two types of tobacco. It is not possible, or at least profitable, to shift from fluecured to burley, or from burley to firecured tobacco, or dark air-cured tobacco. Each type is related to the qualities of

Now, Mr. President, this amendment which I offer should be agreed to.

First. Because the growing and marketing conditions of tobacco are peculiarly different from those of other crops.

Second. The amendment should be agreed to because the market of tobacco growers is limited, and dominated by powerful buyers.

Third. These powerful, dominant buyers are able to fix a price, not based upon demand, but upon the support price which we create.

Fourth. I point out that the adoption of the amendment will not increase consumer prices.

Fifth. The record of Government loans on tobacco indicates that the quota system has worked, and that support for tobacco at 90 percent of parity has not imposed heavy financial burdens upon the Federal Government.

Finally, I insist that the tobacco quota system is itself a control of overproduction, and the flexible support system is not needed to control tobacco production. Upon this ground my colleague Senator BARKLEY and I are justified in asking that the amendment be adopted.

Before I close I should like to say that for some weeks I have been discussing tobacco problems with the members of the Committee on Agriculture and Foresttry of the Senate. The committee af-forded the tobacco growers and industry every opportunity to present their case. Growers from my State and other States presented the case so clearly to the committee that the committee incorporated in the bill practically every provision other than 90-percent support which the growers requested.

The committee, its able chairman, Senator Capper, the able Senator from Minnesota [Mr. Thye], the distinguished Senator from Vermont [Mr. AIKEN] deserve great credit.

I have been very much interested in the long-range farm bill. I believe that this is the time for Congress to enact legislation which will assure a permanent farm program and stability of income for the farmers of the Nation. I am sure that the committee and the Members of the Senate will take into consideration the peculiar and unusual position of tobacco. I now ask the Senate to adopt the amendment which I have offered, guaranteeing to tobacco growers a permanent support price of 90 percent of parity.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House having proceeded to reconsider the bill (S. 110) to amend the Interstate Commerce Act with respect to certain agreements between carriers, returned by the President of the United States, with his objections, to the Senate, in which it originated, it was-

Resolved, That the said bill pass, twothirds of the House of Representatives agreeing to pass the same.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

The message also announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the following enrolled bills, and they were signed by the President pro tempore:

H. R. 631. An act for the relief of the Allied Aviation Corp.;

H. R. 2239. An act to amend section 13 (a) of the Surplus Property Act of 1944, as amended: and

H. R. 3214. An act to revise, codify, and enact into law title 28 of the United States Code entitled "Judicial Code and Judiciary." LONG-RANGE AGRICULTURAL PROGRAM

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 2318) to provide for a coordinated agricultural program.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. Cooper] for himself and his colleague [Mr. BARKLEY].

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I presume the proponents of the amendment would have the right to conclude the argument upon it.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, I thought probably the senior Senator from Kentucky desired to speak now. I can very quickly give the reasons why the amendment should not be adopted, and if the Senator from Kentucky so desires, I shall be glad to do so.

Mr. BARKLEY. Very well.

Mr. AIKEN. Needless to say I am opposed to the amendment. The junior Senator from Kentucky has given quite a severe indictment against the monopoly control of the tobacco buying. I believe I can agree with most of what he said on that subject, because when I was a small boy my father always raised tobacco, and I know how completely the tobacco producers were at the mercy of the tobacco buyers. The committee had that in mind when writing the bill.

I am somewhat surprised over the amendment which the Senators from Kentucky have offered, because the support had under S. 2318 is already more favorable to tobacco than any other commodity. I would not have been surprised if some Senator had perhaps criticized the committee for writing a bill to provide as high a level of support as we have provided. The reason we have done so is that we know how completely the tobacco grower is at the mercy of the buyers, and particularly foreign government monopolies. England and France can knock the props out from under the price of tobacco in the United States any time they see fit to do so. For that reason I have been willing to maintain a high level of support for tobacco. That does not mean that we guarantee cost-plus in any way. But tobacco is one commodity, and wool is another commodity, which will receive somewhat higher support prices under the bill than they are receiving under the present law.

I should like to point out that in the bill we changed the parity formula, and as a result of changing the parity formula the parity price of burley tobacco, which for the 1947 crop is 44.8 cents a pound under the present formula method of computing parity, would increase to 48.8 cents a pound under the proposed

Under the present law the 1947 crop of burley tobacco is supported at 90 percent of 44.8 cents a pound, which is 40.32 cents a pound.

Under Senate bill 2318 it would be supported at 84 percent of 48.8 cents a pound, or 41 cents a pound. Therefore the pending bill would provide a level of support of 41 cents a pound for burley tobacco. It gives about the same increase also to flue-cured tobacco.

Flue-cured and burley tobacco are two farm commodities which will fare better under the pending bill than they fare under the present law. I think that next year the support level will increase still further, and possibly for 2 or 3 years; but in the long run, of course, tobacco will have to assume its relationship to other agricultural commodities. It may stay high for many years. It may stay high for 20 years. No one can foresee that. But for the next 2 or 3 years the support price for burley tobacco, for fluecured tobacco, for fire-cured tobacco, and I think all kinds of tobacco, will be a little higher than under the present law.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. AIKEN. Yes; I yield. Mr. LUCAS. Am I correct in saying that the amendment offered by the Senator from Kentucky is amendment which seeks to make mandatory a 90 percent of parity price at the beginning of the marketing year?

Mr. AIKEN. The Senator is correct. The amendment requests special privilege for a single agricultural commodity.

Mr. LUCAS. That is exactly the point I want to raise. Why should the Senate undertake to adopt amendments of this kind which select particular commodities and give them preference over every other commodity in the bill?

Mr. AIKEN. The Senate should not adopt any such amendment.

Mr. LUCAS. Of course, if this is to be done for tobacco it will be the beginning of more or less of a substitution of the Steagall theory of price support for all basic and nonbasic commodities on 90-percent mandatory provision, which is right in the teeth of the longrange program which the Senator has been discussing.

Mr. AIKEN. It would mean the start of the break-down of the program before the program got under way.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. AIKEN. I yield.

Mr. FERGUSON. Would not the effect of the amendment be to place tobacco on a special list so that it would not be necessary to take into consideration the amount of tobacco on hand, as must be done in connection with other commodities?

Mr. AIKEN. It would leave no restrictions other than those which are in force today.

Mr. FERGUSON. And there would not be a lowering and a raising of the support price compared to parity if the amendment went into effect. The support price would stay at one point.

Mr. AIKEN. As compared to parity. Mr. FERGUSON. Yes.

Mr. AIKEN. Under the proposed amendment it would remain at 90 percent of parity. And let me point out that any special privilege given a single commodity would mean that something would have to be taken away from some other commodity under the bill.

Mr. FERGUSON. That would be true because of the cost that may be involved.

Is that not correct?

Mr. AIKEN. That is true. I think tobacco is entitled to some special consideration because the price is governed so largely by foreign government monopolies, and domestic buyers are no slouches when it comes to organizing to hold the price down. What the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. Cooper] said about that is exactly correct. For that reason the tobacco producers are entitled to a good support level. They would receive a splendid support level under Senate bill 2318, and the support would continue for some years into the future under the provisions of the act.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I hesitate to consume the time of the Senate, but I am joint author, with my colleague, of this amendment, and I am very much interested in seeing it adopted.

My colleague has given a graphic picture of the process of producing tobacco, which does not apply to any other crop. I do not know whether he was actually raised in a tobacco patch. I was. From the time when I could shoulder an ax or pull one end of a cross-cut saw, my father took me to the woods and we cleared the land which we proposed to cultivate in tobacco the following summer.

I have facetiously referred to the old saying in the tobacco section that it requires 13 months out of every 12 to grow a crop of tobacco. That grows out of this situation: The farmer who is going to produce tobacco must, early in the winter, make what is called a plant bed. That is a bed in the earth, produced by the burning of logs, brush, or wood in some form, so as to kill all vegetation and plant life which might choke the growth of the tender tobacco plant when the seed is finally sown and the plant comes up through the ground. That requires the clearing of land. It requires the laying off of a bed, the size of which the farmer himself determines. When I was a boy on the farm it required the piling of logs, augmented by brush from trees, and the building of fires to burn out the vegetation. It required the pulverization of the soil by hoe, rake, pick, and every other utensil that would break up the ground into very fine particles.

Then the seed must be sown. Before the seed come up, canvas must be put over it so that insects and bugs will not eat the plants after they have come up through the ground. Then the plants must be pulled one by one from the plant bed and transferred to the field. In the meantime the soil of the field must be carefully prepared by the same process of pulverization, except that there is no fire to kill out the vegetation which might compete with the growth of the tobacco plant.

When there is a rainy season, or when the ground is moistened, at the proper time the plants are drawn from the bed by hand and are set out into the field by hand. A horse-drawn vehicle has been invented by which tobacco may be planted a row or two at a time. There is a little attachment permitting the soil to be moistened at the time the tobacco is planted, so that it will not suffer from dry weather. However, the average farmer does not possess that sort of equipment.

The plant must then be hoed by hand. It must be plowed with a team and plow. Every process, every step taken in the production of tobacco, is a hand process. There is no machinery by which it can be handled like wheat. There is no machinery like the cotton picker, by which it can be harvested. There is no machinery corresponding to the corn

The tobacco must be cut by hand, each stalk by itself. The stalk is split with a knife, and it is then cut off and hung up. If it is a burley crop, it is hung in the field or in an open barn where it is cured by air. If it is dark fired, it is hung in a barn, packed as closely as possible so as to retain the smoke and heat. and it must be cured by a fire built under the tobacco as it hangs in the barn for several days. It frequently requires an all-night process of watching the fire and the tobacco for a week or 10 days until it is cured. If it is flue-cured tobacco, it requires the same process of firing, but the smoke and heat go through the flue, and the tobacco is cured in that way. There is no machinery by which tobacco can be successfully produced. So it is really a hand-grown, hand-cultivated, handprocessed crop from beginning to end.

When it is hung in the barn and has been cured either by air or fire, or by the flue-cured process, which is really a fire process, it must be stripped. Every leaf of tobacco must be pulled from the stalk by hand. There is no machinery by which that can be done. The leaves are tied together in what is called a "hand," which is made up from 6 to 10 leaves, with the butt ends together. Then they are wrapped with another leaf which has been folded into a little wrapper about as wide as my two fingers. Then it is bulked and hung back in the barn until dried out. In dry weather, frequently it is bulked down in the barn or warehouse so that it may retain its moisture in bulk, thereafter to be hauled to market. It is frequently prized into a hogshead. All this is a long process. It is very difficult. That is what gives rise to the expression that 13 months out of every 12 are required to grow a crop of tobacco and market it.

All my life I have been familiar with the growth and marketing of tobacco. My father was a farmer, largely a to-bacco farmer. I have seen the process by which sales take place. I can remember the time when tobacco buyers, representing the companies which were processing or rehandling tobacco, or speculating in tobacco, would send their men around on horseback to every barn and take samples out of the barn and make an offer for the tobacco. The situation finally reached the point where the territory was divided, so that no competitor went into a given territory to compete with someone else. When the buyer came along and sampled the crop and offered the farmer a certain price, if he did not take that price no other buyer would come around. buyers had an arrangement under which they would not go across the road to buy a farmer's tobacco if it were in the territory of a competitor to whom that farm had been allocated. All the farms in the territory or county were allocated.

That gave rise to the organization of farmers to hold their tobacco, if possible, until they could get a decent price. It has given rise to the organization of cooperative marketing associations.

No doubt Senators have heard the auction system exemplified over the radio. The tobacco auctioneer or chanter goes through the tobacco warehouses looking at one basket and another, and offering a price which no one can understand until the tobacco is knocked down, and the producer is informed by a slip of paper how much he The farmer cannot understand gets. the chant of the auctioneer. I cannot imitate it. I would not attempt to do so. A few years ago there was a Member in the House of Representatives from Kentucky who could imitate it/

Senators will remember the final wind-up of the auctioneer on the radio program, in which various prices are announced, none of which can be under-stood. Finally the tobacco is knocked down, and the announcer says, "Sold, American." The Member of the House to whom I refer imitated the chant, and finally wound up by saying, "Stolen by American." That was his interpretation of the chant, and that is frequently the case.

I am giving these facts because tobacco occupies an entirely different status from that of any other crop in America. The production and marketing of tobacco is all hand work, from beginning to end. Unless the farmer belongs to a cooperative, and the cooperative is able to take the tobacco and hold it until either the big corporations—the Big Four-are willing to buy it, or the Government will make a loan upon it to enable the cooperative representing the farmers to hold it, he has no voice in the price which he receives for his crop. That has been one of the great troubles in regard to tobacco; it applies to other crops also, but not to such an extent to many others as it does to tobacco, because the market for tobacco has always, in spite of indictments and convictions, been restricted, and it is now restricted. The farmer has no real voice in that market. Of course, he can refuse to sell the tobacco, but he is not guaranteed that he ever will be able to sell it again or will be able to get a better price for it. unless he is a member of a cooperative, which can hold his tobacco for a better There is one cooperative for the burley tobacco producers, one for the dark-fired tobacco producers, and per-haps one for the flue-cured producers.

It has been said that we are asking a special privilege for tobacco. It may be true, but what we are asking for tobacco is that the status quo for it be preserved; in other words, 90 percent of parity. The parity price may be a fluctuating figure from 1 year to another because it depends entirely on the fluctuations in the prices farmers have to pay for what they buy.

I say to my friend the Senator from Illinois that if the tax is taken off tobacco, and if tobacco is put on the same basis as wheat, corn, and other products, then we shall take our chances in the market. But today tobacco is taxed, as my colleague has shown. From tobacco taxes $1,400,000,000 goes into the Treasury of the United States and to some of the States. That is more than the farmers get for the entire crop they grow, even after all the labor they devote to growing it, as has been described here.

So, inasmuch as tobacco is a great revenue producer for the Treasury of the United States, and is the only crop that pays such taxes, we believe tobacco should receive the treatment we provide for in the amendment. Of course, all of us realize that tobacco is a luxury, in a sense, and we so regard it, but to the American farmer who digs it out of the ground it is not a luxury; to him it is a necessity.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. Let me say to my able friend the Senator from Kentucky that the only point I raised a moment ago in respect to this amendment to the committee amendment is that it does place tobacco upon a preferred list, so far as the provision for 90 per cent of parity is concerned. Tobacco is not on such a list at the present time. Under the pending measure, tobacco, corn, wheat, and all other basic commodities are on the same basis, so far as the guaranty of a certain percentage of parity is concerned. If the amendment now proposed is made a part of the bill which is enacted into law, the result will definitely be to give to tobacco a preferred status as compared to other commodities. That is the only point I

Mr. BARKLEY. I appreciate what the Senator from Illinois has said about that matter. But we are seeking to preserve the status quo in respect to tobacco, because today the support price is 90 per cent of parity, and that parity is a fluctuating figure.

According to the table in the bill—which is about as inexplicable and as difficult to understand as a table of logarithms in a book of mathematics—no farmer could determine what he would be able to receive as the support price.

Mr. LUCAS. The only point I make in connection with the position I took a moment ago is that if we accept the proposed amendment, we shall begin to strike out the provisions of the bill in piecemeal fashion. On the other hand, I understand that later the Senator from Georgia will offer an amendment which will seek to displace this bill with a bill which is on all fours with the law under which we are now operating; and of course that bill will include tobacco and other commodities.

Mr. BARKLEY. I understand that the substitute to be proposed by the Senator from Georgia is practically the House bill, which will extend for 2 years the present arrangement of support prices.

Mr. LUCAS. That is correct.

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course, that will include tobacco and other commodities on the basis of the present support-price figures

We are asking for the adoption as a part of this bill of this amendment affecting tobacco because we genuinely feel that the tobacco producers should receive such treatment in view of the peculiar situation of tobacco, and since it has been singled out from among all the agricultural commodities in the United States for heavy taxation, which bears down on the price received by the producers, because the buyers say, "We can-not give you more than this, inasmuch as we have to pay an enormous tax," and there is even a tax 18 cents a pound on the tobacco in the loose leaf, tobacco which has not already been processed and that is three times as much as the growers of that particular type of tobacco got for it in years gone by.

Mr. THYE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. THYE. The only reason I asked the Senator to yield is that he referred to a table in the bill which gives some explanation of how the parity figure is reached. That table is to be found on page 79 of the bill. The only reason why the table is set forth in the bill is in order to give specific information as to what parity prices would be paid, depending upon the carry-over or the surplus of a certain commodity.

For instance, if we were to take 70 percent of a given commodity-that is, 70 percent of 100 percent production-the result would be 90 percent parity; but if the carry-over plus the production of the commodity for the year resulted in a figure of 130 percent of a normal crop, then the parity would be only 60 percent of the so-called 100 percent. The only reason why the scale or the schedule has been set forth in the bill is in order to permit anyone to realize, as he looks at the bill, that what the bill contemplates and attempts to do is to bring about an increase of production in the case of a crop that is in short supply, and a decrease of acreage in the case of a crop that is in long supply. In that man-ner we would have a flexible arrangement which would encourage self-control in the field, and not necessarily have to require the exercise of control of acreage by the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, we already have a quota system, which has been in effect and is in effect now, under the present Agricultural Adjustment Act and the parity system and the support We have a quota system which really is an acreage system designed to prevent the creation of surpluses beyond the amount that can reasonably be absorbed by the market from year to year; and it has worked successfully. The farmers have been satisfied with it. Because they have been satisfied with it. they have voted by more than two-thirds. which the law requires—in fact, they have even voted by as high as 90 percent-to retain the quota system, because it has been successful, and they are in favor of it because it helps them and keeps down the unnecessary unsalable surpluses of their crops.

Mr. President, I should like to call attention to the difficulties and hardships of the American tobacco grower. I'was at Owensboro, Ky., a few years ago, and I went into an auction house where they were selling tobacco which had been brought in by the various farmers and carried there and put into what they call baskets, and graded; and the buyers were walking up and down between the baskets and were bidding on them by the chanting system to which I referred a moment ago. One farmer had brought in a load of tobacco. He turned it over to the warehouse. When he sold it and paid the warehouse charges and paid the commissions on that load of tobacco, he owed the warehouseman 50 cents. went into the warehouseman's office, and the warehouseman said to him, owe me 50 cents. After getting all you got for the tobacco and paying all your charges, you still owe me half a dollar." For a whole year's work which he had put into tobacco and sold, he owed the warehouseman a half a dollar. When he was told of the deficit, he said, "I haven't got a half dollar with me; in fact, I haven't got a half a dollar anywhere." "Well," the warehouseman said, "Just bring me a chicken tomorrow and I will accept that in full payment for the half dollar you owe me." So the next day the farmer came into the office with two chickens. The warehouseman said, "I only asked you to bring one chicken. Why did you bring two?" "Well," he said, "I brought another load of tobacco today, and I thought I might as well pay you with this chicken, because I am sure the same result will come about." really is a true story. It sounds ridiculous, but it is the truth, because I happened to be in the town and in the warehouse where this had taken place.

Mr. THYE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. THYE. In what year was that? Mr. BARKLEY. That was about 7 or 8 years ago.

Mr. THYE. I was going to say that in the Middle West, though we were not engaged in the production of tobacco, we experienced something similar to that in connection with livestock and grain commodity prices. I have known of sheep and cattle being shipped to market, and, when all the expenses were paid, there was a deficit.

Mr. BARKLEY. I realize that.

Mr. THYE. I do not know that chickens were used to pay the deficit. Those were in the depression years, which the Senator and I so well remember, and I pray God we shall have the intelligence as Members of this legislative body to enact the type of legislation that will prevent a condition that calls upon American producers to accept such a price that he must bring in a chicken with which to settle the deficit resulting from the attempt to market his product. That idea is embodied in the pending legislation.

Mr. BARKLEY. I agree thoroughly with the Senator from Minnesota, and I have been one of the most active men in both Houses of Congress since I have been here in trying to promote legislation to prevent that very thing. I voted for the McNary-Haugen bill when it was passed.

Mr. THYE. I compliment the Sen-

Mr. BARKLEY. I voted for and advocated every agricultural measure that gave any hope whatever of rescuing American agriculture from any such situation as that. I know that what I have said about tobacco also was true of wheat and corn, and that people in the West were burning corn as fuel rather than accept the price offered for it. The same is true of wheat and other things. Cattle were down to 3 and 4 cents a pound, and hogs were down to 3 and 4 cents a pound—less than the cost of producing them. I am familiar with all that. I am in favor of an over-all long-term agricultural bill. I doubt very much if we are going to get one at this session, because I do not know what the House is going to do. The House committee has not even considered it, and I am told they are not going to. It may be necessary to extend the present situation for 2 years. We will meet that problem when we get to it. But I do say that if we seek here to preserve tobacco on its present support basis rather than have a flexible sliding scale running from 60 to 90 percent, which no farmer can ever figure out for himself-

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, will the

Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield. Mr. AIKEN. Under the bill tobacco cannot go below 84 percent, and the new parity program raises the parity price of tobacco so that 84 percent of the new parity price amounts to just a bit more than 90 percent of the present parity

Mr. BARKLEY. That all depends. Mr. AIKEN. No. these are the figures of the Bureau of Agricultural Statistics, and that is all it depends on.

Mr. BARKLEY. The growers of tobacco do not believe that this over-all bill which, in effect, includes tobacco with all other crops is the same as what they now have. They can depend upon what they now have. They know what it is. More-over, they know that they want to keep the quota system by which they may keep down the unsalable surplus, which has to be figured in on the parity or the support

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, will the

Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. AIKEN. The Senator perhaps is not aware of an amendment which was added to the bill providing that the quota system shall be retained regardless of the supply until such time as the growers themselves vote it out of existence. So they cannot lose by the quota system unless they want to lose by it. They cannot get less for their products. We have come as near to fixing a 90 percent support for tobacco as it is possible to do without violating all the ethics of legislation.

Mr. BARKLEY. We do not think we are violating any of the ethics of legislation by the amendment.

Mr. AIKEN. No: I do not think anyone is violating the ethics of legislation.

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not believe we are, when we ask that special circumstances be taken into consideration in regard to the production and sale of tobacco and the taxation of tobacco. If the tax is taken off, we will go along with wheat and corn and cotton and rice and everything else.

Mr. AIKEN. How much more money would the grower receive if the tax were removed?

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not know. buyer would be robbed of the excuse which he has always utilized in driving down the price to the farmer, the excuse that he is required to pay a heavy tax on tobacco.

Mr. AIKEN. I am old enough to know that tobacco buyers were tobacco buyers just the same before we had the taxes, or before the taxes were so large.

Mr. BARKLEY. But they could not use that as an excuse. They could not use the Federal Government as an excuse for driving down the price of tobacco. Every time we have increased the Federal tax on tobacco the buyers have used that as an additional reason for not being able to pay more for tobacco.

Mr. AIKEN. I may say to the Sen-ator, when we find a tobacco buyer without an excuse, we shall find him losing

Mr. BARKLEY. That may be, but we do not want to multiply his excuses.

Mr. AIKEN. But this is not a question of the iniquities of tobacco buyers. It is a question of a support price for tobacco. The producers of all types of tobacco are given just a little better support under the Senate bill 2318 than they would receive under a 90-percent support of the old parity price.

Mr. BARKLEY. They do not think so, I may say to my friend from Vermont, and I do not think so.

Mr. AIKEN. I do not question that. I know people have told different stories. I know both Senators from Kentucky have tried to tell them the story "as is," and some of them came here and got the story from the committee itself, but I know they have been confused. I think they have been deliberately confused. though I am not-

Mr. BARKLEY. I am not exactly sure what the Senator means by "as is." do not think they have been deliberately confused. I have no way of knowing whether somebody has deliberately confused them, but I know the anxiety and uncertainty that exists. I know that the protests which have come to me have come from actual producers and not from the rehandlers or warehousemen or buyers, or from anybody other than the farmers themselves, who dig the tobacco out of the ground; and they are very intelligent men.

Mr. AIKEN. I questioned one of the witnesses. I may say the principal witness who testified for the group of tobacco growers before the committee called me up after we reported the bill and thanked me and the committee for having been so fair to them.

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course, the committee, I want to say in all fairness, improved the bill as it affected tobacco; there is no question about that. The tobacco growers asked, I think, for about five changes in the bill; three were made. We thank the Senator and the committee for that concession; but if there had not been some improvement made, an intolerable situation would have been created. I do not think the Senator from Vermont himself realized at the time he introduced the original bill the effect it would have upon the tobacco growers of the

Mr. AIKEN. The Senator is entirely correct

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator readily went some distance in correcting the original bill, but we contend he did not go far enough.

Mr. AIKEN. Does the Senator from Kentucky think the burley tobacco growers would be better off if they received 90 percent of the present parity price than they would be under the pending bill? And does the Senator from Kentucky think the tobacco growers would be better off if quotas had to be voted every year?

Mr. BARKLEY. No.

Mr. AIKEN. Of course they would

Mr. BARKLEY. We have now a 3year period for quotas. It was 1 year, and we changed it to 3.

Mr. AIKEN. Under the pending measure, we might have a 30-year period, so long as conditions remain so drastically different.

Mr. BARKLEY. I am not questioning the time for quotas. This not only affects burley tobacco, but it affects darkfired tobacco and all other types of tobacco.

Mr. AIKEN. That is correct.

Mr. BARKLEY. I believe the American tobacco grower would be better off, better satisfied, and, in the long run, better served by a definite figure of 90 percent of parity, whatever that parity might be, than under a fluctuating rate from 60 to 90, because it is bound to fluctuate below 90 oftener than it is to fluctuate up to 90.

Mr. AIKEN. If I may ask the Senator another question, does he know of any tobacco growers, outside the State of Kentucky, who are protesting against the situation?

Mr. BARKLEY. I am not acquainted with tobacco growers outside the State of Kentucky.

Mr. AIKEN. I would say that so far as the committee knows, there are no protests of any nature from other States. Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the

Senator yield? Mr. BARKLEY. I yield to the Senator from Florida. Mr. PEPPER. I wonder if the Senator has in his State, which is a great tobacco-producing State, anything like the situation which is becoming more and more a threat to the tobacco growers in my State of Florida, that is to say, the farmers try to get enough graders to come and grade the product, and then the Government will say, "We will not send graders there for any length of time unless there are enough buyers from the big companies to buy the crop." Then the farmers get after the buyers, and they say, "We will come if the graders are there." It is like the old western statute which was passed by a State legislature and which provided that when two trains meet neither shall stop until the other has passed.

That represents the progress which has been made in connection with the situation. I do not know whether anything can be done about it, but it seems to me that it should be made clear that there should be enough graders at every market to accommodate the farmers who have their tobacco there; and if the buyers enter into some kind of an agreement, or in some way or other deny a fair market to the tobacco growers, it is time for the Government to step in and see if there cannot be a fair market provided for the tobacco growers.

Mr. BARKLEY. I have had the same experience as that to which the Senator from Florida has referred with regard to buyers and graders. During the war there was a shortage of graders, because many graders who qualified for grading tobacco went into the service. Year before last there was a shortage of approximately 25 in the number of graders available. The Department of Agriculture did the best it could to allocate those graders over the different sec-tions, according to the season, for the marketing of tobacco. But there was a shortage. The buyers did say, and now say, what the Senator has said. But there has been some improvement. They always say they will not send buyers in unless there are graders there. But there is now an association of buyers which meets and decides where markets are to be opened.

Mr. PEPPER. The Senator is absolutely correct. Last year we brought the matter to the attention of the Department of Justice and asked for an inquiry, because the association decided, as the Senator has said, where they wanted the markets to be opened.

Mr. BARKLEY. I know of one situation in my State in which farmers had to haul their tobacco 110 miles to the nearest market. We tried to open a market within a reasonable distance, so that the farmers would not have to travel halfway across the State in order to find a market. The Department of Agriculture was able to send a number of graders into the section and open a market. Even then some of the buyers among the "big four," as we call them, refused to come in. Others said, "We will send buyers if the other fellow will." But the other fellow would not. result was that the farmers did not have a fair market. Notwithstanding court decisions, indictments, and Department investigations-regardless of all that, the buyers find ways in which to deny farmers the facilities to which they are entitled in order to market their tobacco within a reasonable distance and with a reasonable amount of competition.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield. Mr. PEPPER. I brought the matter up because I wanted the RECORD to show attention to the matter by the Senate. I hope the Department of Agriculture will regard this discussion today, and that if they feel legislation is necessary to protect the tobacco growers who are prevented from having a market because of such conspiracies as have been mentioned, they will recommend legislation to correct the situation.

Mr. BARKLEY. I have no complaint to make against the Department of Agriculture, or against the tobacco section of that Department.

Mr. PEPPER. Neither have I.

Mr. BARKLEY. But they have no power to compel anyone to go to a market, even when they have sent the graders there. All they can do is to try to exercise some influence by persuasion.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield to the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. FERGUSON. I wonder whether the facts as presented by the able Senator from Kentucky do not show a real violation of the antitrust law and that, therefore, the proper remedy is one of prosecution rather than passing a new law.

Mr. BARKLEY. Not necessarily. Of course, to prove conspiracy is a difficult thing. The Department of Justice brought a lawsuit in Lexington, Ky., against four or five companies. were indicted and were fined heavily. am not sure whether anyone was imprisoned as a result of the trial.

Mr. COOPER. They were all fined. Mr. FERGUSON. Did they pay the fines?

Mr. BARKLEY. They paid the fines. The Department of Justice has been in process of investigating whether these new methods constitute a violation of law. But it is a long, tedious process to gather evidence against a great combination-

Mr. FERGUSON. I appreciate that. Mr. BARKLEY. Or to try to bring an indictment under the antitrust law. But, regardless of that, I think it is a problem which should address itself to legislation to see if we can find some way in which we can protect the farmers.

Mr. FERGUSON. I agree with the Senator wholeheartedly. I think that if the Attorney General finds they are exercising new methods of applying monopolistic control he should give us the facts so that we can consider new legislation with which to attack the problem.

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not know to what extent the Attorney General has been able to gather facts to submit to Congress, but I know the matter has been investigated. I think that when the Department of Justice can make concrete recommendations to the Congress it will be done.

Mr. COOPER. Mr President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield to my colleague.

Mr. COOPER. The Senator from Michigan suggests that there should be a prosecution if the facts are as we have stated. To support an indictment of conspiracy an actual agreement to violate the law must be shown. I have in no way implied that any tobacco company is today violating the law, and have no reason to so believe, but nevertheless the dominating position of the tobacco companies still influences and affects the price paid growers. There are about 10 companies whose buyers purchase practically all of the tobacco sold. These companies have been in business for years. Each knows that the farmer must sell his tobacco to one of them. Each knows the farmer cannot keep his tobacco another year and that if he does not sell to one of them, he cannot sell at all. It does not make much difference whether or not they make agreements. I should like to ask my colleague, who has had much more legislative experience than I, whether he knows of any other agricultural commodity whose value represents over a billion dollars and whose sale is limited to 8 or 10

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not know of any other agricultural commodity, whether cotton, corn, wheat, rice, potatoes, or any other product, that is marketed under the restrictions and restraints which surround the marketing of tobacco.

Mr. President, I do not wish to occupy the floor longer. I hope, for the reasons which my colleague and I have offered, and others we could offer by trespassing too long on the time of the Senate, that the amendment will be agreed to.

LEGISLATIVE RECORD OF TWO POLITI-CAL PARTIES ON INTERNATIONAL AF-FAIRS AND NATIONAL DEFENSE

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, because I am trying to present in chronological order the records to which I shall refer, I respectfully ask that I be not interrupted until I have completed my presentation, at which time I shall be glad to yield if Senators desire to have me do so.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I happen to know something of the nature of the remarks the Senator is about to make, I know they are most important, and that every Senator should hear them. Would the Senator be willing to yield to me to suggest the absence of a quorum?

Mr. TYDINGS. A large number of Senators are now at lunch.

Mr. THYE. I raise a point of order. The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HICKENLOOPER in the chair). Does the Senator from Maryland yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I appreciate the suggestion, but I prefer not to yield.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Senator from Maryland declines to yield.

Mr. THYE. My only reason for raising the point is that we were told by the majority leader here this morning that the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AIKEN] had stood by and stood aside for legislation that had come before the Senate for several days, and he asked the Members of the Senate if they would not please permit the Senator from Vermont to proceed with his farm legislation until it was completed today. I am alarmed, as I look at the chart the Senator from Maryland has had placed before the Senate, on which I read "Airplane expansion, etc., April 3, 1939," and from that date on. If the Senator's remarks relate to agriculture or the farm bill, then I withdraw my parliamentary point or objection, but if not, I hope the Senator from Maryland will permit the agriculture legislation to be considered in the Senate for the remainder of the afternoon, or until such time as we can take action on the bill.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. TYDINGS. I refuse to yield. I may say that if the Senator from Minnesota had not interrupted me I probably would have been well on toward half through what I have to say, and what I shall say I deem of importance, and it is not long. I shall begin again at the beginning and hope that I will not take too much of the Senate's time.

Within the next 5 months the people of the United States will select a President, Vice President, the Members of the House of Representatives, and approximately one-third of the United States Senate, who will begin their terms of office in January 1949.

In order that the record of the two parties in the Congress—that of the Democratic Party and that of the Republican Party—may be available in concise form for our citizens, I have had prepared the votes of the Democrats and Republicans in the Senate and the House by political parties on major legislation which has come before the Congress for decision from January 1, 1939, to date, insofar as that record deals primarily with international relations, preparation for war and war itself, and matters which are more or less related to the international field.

I shall present this record without partisan comment insofar as I can. I shall name the law, describe it briefly, and set forth the dates upon which the Senate and House voted thereon, and the result of the vote by parties.

The first vote was on April 13, 1939, on H. R. 3791, in the Seventy-sixth Congress. That bill provided for more national defense by increasing the number of serviceable airplanes to 6,000, exclusive of those awaiting salvage and authorized $300,000,000 therefore; it likewise provided for civilian flying schools and for the inclusion of 1,000 Reserve officers in the Regular Army other than the Air Corps and 3,000 to the Air Corps, and so forth. The vote upon this measure was as follows:

Airplane expansion, etc., Apr. 3, 1939

	Yea	Nay	Yea	Nay
Democratic	57 17	3 4	233 130	1 14

Next, construction of additional Coast Guard cutters and seaplanes, June 2, 1939:

		Yea	Nay
Democratic		190 62	12 79

1 No record vote.

Next was acquisition of strategic and critical materials, June 7, 1939:

ASSET TO THE PARTY OF THE PARTY	Sen	ate
	Yea	Nay	House 1
Democratic	48	1 12

1 No record vote.

Next was the repeal and rewriting of certain provisions of the Neutrality Act of 1935, which are briefly explained as follows: Public Resolution 54 (H. J. Res. 306), Seventy-sixth Congress, the Neutrality Act, repealed and rewrote the provisions of the Neutrality Act of 1935, as amended (U. S. C. Supp. IV, 22; 245a-245i), and repealed the Spanish Embargo Act (50 Stat. 3). However, such repeal did not affect the validity of proclamation No. 2237, of May 1, 1937 (50 Stat. 1834), or certificates of registration or licenses. The act provided:

Whenever the President or Congress shall find that there exists a state of war between foreign states and that it is necessary to promote the security or preserve the peace of the United States or to protect the lives of citizens, he shall issue a proclamation naming the belligerent states involved, and it shall thereafter be unlawful ($1,000 fine, 5 years' imprisonment, or both): (1) To export, or attempt to or cause to be exported, arms, or ammunition to any such state; (2) for any person ($50,000 fine, 5 years' imprisonment, or both) to purchase, sell, or exchange bonds or securities of, or make a loan or extend credit to, any such state, political subdivi-sion, or agent thereof (however, if the President shall find that such action will serve to protect our commercial interests, he may except normal peacetime commercial transactions, but he must make public every 90 days all such exceptions); (3) to export or transport, or to attempt to or cause to be exported or transported, any articles or materials to any such state (except under regulations prescribed by the President), until all interest therein shall have been transferred to some foreign government or national; and (4) to solicit or receive any contribution for or on behalf of any such state (except medical aid, or for food and clothing to relieve human suffering, subject to approval of the President). No citizen shall travel on any vessel of any belligerent state except at his own risk. The foregoing provisions shall not apply to American kepublics.

Upon similar findings, the President may place restrictions on the use by submarines or armed merchant vessels of a belligerent state of the ports and territorial waters of the United States, and he may require foreign or domestic vessels, believed about to carry fuel, men, munitions, or supplics to a belligerent ship, to give bond not to make such deliveries.

The act continued the National Munitions Control Board and required (a) munition makers, and so forth, to register with the Board-registration fee, $100; (b) importers and exporters to obtain licenses for shipment of munitions. Applicants for a license shall set forth a description of such exports, with credit or payment terms. The Board shall make an annual report to Congress upon questions connected with the control of trade in munitions of war, including a list of all persons required to register or obtain licenses. Whenever the President finds that there exists a state of war between foreign states, the Board shall make public all information herein provided and make a similar report each 90 days.

The vote on this was as follows: Neutrality Act of 1939, Nov. 4, 1939

Democratic	54 8	12 15	191	35 150

The next was to build up the Navy and Navy aircraft, as follows—Public Law 629 (H. R. 8026) Seventy-sixth Congress:

It increased by 167,000 tons the authorized composition of the Navy in under-age vessels as established by the act of May 17, 1938 (52 Stat. 401), making the increased category totals as follows: Aircraft carriers, 254,500 tons; cruisers, 479,024 tons; and submarines, 102,956 tons.

It increased the number of naval airplanes to 4,500 and the number of non-rigid lighter-than-air craft to 18 and authorized the President to acquire or to construct 75,000 tons of auxiliary vessels.

The vote upon it was as follows: Increases size of Navy, increases naval aircraft, June 14, 1940

	Senate 1	Но	use

1 No record vote.

The next is facilities to expedite the national defense, July 31, 1940:

1 No record vote.

Following that was the ordering of Army Reserve components, and so forth, into active military service, August 27, 1940:

Democratic	49 20	4 2	213 124	27

Next was the Selective Training and Service Act, 1940, September 16, 1940:

	Senate		Ho	use
	Yea	Nay	Yea	Nay
Democratic	£0 8	17 10	211 52	33 112

That was the Draft Act passed in 1940, which prepared the country for the induction of new men.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I cannot yield until I conclude my statement. Then I shall be glad to yield.

After this, there was the lend-lease bill, Public Law 11 (H. R. 1776), Seventy-seventh Congress.

Lend-lease bill: For the benefit of any foreign nation whose defense the President deems vital to the United States he may authorize any Government department or agency—to the extent to which funds are available or contracts are authorized by Congress—to manufacture or procure, to the extent to which funds are made available therefor or contracts are authorized by Congress, defense articles; to lend, lease, and so forth, defense articles of a value not exceeding $1,300,000,-000, and only after consultation with the Chief of Staff of the Army or the Chief of Naval Operations-value is to be determined by heads of departments concerned, and defense articles procured from funds hereafter appropriated shall not be disposed of under this authorityto outfit, inspect, repair, to the extent to which funds are made available therefor or contracts are authorized by Congress, defense articles; to communicate any defense information concerning defense articles loaned, leased, and so forth: and to release for export defense articles upon conditions deemed satisfactory by him. The powers so conferred shall not be exercised after June 30, 1943, or after the passage of a concurrent resolution of both Houses before that date, except that the terms of contracts entered into before July 1, 1943, may be extended to July 1, 1946.

It also authorized the Secretaries of War and Navy to acquire arms, munitions, and implements of war produced in such countries designated above whenever the President deems such acquisition necessary to the national defense.

This act shall not be construed as authorization for the convoying of vessels by United States naval vessels, nor for the entering of American vessels into a combat area in violation of the Neutrality Act of 1939.

The President shall report to Congress the operations under this act at least once every 90 days. Nothing in this act shall be construed to change existing law relating to the use of the land and naval forces; except insofar as such use relates to the manufacture, procurement, and repair of defense articles, the communication of information, and other noncombatant purposes enumerated.

The voting was as follows:

Next taken up was the lend-lease appropriation, March 27, 1941, Public Law 23 (H. R. 4050), Seventy-seventh Congress.

Defense Aid Supplemental Appropriation Act, 1941: To enable the President to carry out the provisions of the Lend-Lease Act the following is appropriated: $1,343,000,000 for ordnance; $2,054,000,000 for aircraft; $362,000,000 for tanks, trucks, and so forth; $629,000,000 for vessels; $260,000,000 for miscellaneous military equipment and supplies; $752,000,000 for facilities and equipment for the production of defense articles; $1,350,000,000 for agricultural, industrial, and other commodities; $200,000,000 for testing, repairing, reconditioning and so forth, defense articles for the government of any country whose defense the President deems vital to the defense of the United States; $40,000,000 for necessary services and expenses not specified; and $10,000,000 for administrative expenses. In all, $7,000,000,000 to remain available until June 30, 1943.

Authorized the Martime Commission to charter any vessel to private operators; to provide insurance and reinsurance; to repair, reconstruct, or recondition any vessel; to pay a fair price for vessels purchased.

It authorized the Secretary of Commerce to waive compliance with law relating to masters, officers, crew, and crew accommodations.

When the Selective Service Act was passed the bill contained the provision that it would be the law until 1945. It also contained the provision that those who were drafted into the armed services were to have one full year's training. The first class of inductees became available for the armed services about November 1940. This class would thus have completed its full year's training and be eligible for discharge in November 1941, according to the original Selective Service Act.

The Military Establishment recommended in July 1941 that when the first year of training had expired the law be amended so as to keep those who would have served their year in the service indefinitely. After hearings the matter came before the Congress for a vote. Various propositions were offered to keep those who had completed a year's training in the services; first for an additional 6 months, then a proposal to keep them in the service for an additional 12 months, and finally a proposal to keep them in training for an additional 18 months. These three propositions were acted upon only in the Senate. The vote on the 12 months' extension was as follows:

When the measure went to the House of Representatives, the first record vote there upon it was on a motion to recommit. Upon that motion the vote was as follows:

The House, however, did adopt certain amendments to the bill as it was passed by the Senate. Thus, as the final House version was in some respects different from the final Senate version of this bill, the matter next went to a conference of the two Houses, where the disagreements on certain provisions were reconciled and adjusted. When the matter came out of conference, the provision to extend the year's training, which many men were just completing, for an additional 18 months remained in the bill, and with other disagreements reconciled, the matter was referred by the conference back to each House for final adoption. There was no record vote on the conference report on the extension of selective service in the House. The final vote in the Senate was upon the adoption of the conference report, providing for the extension of selective service. The vote was as follows:

The next bill to be acted upon was the Property Seizure Act, to authorize the President of the United States to requisition property required for the defense of the United States, and the vote, just a few weeks before Pearl Harbor, was as follows:

Following this, there was Public Law 282 (H. R. 5788), Seventy-seventh Congress, the Defense Aid Supplemental Appropriation Act for 1942, which appropriated $5,985,000,000; $1,190,000,000 for ordnance, $635,000,000 for aeronautical materials, $385,000,000 for armored equipment, $850,000,000 for vessels, $155,000,000 for military and naval equipment, $375,000,000 for acquisition and operation of manufacturing facilities, and so forth, $1,875,000,000 for agricultural, industrial, and other commodities, $175,000,000 for testing, repairing, and so forth, of defense articles, $285,000,000 for necessary services and expenses in carrying the Lend-Lease Act, and $10,000,000 for administrative expenses.

Mr. TOBEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. As I said in the beginning, I prefer not to yield until I finish the chronological outline.

Mr. TOBEY. The statute of limitations has run against these things.

Mr. TYDINGS. I am coming up to date. The chronological outline runs right up to this minute. This is a 10-year record, as I stated in the beginning. The statute of limitations never is outlawed while the American people can go to the polls.

Next was the repeal of the Neutrality Act (Public Law 294 (H. J. Res. 237)) Seventy-seventh Congress:

That section 2 of the Neutrality Act of 1939 (relating to commerce with states engaged in armed conflict), and section 3 of such act (relating to combat areas) are hereby repealed.

SEC. 2. Section 6 of the Neutrality Act of 1939 (relating to the arming of American vessels) is hereby repealed; and during the unlimited national emergency proclaimed by the President on May 27, 1941, the President is authorized, through such agency as he may designate, to arm, or to permit or cause to be armed, any American vessel as defined in such act. The provisions of section 16 of the Criminal Code (relating to bonds from armed vessels on clearing) shall not apply to any such vessel.

Three weeks later, the Japs made their sneak attack on Pearl Harbor and the United States quickly declared war on the Axis Powers and became one of the active belligerents in the world struggle.

As the war drew to a victorious close in 1945, the United States took a leading part in preparing for the war's after-math. Meetings were held, attended by representatives of the leading nations of the world, seeking to prepare in advance for the financial, economic, and political rehabilitation of the nations of the earth, when war should finally end. Following the surrender in Europe and before the Japanese surrender in Asia, the Bretton Woods Agreement Act came before the Congress for action. This act dealt primarily with the creation of an agency intended to strengthen world financial and currency systems. The vote upon this measure was as follows:

Bretton Woods Agreement Act, July 31, 1945

	Senate		House
or a single	Yea	Nay	Yea	Nay
Democratic Republican	41 19	2 14	205 138	0 18

Following the surrender of the Japanese in 1945, another great agency came to the fore upon which much preliminary work had been done. This agency was known as the United Nations, and in the idealism which it espoused, the hopes of a great many people for the future of mankind were reposed. This agency, representing the nations of the earth, except the defeated countries, banded together to solve the world's problems without recourse to the battlefield.

On December 20, 1945, the question came up in Congress as to whether the United States, which had taken the lead in the creation of the UN, should become a participating member of it. The vote upon this question was as follows:

United Nations Participation Act of 1945, Dec. 20, 1945

	Senate		House
	Yea	Nay	Yea	Nay
Democratic Republican	41 23	1 6	193 150	0 14

In July 1946, the proposition was laid before the Congress as to whether or not a loan should be made to Great Britain, involving several billion dollars. After full discussion and debate in both Houses, the bill providing for the loan was adopted, the vote thereon being as follows:

Loan to Great Britain, July 15, 1946

	Senate		House
	Yea	Nay	Yea	Nay
Democratic	29 17	15 18	111 70	5 61

The Republican Party divided. In the Senate the majority of the Republicans were against the loan to Great Britain, and in the House the majority of the Republicans were for it.

During the early part of 1947, the next matter to come up dealing with foreign affairs was whether or not this country would give aid to Greece and Turkey. In Greece civil war had been going on, and Turkey was reported to be near economic collapse. Much of the civil war in Greece was stated to have its chief support from countries dominated by Russia and by Russia herself to aid the Communists in Greece then engaged in trying to overthrow the Greek Government by force. It was likewise stated that Turkey might collapse unless given some immediate support and thus might fall into the hands of Communist-dictated countries, in which event not only would the Mediterranean and the Suez Canal be threatened with further encirclement, but access to the great oil fields to the east thereof might be denied to the United States and other foreign countries. It was stated that if this occurred our own supply of oil might prove insufficient to carry the Nation through a period of great emergency. The matter came to a vote, with the following result:

The next great question to come before the Congress dealing with international matters was whether or not the

XCIV-539

Marshall plan proposed by our Government for the economic assistance of the 16 democratic countries of western Europe should be adopted. The bill authorizing this assistance involving many billions of dollars, came before the Congress for a vote on April 3, 1948, with the following results:

	Senate		House
	Yea	Nay	Yea	Nay
Democratic	38 21	4 13	171 158	61

Prior to that time, however, on March 12, the Taft amendment reducing funds for this foreign assistance from $5,300,-000 to $4,000,000,000 was voted upon by the Senate, as follows:

The above record of the political parties deals only with the Democratic and Republican vote in the Congress. It does not record or present the votes of those alined with other parties, such as the American Labor, Farmer-Labor, and the

When a man who has held public office presents himself to the people for reelection or for election to some other office he is bound more or less by three principal considerations: First, his own vote and record on matters that have come before him and upon which he has been recorded; second, the vote and record of the party to which he adheres, and its position on public questions which have been decided by legislative bodies; third, what the party to which he belongs proposes to do on policies, measures, and propositions which are currently, or likely to be, before the people for consideration.

In the above tabulation and record, individual votes, of course, are not shown. Only the party vote is shown on major international and semi-international questions that have come before the Congress in the last 10 years.

I have had this record prepared, for it tends to form a general pattern of the basic cleavage, in many respects, between the major decisions of the Democrats and Republicans in the fields covered.

At this particular time in the affairs of our own Nation, when men are to be elected to high office, it may be of help to those who wish to use the past as at least a partial yardstick to guide them in voting for candidates to pass on the measures now pending or likely to be presented for determination.

Mr. President, I have tried to present this tabulation without argument for or against the vote on any particular measure, in as nonpartisan a way as I could, but simply to compile the facts for the consideration of the Congress and the country.

Now I shall be glad to yield.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, in the same spirit with which the Senator from Maryland has presented these most enlightening records for the information of the American public-information which it certainly is entitled to have-I should like to place in the RECORD at this point a tabulation dealing with a matter which as vitally affects our international affairs as do any of the measures the Senator from Maryland has mentioned.

I have in mind the record of the two parties on the reciprocal trade agreements program, on which the Senate voted just the other day, and to which the statute of limitations does not apply. I believe I do not see the Senator from New Hampshire in the Chamber at the moment, but I could not help but be reminded that in some experience with the law in New Mexico I have never heard the statute of limitations raised except by those who are the most guilty.

Mr. TYDINGS. Before the Senator reads the tabulation, I should like to add a sentence for the purpose of clarification, namely, that the record I have prepared and have presented here today, for obvious reasons is not current. It does not include the votes, as I recall, from the 1st of May, or sometime in May, to date, because matters have been in such a state of flux on many of these questions that I did not have time to get the last minute news on them.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I shall now read a tabulation appearing in an article relative to the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act. The article appeared in the Christian Science Monitor of April 28, 1948. Mr. Richard L. Stout wrote the article, which is entitled "Tariff Trends-An Intimate Message From Washington." Let me say I am sure Mr. Stout carefully checked the figures. tabulation appearing in the body of his article is as follows:

The Hull trade program has come before Congress five separate times with its original enactment and four continuations. Here is the Senate vote on these five occasions: 1934: Democrats for, 54; against, 5; Republicans for, 5; against, 28.

1937: Democrats for, 56; against, 9; Republicans for, 0; against, 14.

1940: Democrats for, 41; against, 15; Republicans for, 0; against, 20.

1943: Democrats for, 41; against, 8; Republicans for, 18; against 14.

1945: Democrats for, 38; against, 5; Republicans for, 15; against, 16.

Here is the similar House record:

1934: Democrats for, 269; against, 11; Republicans for, 2; against, 99. 1937: Democrats for, 278; against, 11; Republicans for, 3; against, 81. 1940: Democrats for, 212; against, 20; Republicans for, 5; against, 146.

1943: Democrats for, 193; against, 3; Republicans for, 163; against, 26.

1945: Democrats for, 205; against, 12; Republicans for, 23; against, 140.

Mr. President, just this week the Senate had three very significant votes on amendments to the same act. amendments were prepared and submitted by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY]. The first amendment provided for a 3-year extension of the act without amendment; the second provided for a 2-year extension of the act without amendment; and the third provided for a 1-year extension of the act without amendment. I ask unanimous consent to have the votes on those three amendments included at this point in the RECORD, as a part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the votes were ordered to be printed in the REC-ORD, as follows:

Barkley 3-year amendment: Democrats for, 40; against, 1. Republicans for, 1; against, Barkley 2-year amendment: Democrats or, 40; against, 1. Republicans for, 2; against, 46.

Barkley 1-year amendment: Democrats for, 40; against, 1. Republicans for, 3; against, 45.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from New Mexico for his very worth-while contribution to the statistics of the polemics on which democracy rests. As he has done, so I have tried to present the data to the Senate without any desire to criticize either party or any individual for the votes cast, but simply so there will be in one place a factual record which will speak for itself. Obviously it will please some and will displease others, in every case.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Maryland has performed a most worthy service, but I did not want his remarks to conclude without inserting the statistics for the reciprocal trade agreements program.

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield the floor.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6419) authorizing the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors for navigation, flood control, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6772) making appropriations for the Department of the Navy and the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1949, and for other purposes; that the House receded from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate Nos. 16 and 23 to the bill, and concurred therein, and that the House receded from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 40 to the bill, and concurred therein with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 117) providing for acceptance by the United States of America of the constitution of the International Labor Organization Instrument of Amendment, and further authorizing an appropriation for payment of the United States share of the expenses of membership and for expenses of participation by the United States.

The message also announced that the House insisted upon its amendments to the bill (S. 2821) to provide increases of compensation for certain veterans with service-connected disability who have dependents, disagreed to by the Senate; agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mrs. Rogers of Massachusetts, Mr. Kearney, Mr. Mathews, Mr. Rankin, and Mr. Allen of Louisiana were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference

The message further announced that the House insisted upon its amendment to the bill (S. 2825) to increase the rates of service-connected death compensation payable to certain widows, children, and dependent parents of persons who served in the active military or naval service, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the Senate; agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mrs. Rogers of Massachusetts, Mr. Kearney, Mr. Mathews, Mr. Rankin, and Mr. Allen of Louisiana were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following joint resolutions, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H. J. Res. 428. Joint resolution providing an extension of time for claiming credit or refund with respect to war losses; and

H. J. Res. 429. Joint resolution relating to the marital deduction, for estate-tax purposes, in the case of life insurance or annuity payments.

APPROPRIATIONS FOR NAVY DEPART-MENT—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, I submit a conference report on House bill 6772, making appropriations for the Department of the Navy and the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1949, and for other purposes, and I ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Kem in the chair). The conference report will be read.

The conference report was read, as

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6772) making appropriations for the Department of the Navy and the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1949, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 6 and 12.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 3, 4, 5, 9, 14, 15, 19, 20, 21, 37, 38, 39, 41, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 2: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 2, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed by said amendment insert "$2,250,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 7: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 7, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed by said amendment insert "$13,200,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the conference report?

There being no objection, the report was considered and agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate a message from the House of Representatives announcing its action on certain amendments of the Senate to House bill 6772, which was read, as follows:

In the House of Representatives, U. S.,

Resolved, That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate No. 16 and 23 to the bill (H. R. 6772) making appropriations for the Department of the Navy and the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1949, and for other purposes, and concurred therein.

That the House recede from its disagree-

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 40 to said bill and concur therein with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by said amendment, insert the following:

"SEC. 112. No part of the appropriations made in this act shall be available for contracts with any person, firm, or corporation to make or cause to be made with a stop watch or other time-measuring device a time study of any job of any employee within the Navy; nor shall any part of the appropria-tions made in this act be available to pay any premiums or bonus or cash reward to any employee in addition to his regular wages, except for suggestions resulting in improvements or economy in the operation of any Government plant; and no moneys herein appropriated for the Naval Establishment or made available therefor shall be used or expended under contracts hereafter made for the repair, purchase, or acquirement, by or from any private contractor, of any naval ves-sel, machinery, article, or articles that at the time of the proposed repair, purchase, or acquirement can be repaired, manufactured, or produced in each or any of the Govern-ment naval shippards or arsenals of the United States, when time and facilities permit, and when in the judgment of the Secretary, such repair, purchase, acquirement, or production would not involve an appreciable increase in cost to the Government, cept when the repair, purchase or acquirement, by or from any private contractor, would, in the opinion of the Secretary, be advantageous to the national defense.'

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate No. 40.

The motion was agreed to.

CONVEYANCE TO OKALOOSA COUNTY (FLA.) OF A PORTION OF SANTA ROSA ISLAND, FLA.—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, I submit a conference report on House bill 3735, to authorize and direct the Secretary of War to donate and convey to Okaloosa County, State of Florida, all the right, title, and interest of the United States in and to a portion of Santa Rosa Island, Fla., and for other purposes, and I ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The conference report will be read.

The conference report was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 3735) to authorize and direct the Secretary of War to donate and convey to Okaloosa County, State of Florida, all the right, title, and interest of the United States in and to a portion of Santa Rosa Island, Florida, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 2, 3, and 4, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 1: That the House

recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following: "That the Secretary of the Army is authorized to convey, subject to the limitations and conditions hereinafter enumerated and such others as he may prescribe, to Okaloosa County, State of Florida, for recreational purposes, all right, title, and interest of the United States in and to all or any part of that portion of Santa Rosa Island, Florida, extending one mile east from Brooks Bridge on United States Highway 98 near the town of Fort Walton, Florida, except for a strip of land six hundred feet wide (three hundred feet east and three hundred feet west from center line of road leading to radar site "Dick"), extending from Highway 98 to the mean low water level of the Gulf of Mexico, and two miles west from said bridge, and to all or any part of that portion of said Santa Rosa Island which lies east of the new channel at East Pass (consisting of two small islands), said property being under the jurisdiction of the Department of the Army. Such conveyance shall be made upon payment by said county of a sum which shall be 50 per centum of the fair value of the property conveyed, based upon the highest and best use of the property at the time it is offered for sale regardless of its former character or use, as determined by the Secretary, less such portion of the price originally paid by said county for island, prior to its conveyance to United States, as the Secretary shall determine to be fair and equitable"; and the Senate agree to the same.

CHANGE THE NAME OF POTHOLES DAM TO O'SULLIVAN DAM

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 202) to change the name of the South Coulee Dam in the Columbia Basin project to O'Sullivan Dam, which were, in line 3, strike out "South Coulee" and insert "Potholes"; in line 7, strike out "South Coulee" and insert "Potholes," and to amend the title so as to read: "Joint resolution to change the name of the Potholes Dam in the Columbia Basin project to O'Sullivan Dam."

Mr. BUTLER. I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

COMMENTS BY FEDERAL JUDGES TO JURIES—ADDRESS BY B. M. McKEL-WAY

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, there has come to my attention through my friend, former Senator John A. Danaher, a very interesting statement made some time ago by the distinguished editor of the Washington Evening Star, Mr. B. M. McKelway. In the statement Mr. McKelway discusses, from the standpoint of a layman, the controversy as to whether or not a judge should instruct jurors in Federal courts. It is a very interesting address.

Mr. McKelway has explored the problem of the balance on the Federal judiciary also, showing that through the years the Democratic administration has been in power the very few Republicans who have been appointed. This is a matter which has engaged the attention of the Committee on the Judiciary of the Senate, and particularly my attention, during the Eightieth Congress. I believe Mr. McKelway's comments will be of interest to lawyers and laymen alike, whether or not they agree with his conclusions. We lawyers have a tendency to get into a rut, and it is a very healthy experience to get the expression of a keen layman on the important subject of checks and balances in the judicial system, because that question dates away back to the time of King John, when the King himself was supreme and when his subjects required of him and got from him a proviso that a man should be judged by his peers. The question is as to what that means.

For these reasons, Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that Mr. Mc-Kelway's address be printed in the Record following my remarks.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. Chief Justice, honorable judges, ladies, and gentlemen, Dr. Samuel Johnson's observation about the woman preacher is somehow applicable to the position in which I find myself today, with this assignment to elucidate the topic: "Should a judge be permitted to comment on the evidence in instructing a jury?"

Dr. Johnson said the woman preacher reminded him of a dog walking on its hind legs. The question was not whether the woman preached well. The remarkable thing was that she did it at all.

As a layman, I beg your induigence and throw myself on your mercy. I am in the situation common to all the laymen with whom you come in professional contact. In other words, I am in trouble. What can an uninformed layman do with a subject which seems to baffle even the judges?

I accepted the invitation to participate in this discussion, however, with obedient alacrity. A judge extended the invitation and centuries of Anglo Saxon discipline under law have made it instinctive, on the part of a layman, to jump when the judge speaks.

My acceptance did lead me into some reflective speculation as to the motives which might be involved in having a layman present and speaking in this group.

And against the layman's wishful thinking to the contrary, the anecdote concerning Gen. Ulysses S. Grant rudely intruded itself—the story of the staff member who, otherwise unsusigned, was always on hand for meetings of the staff. General Grant explained that there was a good reason for having him there. For if this man, General Grant said, could understand what was being talked about, then anybody could understand it. If the judges and the lawyers ever wish to bring their colloquies out into the open, so to speak, it might be a good idea to find out if an ordinary layman can understand what they are talking about.

The subject under examination here today, as Justice Holtzoff has told us, has been under more or less continuous discussion in the United States for 150 years. It became an issue in North Carolina when there were only three judges serving the people of that new Commonwealth. Even in those early days the woods were full of lawyers and they outnumbered the judges.

The lawyers were able to change the common-law rules brought over from the old country regarding the judge's right and even his duty to comment on the evidence. As the tide of civilization swept westward the lawyers, moving with the tide and still outnumbering the judges, got the change written into the statutes of most of the States. And here we are, today, still debating it. It is an interesting anomaly that, while it is the layman's interests which are mostly at stake, the debate is restricted almost entirely to the lawyers and the judges.

It is time that laymen began to participate in the discussion. But I fear that most laymen are like the lady juror, one of several jury members whom I requested one of our reporters to interview. His question was, "Madame, would you mind telling me whether you think a judge should or should not comment to the jury on the evidence?"

not comment to the jury on the evidence?"
"Mister," she replied, "I ain't never give it no thought."

Neither had I. I had never "give" it no thought. But the more thought I gave it, and the more references I consulted as to what others had thought, the more interested I became and the more anxious I became that other laymen should learn to know something about the two sides to this controversy.

I believe my own would be the reaction of any layman who, through his jury service or otherwise, gives some attention to the machinery which handles the business of the courts. That is why I am a believer in the movement, with which Chief Justice Laws has identified himself, of bringing more laymen into the discussion of possible methods of improving the administration of justice. There is an adage that "familiarity breeds contempt." But if there is an exception to prove that rule, surely it applies in the case of the layman's familiarity with the processes of justice. Far from inviting his contempt, it is my belief that familiarity with the functioning of his courts would kindle within the layman more of that reverent regard for the majesty of undefiled justice which I believe to be the common attribute of good men who are learned in the law.

I was interested in the answer of jurors, serving in a criminal and in a civil case under trial in the district court in Washington, in response to this question, "Do you think that the judge should or should not comment on the evidence?" The replies seem to follow a pattern. But I shall read them to you, temporarily withholding my own comment on the evidence

Civil-case jurors:

Retired male Government employee, "I think it is very helpful."

Male Government employee, "It helps to Woman Government employee, "I do like to have the judge make his comment, within limitations. A slight summary. And just what is expected of the jury."

Male Government employee: "I think he should say something about the evidence. I was pleased by the way the judge told us about what the law meant. I think the fury should be instructed as to what procedure to follow in the jury room. In our case, it was chaos after we began deliberating on the verdict because a couple of men wanted to explain their views in detail. I would like instructions on how the poll should be taken. I believe they should give us some kind of printed instructions about how we are supposed to proceed."

Male real estate and insurance broker: "I think the judge should be more explicit. There were several questions involved and the jury didn't know what to do. When there are legal terms, the judge should explain them. The judges know what the legal terms mean. But they are new to us. We don't understand some of them.'

Male auditor, Bureau of Internal Revenue: "I have never served on but one case. think some comment from the judge on the evidence is necessary. Of course, it should be impartial."

Woman juror: "Mister, I ain't never give it no thought."

Male inspector of engineering materials for the Government: "I think the judge should give us instructions in the case, ing them clearly and in an unbiased way."
Woman Government clerk: "I think it is a great help for the judge to comment on some of the evidence. He knows the law and everything like that. He should comment both for and against. It seems to me there were little leads from the judge, to sort of direct your thinking."

Housewife: "I don't think he should favor either side. I think he should give an impartial résumé."

Male Government statistician: "I think that the judge, having the knowledge of law he has, should instruct the fury as to what should be considered as evidence. I think he should give, in his charge, the meat of the evidence.'

Criminal-case jurors:

Male Government engineer: "If I don't understand the case, I would like for the judge to give me instructions on it. I think it is necessary for the judge to give general instructions on evidence, impartially, Male assembly clerk for electrical supply company: "I think the judge should give us some advice as to how to go about it." Male receptionist with a furniture company: "That is a hard question. I think it is necessary for the judge to give general instructions on the evidence, impartially."

Male Government clerk: "I approve of his commenting on the evidence as it is pre-Order dispatcher for electric company: "I think it helps a jury to have the judge instruct them as to what they can do and what they can't do. I think it is a good thing for him to comment on the evidence. He makes

Radio repairman: "On some of the evidence, actually, it might be necessary for him to comment. He should explain what the indictment is and what the law is. I think if he talks too much he will put too much weight on one side or the other."

Automobile mechanic: "The evidence would be understood better if he commented on it. I think the judge would make it more clear by commenting on it. I would like for the judge to outline the law in the Machinist: "I think the judge ought to us advice on the evidence.

Male Government research clerk: "A lot of times we don't know what it means after we get in the jury room. I mean the indictment. We didn't know what one meant."

Assistant group chief, Government Printing Office: "I think it is a good point, having the judge comment on the evidence. We are laymen and often it is very confusing. We ought to be allowed to take notes. There should be paper and pencil issued, so we can take notes. When the judge comments on the evidence, I don't think he should let us know, by the way he stresses things, and raises or lowers his voice, what he may think of the case."

Our first conclusion, from the evidence presented by these jurors, is that our juries, in Washington, are overweighted by Government employees. But we are all over-weighted by Government employees. That may be dismissed, therefore, as irrelevant— though not immaterial.

Our second conclusion is that the jurors who were questioned did not have a very profound understanding of the significance of the question. I wonder, as a layman, how often jurors fall to understand the significance of questions during a trial. Is it not the duty of a judge to assure himself that the jury does understand the significance of the questions and the answers?

But our third and most important conclusion is that here, in these spot answers, hurriedly given by 21 jury men and women fresh from their experience in the courtroom, you find the thread which forms the basic fabric of the topic under discussion here today.

We find all the jurors leaning heavily on what the judge says. Without this guidance from the one man in the court on whose advice they feel they can rely, there is the dread of misunderstanding the facts concerning which the juror is desperately anxious to base a fair judgment.

And along with all this there is that shrewd, American awareness, shown by some of these jurors, of the possibility that the judge himself might be partial—and that a condition of his right to comment on the evidence is the impartiality of his comment.

You note that one juror touched on a point which, I find, runs through much of the literature on this subject. This juror expressed the opinion that the judge, in commenting on the evidence, should not let the jury know, "by the way he stresses things, and raises or lowers his voice," what he may think of the case.

That, of course, is a well-known method of conveying, to the jury, exactly what the judge does think of the case. I heard, not long ago, a highly respected member of the bench, a scholarly exponent of the noblest principles of justice, repeat for my edification, in pantomime and by modulations of the human voice, his comment on the evidence to a recent jury. He used, and most effectively, his shoulders, his hands, his eyebrows, his eyes, and the level of his voice. By such means he pleaded the case with such convincing eloquence that I found myself siding with him completely on the point he wished to make in relation to the evidence.

He had commented in that fashion to the jury because he believed so profoundly that by doing it he was serving the ends of justice.

I am not passing on the substance of what he conveyed to the jury. But I am calling attention once more to that juror, the 1 out of 21 whom we questioned, who had noticed—from his brief experience in court—that "by the way he stresses things and raises or lowers his voice" in commenting on the evidence a judge can tell the jury what he thinks of the case.

There, of course, in the hands of a judge who is without conscience or is motivated by some purpose not related to the ends of fustice, lies a danger.

But in the juror's instinctive doubt as to the propriety of what the judge might do. lies a strong safeguard against that danger.

If the jury system possesses the merits which most of us are inclined to acknowledge, surely it must be strong enough to resist the undue influence of an occasional unprincipled judge. Otherwise, our juries are made of putty. While I have heard critiare made of putty. cism of the jury system, most vigorously asserted by the lawyer who has just lost a case, I have never heard jurors criticized on the ground that they are spineless.

In my lay opinion, the more that the judge can do to assure a lay jury's comprehension of the facts which affect a fair judgment of the issue; the more guides that he can fur-nish, cut of the wisdom of his experience and his knowledge of the laws of human nature, the more apt we are to have just verdicts from the jury. On the other hand, the more rigid the rules which gag a judge in his relationship with the jury, the greater the danger that justice will miscarry.

I have read cases where Federal judges were caught far off base in their comments on the evidence, such comment being a reflection on the attitude of the judge himself, rather than the rule which sanctioned his comment. But in reading some of the cases where State judges have been reversed for trespassing on ground forbidden to them, I have been pressed by what seemed to me to be the benefits to the jury of the comment for which the judge was held to be in error. As to a law that supposes that justice is best served by keeping the judge silent while some smart lawyer pulls the wool over the eyes of the jury, I agree with Mr. Bumble: "If the law supposes that, the law is an ass."

I believe it is correct to say that our Federal judiciary, which operates under a broader latitude than is permitted in most of the States, has achieved a more impressive reputation for even-handed justice than many of our State courts. I also believe that any attempt to interfere by legislation with the freedom these judges enjoy, in working for an impartial judgment by the jury on the pertinent facts, would be a step backward, just as the removal of such legislation in some of the States is considered a step forward.

I wonder if the matter does not boil down, in the end, to the amount of confidence we have in our judges. I find from my conversations with lawyer friends that there are some of them who, agreeing in principle with the advantages of judicial comment on the evidence as a means of clarifying the jury's understanding, are not willing to accept ap-plication of this principle in the case of some

I am inclined to believe that if all State judges were chosen for life or for periods sufficiently long to insure for them something of the cloistered status of our Federal judges, the rules on comment in the State courts might more rapidly conform to those in the Federal courts. The latitude we permit our judges is at least a partial reflection of our confidence in the judges.

Prohibitions against comment on the evidence in State courts may have been based originally on some fear of judicial tyranny. But there is such a thing as tyranny at the hands of the people, swayed by momentary passions from which many of our State courts are not very well insulated. It is not difficult to understand the factors which may undermine confidence in judges who are forced, at intervals, to leave the bench and go into the hustings and appeal, not only to the intelligence but to the emotions, of the voters who decide their fate.

Of the three branches of our Government, our Federal judiciary enjoys the greatest con-fidence of the people because of the tradition of its isolation from politics.

That, at least, is the tradition which we cherish as a principle.

But is that tradition well served by the tendency to appoint to the Federal bench only those who wear the party label of the

I say only those. Here is the record of the appointments to the Federal bench in the continental United States since 1933:

Supreme Court, 9 Democrats and 2 Republicans.

Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia, 8 Democrats and 1 Republican.

The 10 circuit courts, 46 Democrats and 2 Republicans.
The Court of Customs and Patent Appeals,

8 Democrats and no Republicans.

Court of Customs, 6 Democrats and 2 Republicans

Court of Claims, 4 Democrats and no Republicans, District courts in the United States, 146

Democrats and 2 Republicans.

The total comes to 222 Democrats and 9 Republicans. Of the judges appointed since 1933 and now sitting as members of the Federal judiciary in the continental United States, 191 of them are Democrats and 6 are Republicans.

understand the practical realities of politics, under which Federal judicial ap-pointments have been regarded for many years as the plums of the party in power, I do not think that a party label should assume any great importance in considering a man for the Federal bench whose temperamental and intellectual qualities fit him for that high responsibility.

What I am talking about is the confidence we enjoy, as a tradition, in the nonpolitical complexion of the Federal judiciary and the supreme importance of maintaining that confidence in the minds of the laymen.

And as a layman I submit that the tradition suffers some injury when we find that 222 out of the 231 Federal judges appointed since 1933 have been Democrats, that of this group only 6 out of the 197 now sitting are Republicans.

You remember the preacher who was praying for rain during a drought. As he was about to close his prayer, he remembered what happened to his bottom land during a spring freshet. And he added: "But, Lord, please be reasonable."

With that plea, to the powers that be and are to be, I bring to a close this layman's comment.

DEFENSE OF PRESIDENT TRUMAN'S INTEGRITY

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I hold in my hand an article appearing in the June 2 issue of the Kansas City Star, entitled "Truman Integrity Defended in Review of Milligan Book." This review is written by Mr. Jerome Walsh, a prominent member of the Missouri Bar who was requested to review this book by the Missouri Bar Review, official publication of the Missouri Bar Association. I shall not discuss the article itself, but I should like to read these brief paragraphs:

In his reflections on the fortunes of life and politics, he returns again and again to the subject of "luck." Mr. Truman was "lucky"; he has been the "luckiest of men." Not-so-old-timers in Missouri will have little difficulty in recalling Mr. Milligan's wellnigh suicidal despair in running a poor and undistinguished third, behind Truman and Lloyd Stark, in the race for Senator in the 1940 Democratic primary.

He can reflect

Referring again to the author-that with half-truths, distortions, gossip, inference, indirection, hearsay, and outright untruth, he has impeached the character of Missouri's first President, a man about whose character few Democrats in Jackson County have ever said an unkind word, a man to whom even the Republican Kansas City Star accords respect and good will.

That ends the quotation. I ask unanimous consent that the entire article be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

TRUMAN INTEGRITY DEFENDED IN REVIEW OF MILLIGAN BOOK-FOLLOWING RECAPITULA-TION OF THE PENDERGAST STORY, TECHNIQUE OF CONDEMNATION BY INFERENCE IS USED TO CAST FALSE SUSPICION ON THE PRESIDENT, SAYS JEROME WALSH

(This is a review by Jerome Walsh of The Inside Story of the Pendergast Machine by the Man Who Smashed It (formerly Missouri Waltz), by Maurice M. Milligan. The book was published by Charles Scribner's Sons in April. The review appears in the May issue of the Kansas City Bar Bulletin. Walsh, a lawyer here, was a candidate in 1946 for the Democratic nomination for Representative in the Congress from Jackson County's Fifth District.)

Mr. Milligan's book is of special interest to members of the Missouri bar, not alone because it retells the story of the crack-up of one of the most potent political machines in the history of the Republic but because a Missourian of stature is stood up and counted in its pages.

Indeed, it is this last aspect which has given the book a wide sale, which attracted prior to publication a flurry of excited newspaper comment and stimulated some planners of campaign strategy to a pitch of anticipation and delight.

A THOROUGH DOCUMENTATION

The activities of few bosses have been as thoroughly documented as have those of Pendergast. In Tom's Town, William M. Reddig told the story recently and well. Mr. Milligan's book, almost altogether de-rivative, recooks the same cabbage. It is hardly a scoop.

But Mr. Milligan's book is something more than the story of the Pendergast dynasty. It is primarily an assault upon the integrity and reputation of the President of the United States, a Missourian who happened to live in Jackson County during the period of machine rule.

It is an assault, furthermore, that is being delivered in an election year, when campaign material, however factual, brings premium prices and when those willing to author it may expect to obtain a full measure of acclaim from the organization and newspaper apparatus of the party opposed to the President in power.

For the first 212 pages, then, the Milligan book is the standard recapitulation of the Pendergast story, a compendium of old newspaper clippings, photographs, and Milligan musings and speeches, none of which are either very startling or reflect any insight more profound than the newspaper editorials of the time.

"BEEN SAID BEFORE"

In these pages, Mr. Milligan informs us that, like Calvin Coolidge's preacher, he is against sin; he is against gambling, vote frauds, dope, and, presumably, whisky. Although opposition to these ills has been expressed occasionally before, three-fourths Missouri Waltz is devoted to conveying the impression that Milligan discovered them all, personally.

The reader musing through the rather turgid prose of these early pages may well tend to wonder why all the fuss and feathers. It is the last 60 pages, however, that give him a run for his money.

For it is in these pages that an effort is made to link Harry Truman with every species of sin that flourished during the regime of Pendergast. He is linked by inference, never directly. He knew Pender-gast personally; his start in politics was at the suggestion of Tom's nephew, Jim; he received the support of the Pendergast organization in his campaigns for county judge and for the United States Senate.

He must be assumed, therefore, to be party to every nefarious and venal deed that the henchmen of Pendergast perpetrated, from Johnny Lazia to Matthew S. Murray, from Jimmy Needles to Edward Schneider.

QUALIFIES AN ATTACK

Ghosts were voted by the thousands by Pendergast lieutenants, who, jostling each other for power and influence, sought the boss' favor by returning fantastic majoritles in their precincts. If ghost votes were cast for Mr. Truman, he personally was involved in the conspiracy. No, Mr. Milligan power goes cuite that far never goes quite that far.

Indeed, the final section of the book-the fireworks section entitled "An Evil Heritage"—begins with a statement made by Milligan in 1944, when in answer to a reporter's inquiry, he said:

"At no time (during the investigation conducted by the district attorney's office) did the finger of suspicion ever point in the direction of Senator Truman."

To the thousands of Jackson Countians who have known Harry Truman since his boyhood, this statement is both pompous and superfluous, although Mr. Milligan indicates that he should be credited with a a gracious and courteous gesture in making

AIMED AT THE VOTER

But despite this flat statement that Mr. Truman was never involved in the machine's depredations-and the utter absence of any evidence linking him with a single dubious deed in those years of universal corruption—the entire weight of the book is an effort to establish in the mind of the voting reader the suspicion that the involvement was no less real for being indirect.

Thus, Milligan threads the name of the President through accounts of the bloody municipal election of 1934. The name of the President crops up next door to mentions of Pendergast's concrete company; it appears in the same paragraph with the names of Charles Carollo, Otto P. Higgins, John Pryor, and others who wound up with prison terms.

By inference and juxtaposition, Mr. Truman is brought to emerge as some kind of vague partner of convicted traffickers in political corruption. Never, however, are direct statements made to this effect. It is by indirection—one of the cheapest devices in the textbook of scurrility—that Mr. Milligan attains his ends.

SUSPICION BY INFERENCE

His technique is never to lay these sins directly at the President's door, but to lay them at the door of the man down the street and then to brand the President for living in the general neighborhood.

It is inconceivable that as an attorney and a member of this State's bar, Mr. Milligan would permit the introduction of evidence of this quality either in a court of law or in the court of his own thinking. Indeed, his wholesale use of it violates some of the basic principles of jurisprudence.

It was to eliminate this kind of base gossip and hearsay, rumor, and innuendo arising from personal rancor, that the rules of evidence were developed to become such a proud and integral part of our common-law heri-

Apply the gossip technique to anyone. Apply it even to Mr. Milligan, since he, apparently, sanctions its use and villifies a President with it. For example, the story has made the rounds for years that following the release from prison of Tom Pendergast, Mr. Milligan paid a personal nighttime visit to the boss' Kansas City home, where the erstwhile satrap was living alone, aged and friendless.

BRUISES FROM A SLUR

I have not the slightest idea as to whether there is a word of truth in this story. Yet, here is the alleged fact of the visit, set up in cold type and, as thus set, it is a suggestion that will, of course, bring aches to the Milligan bones and call forth, no doubt, a hurried and sanctimonious denial, suggesting, as it does, that the nocturnal visit was for some sinister nurpose.

sinister purpose.

I have no wish to bring groans from Mr. Milligan or to bruise in any way the well-muscled Milligan ego. Yet let him consider carefully, as he smarts under the heedless and callous aspersion, admitted under his very own rules of evidence, that innuendo and hearsay can rot out the good name of any man alive, even a Maurice Milligan with his screen of old newspaper clippings and his protective toga of the Milligan myth.

Boiled down, then, the whole book is predicated upon the assumption that anyone who knew Pendergast, anyone who received the support of the Pendergast organization in attaining elective office, must somehow share personal responsibility for every act of crime and boodle that was committed during the Pendergast regime.

SUPPORT BY PENDERGAST

Let those who are willing to accept this thesis apply it consistently. Let them apply it to Lloyd C. Stark, halled far and wide as Missouri's clean-up Governor, who broke with Pendergast but who, prior to the break, sought and was elected to office by Pendergast's organized support.

Let them apply it to James A. Reed, whose lifetime of office-holding was made possible by votes delivered by the Pendergast organization

Let them apply it to great and honorable judges of our courts, to Senator Harry B. Hawes, to Bennett Champ Clark, to Mr. Milligan's own respected brother, Jacob L. (Tuck) Milligan, who, running for Congressman-at-Large in 1932, was willingly helped to office by Kansas City votes—some of which, no doubt, were ectoplasm, but none of which are repudiated by the author.

diated by the author.

No word can be said in defense of bossism.

It is the kind of hidden sore, however, which is revealed in its true dimensions only when some monstrous cataclysm, such as the Kansas City collapse, bursts upon public notice.

ACCEPTED IN BEST CIRCLES

Pendergast himself moved among the business and professional men of his city as an accepted and respected equal, whose handshake and nod was a flattering unction to chamber of commerce presidents, newspaper publishers, professional and commercial leaders of all kinds, whose attendance at church and intoning of the ritual was punctilious and sincere.

The hands of these sturdy gentry, pillars of society, were lifted high in horror when the extent of civil corruption became manifest following Pendergast's departure for Leavenworth. Yet, by Milligan's standards, these hands were soiled, too; they had touched the hand of Pendergast and had received favors from the boss and his satellites.

To say that Harry Truman had the support of the Pendergast organization in his campaign for public office is to say simply that without organized support it is impossible to get elected even to the office of constable in our American democracy.

LOOK TO THE MACHINES

The late President Roosevelt, whom even Mr. Milligan seems to revere, freely and openly solicited the strength of the Hague, Kelly-Nash, and Pendergast organizations.

For the previous decade or so, Republican leaders had contested for the favor of the Vare-Pew organization in Pennsylvania. Mc-Kinley and Theodore Roosevelt had their Mark Hanna and Boise Penrose. Even Lincoln, saint that he was, strove to maintain friendly relations with the vote-purveying pharaohs of his party.

To say that any of these men became thereby tools or serfs of these organizations is to lapse into Milligania, a mental aliment marked by double talk and an excessive display of piety upon the part of the afflicted.

Only a native of Jackson County can fully appreciate the often uproarious unconscious burlesque that marks this book.

Only a native of Jackson County could recall with what splendid fire Milligan—the archangelic foe of bossism—openly endorsed the Pendergast-supported candidate for mayor of Kansas City in 1946, the ebullient Robert K. Ryland, who, be it said to his credit, scorned to attempt to hide his allegiance. Surely, this act of Milligan's constitutes a paradox that should discredit his book up and down the land.

DEFEATED BY MR. TRUMAN

But, of course, it is for a definite purpose that Mr. Milligan is so ineffably lofty. If there is a single continuing theme in this book other than the author's profound respect for Maurice M. Milligan, it is his bitterness at Harry Truman, a bitterness almost pathological in its intensity.

In his reflections on the fortunes of life and politics, he returns again and again to the subject of luck. Mr. Truman was lucky, he has been the luckiest of men. Not-so-old timers in Missouri will have little difficulty recalling Mr. Milligan's well-nigh suicidal despair in running a poor and undistinguished third, behind Truman and Lloyd Stark, in the race for Senator in the 1940 Democratic primary.

That the voters of Missouri should thus repudiate him, choosing in his stead another Missouri country boy whom he had always regarded as a rival, was a disappointment of a kind that better men than Maurice Milligan have found bitter to swallow. Yet, in this book, he has found a special balm for his wounds, and the acclaim accorded it by the Republican press, hot for campaign documents, must fall musically on his ears.

He can reflect that with half-truths, distortions, gossip, inference, indirection, hearsay, and outright untruth, he has impeached the character of Missouri's first President, a man about whose character few Democrats' in Jackson County have ever said an unkind word, a man to whom even the Republican Kansas City Star accords respect and good will

SLAUGHTER PURGE CITED

"My observance of boss rule, renewing and flourishing under countenance from a Fresident of the United States and his executive assistants, has dictated the writing of this book." Thus does Mr. Milligan begin an account of the primary election of 1946, when the President sought the aid of the Democrats of the county in defeating Congressman Roger C. Slaughter, a Democrat.

Everybody knows that Slaughter had opposed the bulk of measures submitted to Congress by the President, a condition peculiarly embarrassing to Mr. Truman in view of the fact that Slaughter hailed from his home county.

Mr. Truman's request that the voters of Jackson County defeat Slaughter is hailed by Milligan as an act very nearly tantamount to high treason. Yet there is plenty of precedent for this participation by a President in a local election. The late Mr. Roosevelt attempted it unsuccessfully almost a score of times. So did Woodrow Wilson, who stumped the country asking the defeat of opponents of the League of Nations. Other examples could be cited.

DEFEAT WAS ESSENTIAL

In this writer's view, the elimination of Slaughter from Congress was essential to the President's program. I agree that the question of who would become Slaughter's successor was a secondary matter. I myself was one of the candidates, and in the heat of the race the rumor became widespread that if I withdrew I would receive huge rewards.

However, for personal reasons, I made the difficult decision to stay in and fight it out—and lost. Here occurs another of Mr. Milligan's bitter inferences, namely, that somehow Mr. Truman must take personal responsibility for the vote frauds that developed in this contest.

The duties of a President are manifold. Someone should point out to Milligan that they do not yet include the personal supervision of local elections.

Mr. Milligan spends pages making appointment as United States district attorney appear to be the net result of the most intensive screening of numerous candidates by the Attorney General of the United States. I think I can comment on this section from personal experience. In 1932 Senator-elect Bennett Champ Clark graciously proffered me his recommendation for appointment as United States attorney—an offer then equal to actual appointment. Personal reasons caused me to decline.

REASON FOR SUPPORT

During the 13 months between this offer and Mr. Milligan's ascension, Clark endeavored with might and main to secure the appointment of Carl L. Ristine, whom the Attorney General of the United States, Homer Cummings, opposed, thus finding himself on this issue in complete accord with Pendergast. Mr. Milligan simply was not in the running. His only claim on Clark, without whose support he had no chance, was Clark's affection for Mr. Milligan's brother, Tuck, who on the basis of that affection, was himself endeavoring with might and main to secure Milligan's appointment.

The situation remained static until Clark, finally seeing his support of Ristine to be hopeless, made a deal with Cummings whereby Milligan, the lesser horn of this political dilemma, was finally given the post, but only on condition that Ristine receive, as he ultimately did, an appointment as Assistant Attorney General at compensation substantially exceeding Milligan's.

The most glaringly misleading treatment of the facts by Milligan is that concerning the Union Station massacre and his participation in the investigation of that crime. As a constant spectator of the Kansas City scene, I read with awe Mr. Milligan's account of his participation in the massacre affair which occurred June 16, 1933. At the time, Mr. Milligan, not yet appointed, was still residing in Ray County and, like the rest of us, learned of the crime through the press—in his case, doubtless through the columns of the Ray County News or the Cooperative Farmer. The vagaries of politics had not yet launched him on either a political or a literary career. After the Clark-Cummings compromise, another of Missouri's famous compromises, resulting in his appointment, he assumed the duties of his office at a time when this case was already 9 months old.

JOIN IN SOLVING CASE

From his account, one would think that J. Edgar Hoover had vacated his office and could not be encouraged to resume it. Until, of course, he heard of Milligan's appointment, after which they joined together and, with Hoover in a minor role, proceeded to crack the Kansas City massacre.

At page 132 he says, "My office asked for the return of Adam Richetti to Kansas City to stand trial for participation in the Union Station massacre." Mr. Milligan is confused. He sent no capias, for Richetti was brought back on a writ of habeas corpus ad testificandum and taken by Milligan before a Federal grand jury where he failed to break Richetti. Following this waterhaul, Richetti was handed as good riddance to the Missouri authorities.

Mr. Milligan says: "Richetti was brought to trial, convicted, and duly executed, paying his debt to society for his part in the Union Station massacre." Either Mr. Milligan is employing his standard method of inference and wants his readers to believe that it was he who prosecuted and personally hanged Richetti, or, if he is not doing so, surely he will not object to my pointing out, for the mere sake of historical accuracy, that he had no part in Richetti's prosecution and execution and that the same was accomplished solely by the State courts.

TENACITY IS LAUDED

But full and complete credit must be given Milligan for the tenacity he exhibited in taking on the Pendergast octopus. The let-well-enough-alone type of man and mind might have taken an easier course. However, for cleaning up the vote situation in Kanasa City, credit should be accorded the new permanent registration law enacted by the legislature in 1937. Credit certainly has to be given in large measure to his two capable assistants who many times carried on the fight when Mr. Milligan was elsewhere.

assistants who many times carried on the fight when Mr. Milligan was elsewhere.

Randall W. Wilson, a courtroom strategist of rare ability, did practically all of the heavy duty trial work. Sam C. Blair, now judge of the circuit court for the fourteenth judicial district circuit, in his brilliantly unique manner briefed the law, drafted the indictments, mapped the strategy and supplied the brain power that sparked the Milligan rise to fame.

In addition, Mr. Milligan is entitled to complete recognition for the part he played in the T. J. Pendergast income-tax prosecution. He sent Mr. Pendergast to the penitentary, but the great gap in this book, and I think it is a gap in Milligan's record, is his recounting of the capitulation of Mc-Cormack, who finally informed on Pendergast and made his conviction possible.

This capitulation came, says the author, only after he had threatened officials of the various fire-insurance companies which furnished the bribe money by representing that he had the means to embarrass them if they did not force McCormack to inform, Thereupon, they speedily pressed McCormack to tell his story.

QUESTION ON MOTIVE

What Milligan actually said to these men, and on the basis of what, the book leaves entirely to conjecture. But it also leaves something else—and that is this question: What strong motive did Milligan appeal to in these men to work on McCormack so as to avoid for themselves embarrassment? The clear import is that he had facts enough to make them sweat if they refused to help him make Pendergast sweat.

Actually, one wonders on the basis of Milligan's own peculiar application of the rules of evidence, if he should not have gone on with his prosecutions instead of stopping cold on Pendergast. In any case, and whatever the unrevealed facts are, he has left himself, these officials, his record, and his book, in a position which, to say the least, is equivocal.

In this connection, Mr. Milligan says that on the morning of the Pendergast plea he refused to release to the press copies of a written statement of facts he was to present to the court "until I had seen the defendant enter the courtroom and heard with my own ears the plea of guilty."

own ears the plea of guilty."

It is true, as he relates, "I presented my findings of fraud and tax evasion at the request of Judge Otis * * *" and that he "eschewed oratory and dramatics" in doing so.

A LENGTHY STATEMENT

His statements in this respect are the facts, but in doing so, he put on an unheard of performance by a lawyer in a case of that or any other magnitude. He read that statement to the court! It was some 15 pages in length, and had been prepared and written for him by Sam Blair. Lawyers of parts just don't do that. Milligan rarely, if ever, said anything in the courtroom extemporaneously and relied exclusively on Blair for the preparation of his arguments to juries and statements to the courts which, if he did not actually read, he had beforehand committed to memory.

This book offers a sketchy refresher course

This book offers a sketchy refresher course of the Kansas City story, but to either the literature or the trustworthy record of our time it adds nothing but its own vainglory,

THE RIZLEY-MOORE BILL AND THE ACTIVITIES OF LELAND OLDS

Mr. MOORE. Mr. President, continued shortages of fuel oil in the New England and North Atlantic States are almost certain. The ability of the domestic oil industry to supply the military petroleum requirements has been seriously impaired. In my opinion, these domestic and military shortages will necessarily result from the defeat of House bill 4051, commonly referred to as the Rizley-Moore gas bill, by the Senate Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee, which previously had passed the House by a vote of 4 to 1. This legislation has been the object of a well-planned and well-executed propaganda program of the Red element in the United States under the leadership of Leland Olds of the Federal Power Commission. It has been the victim of the gullibility and dishonesty of a few politicians and of the misunderstanding of some Members of the Congress who have not had the time or opportunity to study the issues involved.

The Natural Gas Act, as originally passed, provides that the Federal Power Commission shall regulate the interstate transportation of natural gas and the sale thereof for resale for ultimate consumption. The Power Commission, however, under the leadership of Leland Olds, former Chairman of the Commission and a long-time member, has expanded the jurisdiction of the Commission to regulate the production and gathering of gas in the field contrary to the plain language of the Natural Gas Act, which excludes "the production and gathering of gas" from the jurisdiction of the Commission. A New Deal court has sustained the Commission. policy has caused the natural gas pipeline companies serving large consuming areas to cease exploration for gas reserves, and has caused independent producers to refuse to sell gas to interstate pipe lines except at substantially increased prices and subject to the condition that if the Commission regulates the transaction in any way, the contract of sale is void and the seller may discontinue the delivery of gas. This state of affairs has almost terminated the building of any further interstate pipe lines from the southwestern gas fields to the consuming areas of the North and East.

It means that the 165,000,000,000,000 cubic feet of known gas reserves of the Southwest, which is equivalent to about 27,500,000,000 barrels of oil on a fuel heating basis, will not be made available to relieve the fuel-oil shortage suffered by the people of New England and the North Atlantic States during the past several winters. These reserves of gas, likewise, will not be available to relieve the strain on the fuel-oil demand for industrial and military uses.

The interstate pipe lines are now paying as high as 12 cents for gas in the field because of the Federal Power Commission's policy. This is well over 100 percent increase since the establishment of the Commission's policy. It is taking about $150,000,000 a year out of the pockets of the consumers as extra tribute to the Power Commission policy.

The bill which was killed by the Senate committee would have amended the Natural Gas Act clearly to exclude the Commission from asserting jurisdiction over the activities of producing and gathering natural gas and the facilities used for such purpose. The amendment would have released the gas reserves of the Southwest for sale and transportation to the suffering consumers of the North and East. The plentiful supply of gas thus made available would have made competition keen, and the price of gas to consumers would have, as a natural consequence, gone down, as is always the case when any commodity is made plentiful. The people and the military forces have been denied this additional supply of petroleum products because of the activity of Leland Olds of the Power Commission.

I think the people of this country are entitled to know just who Leland Olds is. Prior to Mr. Olds' appointment to the Federal Power Commission, he was an associate editor of the Federated Press. The Federated Press was a Communist organization for the purpose of gathering and feeding news and propaganda to other Communist publications, including the Daily Worker. Other coeditors of the Federated Press were Carl Haessler, an outstanding and notorious member of the Communist Party in America, who has a record of conviction for the evasion of the draft laws during World The executive board of the Federated Press at and during the time Mr. Olds was a writer and coeditor included such active Communists as Earl Browder and William Z. Foster and John W. Edelman. The Federated Press was represented in Washington by Laurence Todd, who at the same time represented the Tass Agency, the official press organization of the Soviet Union. Over a period of 10 years the Daily Worker carried column under the byline of Leland Olds, condemning the capitalistic system.

During these years as coeditor of the Federated Press, Leland Olds was a recipient of grants and awards of money from the American Fund for Public Service, commonly known as the Garland Fund. The Garland Fund was set up in 1922 by young and rich Charles Garland, and was dedicated to the advancement of communistic-front organizations in America.

In 1925, Mr. Olds was awarded $3,-640 from the fund. In 1926, he received another award of $3,000. In 1928, he received a gift of $3,600 from the fund. During the same time, the Federated Press received grants totaling $76,000. The Daily Worker was also a recipient of advances from the Garland Fund. The communistic magazine known as the New Masses, was founded in the United States with the financial aid of the Garland Fund. During this period, Earl Browder and William Z. Foster as members of the executive board of the Federated Press were Mr. Olds' bosses.

In 1938, Leland Olds was temporary chairman of, and made the keynote speech to, the American Labor Party at its national convention in New York on October 3 of that year. In this speech Mr. Olds asked the question:

How can I escape war and find peace?

He concluded with: The old parties—

That means the Democratic Party as well as the Republican Party—cannot answer this fundamental question of the people because their organizations are still based upon selfishness.

According to the New York Times of October 4 of that year, Mr. Olds in this keynote speech also said:

The Labor Party was born because the President could not count upon the machinery of his own party to support his efforts.

According to the Times, Mr. Olds also said:

Millions of men and women knew that neither the Republican nor Democratic Parties could be depended upon to enable Franklin Delano Roosevelt to continue to lead the Nation into the promised land of security, equality, love, and peace. The Labor Party is the response to the political awakening that is shaking the foundations of the cld political machines which, while giving lip service in their platforms to the needs of the people, were in reality willing tools of the financial power that ruled America and made its democracy a sham.

In view of Mr. Olds' philosophy and his previous official connections with communism, it is not strange that he has used his office as a member of the Federal Power Commission to hinder the industrial development of this country and impede the efforts of the oil industry to supply the domestic and military petroleum requirements. It is not strange that he has enlisted the aid of left-wing columnists and radio commentators.

The purpose of Mr. Olds' effort to defeat the bill is to continue to impose his devastating philosophies upon the American people as a member of the Federal Power Commission. Mr. Olds has filed a report with the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee of the Senate and has testified before one of its subcommittees that he believes the gas reserves of the Southwest should be locked up and that the population of the North and East should be forced to move to these areas as a matter of social advancement. in order to use these gas reserves for industrial purposes. He has stated that he does not believe that gas should be permitted to be competitive with coal and oil. Mr. Olds has said, as a step in effectuating a managed economy in this country, the Commission should determine where, when, and for what purposes gas may be used. Mr. Draper, the fourth member of the present Commission, has gone along with Mr. Olds because of his subservient position to those who backed his nomination. Mr. Olds also had the support and help of the President of the United States in propagandizing the public and defeating the gas amendment.

Two members of the Commission, Mr. Wimberly and Mr. Smith, filed a report with the committee disagreeing with the Olds philosophy and have urged upon the Senate Committee that the Natural Gas Act should be amended in order to relieve the fuel shortages of the North and East.

Mr. President, I have made this statement concerning the proposed gas amendment, known as the Rizley-Moore bill (H. R. 4051), and the activities of Leland Olds, in order that the attention of the Members of Congress and the public may be focused upon the character of individuals who still hold important positions of trust and responsibility in this government.

IMPORTANCE OF AN ADEQUATE MILITARY MANPOWER ACT

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, before I request a quorum call. I want to make a short statement in regard to another matter. It is not my intention to indulge in any partisan argument with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. Typings]. I am perfectly willing to let his speech speak for itself, but I may say that if the Senator from Maryland were on the floor at this time, I am sure he would agree with me that in this critical hour of America's history there must be no partisan difference of any nature whatsoever on the question of protecting the security of the Nation. Reading the newspapers today and listening to conversations in the cloakroom raise a question as to whether in the hours immediately ahead, before adjournment Saturday night, we may be confronted with a holding-up process by way of a filibuster in connection with a military manpower bill. Speaking only for myself, Mr. President, but, I feel, also for a great majority of this body on both sides of the aisle and a great majority of the American people, so far as I am concerned I shall take the position that we should remain here, no matter how many days it may require, until we pass a military manpower bill that will protect the security of the Nation in this great hour of crisis. I am convinced that if, as the result of any parliamentary maneuvering we adjourn without the passage of such a bill, such action would be heard the globe around. It would carry with it some serious implications as to our intention and power to enforce the peace.

I want to say this as one who proposed what he believed to be some reasonable amendments to the draft bill when it was before the Senate. The Senate took action which resulted in the adoption of some and the defeat of some of my amendments. I shall take the same position I should take if I were a member of the conference committee considering the bill. The Senate by majority vote having spoken, I would defend the bill as passed by the Senate. Hence, I serve notice here and now that, as one Member of the Senate, I shall support any attempt to prevent prolonged debate in the nature of a filibuster on manpower legislation in the Senate of the United States between now and adjournment. In fact, I shall take the position that we must remain in session until we break any such parliamentary maneuver as that if it should develop.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names;

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eightyone Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

LONG-RANGE AGRICULTURAL PROGRAM

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 2318) to provide for a coordinated agricultural program.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. Cooper] on behalf of himself and his colleague, the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY]. Mr. COOPER and Mr. BARKLEY asked for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll.

Mr. WHERRY. I announce that the Senator from Delaware [Mr. Buck], the Senator from Kansas [Mr. REED], and the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. Tobeyl are detained on official business. If present and voting, the Senator from Delaware [Mr. Buck] and the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. Tobey] would vote "nay."

The Senator from South Dakota [Mr. BUSHFIELD], the Senator from Kansas [Mr. Capper], and the Senator from Indiana [Mr. Jenner] are necessarily absent. If present and voting, the Senator from South Dakota, the Senator from Kansas, and the Senator from Indiana would vote "nay."

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Longel is necessarily absent and is paired with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. George]. If present and voting, the Senator from Massachusetts would vote "nay" and the Senator from Georgia would vote "yea."

The Senator from California is absent by leave of the Senate. If present and voting, the Senator from California [Mr. KNOWLAND | would vote "nay."

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator from Virginia [Mr. Byrd], the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. FEAZEL], and the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. McGrath] are necessarily absent on official business.

I announce that the Senator from Georgia [Mr. George] is absent because of a death in his family.

The Senator from Nevada [Mr. Mc-CARRAN] and the Senator from New York [Mr. Wagner] are necessarily absent.

The Senator from Utah [Mr. Thomas] is absent by leave of the Senate, having been appointed a national delegate by the President to the annual conference of the International Labor Organization, meeting in San Francisco, Calif.

I announce further that the Senator from Georgia [Mr. George] who would vote "yea," if present, is paired with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Longe], who would vote "nay," if present.

The result was announced-yeas 41, nays 40, as follows:

So the amendment of Mr. Cooper, on behalf of himself and Mr. BARKLEY, to the committee agreement, was agreed to.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I move that the Senate reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TYDINGS. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER HICKENLOOPER in the chair). The question is on the motion by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. Typings] to lay on the table the motion to reconsider.

Mr. AIKEN. On this motion I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Chief Clerk called the roll.

Mr. WHERRY. I announce that the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. Bush-FIELD], the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CAPPER], the Senator from Indiana [Mr. JENNER], and the Senator from Maine [Mr. WHITE] are necessarily absent. If present and voting, the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. BushField], the Senator from Kansas [Mr. Capper], and the Senator from Indiana [Mr. JENNER] would vote "nay."

The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. MARTIN] and the Senator from Kansas [Mr. REED] are detained on official business. If present and voting, the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. Martin] would vote "nay."

The Senator from California IMr. KNOWLAND] is absent by leave of the Senate and is paired with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. Moore] who is detained on official business. If present and voting, the Senator from California would vote "nay" and the Senator from Oklahoma would vote "yea."

The Senator from Masschusetts [Mr. Lorgel is necessarily absent and is paired with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. George]. If present and voting, the Senator from Massachusetts would vote "nay," and the Senator from Geor-

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator from Virginia [Mr. Byrd], the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. FEAZEL], and the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. McGrath] are necessarily absent on official business.

I announce that the Senator from Georgia [Mr. George] is absent because of a death in his family.

The Senator from Nevada [Mr. Mc-CARRAN] and the Senator from New York [Mr. Wagner] are necessarily absent.

The Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS] is absent by leave of the Senate, having been appointed a national delegate by the President to the annual conference of the International Labor Organization. meeting in San Francisco, Calif.

I announce further that the Senator from Georgia [Mr. George], who would vote "yea," if present, is paired with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Longe], who would vote "nay," if present.

So Mr. BARKLEY's motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. SALTONSTALL obtained the floor

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, I should like to say a word about the vote which has just been cast. I realize that this vote, giving special privilege to a single agricultural commodity, and possibly to be followed by votes which will give special privilege to other commodities, may be the start of the break-down of this bill. It is very apparent that many Members of the Senate are not in a mood to enact any long-range legislation on this subject.

I think it is a most ridiculous spectacle for the President of the United States to be traveling thousands of miles around the country advocating the enactment of this bill, as he did by name in Los Angeles only the other evening, and then have only three or four members of his own party support him in the Senate. I think it is a sorry spectacle to see a great party disintegrate to that extent, to see how little regard they have for the opinions of their leader.

I should like to call attention to what those votes mean. I suppose the Senators who supported the amendment expect that Congress is merely going to pass the stopgap bill of the House of Representatives, and it is possible that may be done. Let us see what that would mean. Let us see what would happen to citrus fruits, for instance. Under the stopgap bill, a few millions of dollars will be available for the purchase of citrus fruits. However, under this bill there would be between $300,000,000 and $400,000,000 available for the purchase of fruits and vegetables and other nonbasic commodities to support the price, if necessary.

The House bill extends the support price for wool for only 1 year, and that is meaningless. The Senate bill, which we are asked to vote on, and on which the members of the committee have worked for months, in trying to put it into shape and get it ready for passage, would give perpetual price support to wool

Mr. President, I think it is just too bad that while the President of the United States is traveling over the country advocating a long-range farm program that his party here in Congress is doing everything within its power to prevent any program for the benefit of the farmers of the United States from being enacted.

I wish to say that there is one group that will be very happy over the defeat of a long-range farm program bill, and that is the group of men whose names appeared in the newspapers this morning as being indicted for failure to register as lobbyists. I know what interests certain persons have in killing this bill, and I know the opposition that has labored against it in the Cotton States. Let me state what happened. Some of the men whose names were in the newspapers this morning have been very interested in this bill—one of them, at least. If this bill passed, it would temporarily reduce the parity price of cotton. In the long run, it is the best bill the cotton growers of the country have ever had offered to them. But what would happen if this bill passed?

Mr. YOUNG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. AIKEN. No; I decline to yield

Mr. President, what would happen, I repeat, if this bill passed? The result would be that the speculators who have bought futures in cotton would take a licking. So they are going to be extremely happy as a result of this vote, which starts toward breaking down this longrange agricultural program bill on which we have worked for months and months, and which ought to become law, and for which the farmers of the United States have been hoping for more than 10 years.

I wish to express my appreciation to the senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. Lucas], the senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. ELLENDER], and the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS] who voted for this measure.

Mr. President, political tactics have been practiced here, which may sacrifice the general welfare of the farmers of the United States for years to come.

The stopgap bill will not support the wool growers to any appreciable extent. It will not help the citrus fruit growers or the apple growers. The citrus fruit growers of Florida can look forward again to getting from 5 to 15 cents a box for their grapefruit next winter, whereas if the Senate bill passed they should get a decent price.

Several Senators addressed the Chair. Mr. AIKEN. Now let them say what

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, I wish to offer two brief amendments in the name of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. Ferguson] and myself and then I shall be glad to yield the floor. The amendments are offered to page 82 of the bill.

Mr. THYE. Mr. President, I want to know whether the Senator will yield to me for a moment. I should like to comment—

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, I regretfully decline to yield, because I have declined to yield to Senators on the other side of the aisle.

I should like to complete my statement, and then yield the floor.

Mr. President, in the name of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. Ferguson] and myself, I offer the two technical amendments to section 302, on page 82 of the bill. I understand that the amendments are acceptable to the Senator from Vermont, who is in charge of the bill. So I offer the amendments at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts offer the amendments en bloc?

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Yes, they are offered en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendments will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In the committee amendment on page 82, line 3, after the word "determined," it is proposed to insert: "by the Secretary after reasonable public notice and public hearing with records of said hearing and a finding thereon by said Secretary available to the public."

On page 82, line 6, it is proposed to strike out "in the national interest" and insert "in the interest of national

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendments submitted by the Senator from Massachusetts, which are to be considered en bloc.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. PEPPER. Will the business before the Senate be stated?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It has been stated, and it will be stated again. The question is on agreeing to the amendments submitted by the Senator from Massachusetts, which are to be considered en bloc.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, I simply state that these are technical amendments to make sure that before the Secretary of Agriculture undertakes to exercise certain powers given him by this section, there shall be a public hearing, and that notice of such public hearing and of his findings shall be given before he exercises that power.

The second amendment changes the words "in the national interest" to the words "in the interest of national security."

I understand that the amendments are acceptable to the Senator from Vermont [Mr. Aiken], with whom I have discussed them.

Mr. BARKLEY, Mr. THYE, and other Senators addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kentucky is recognized.

Mr. THYE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Kentucky yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kentucky yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. BARKLEY. Not at the moment. I desire to comment on the remarks of the Senator from Vermont, and I will not yield at the moment.

Mr. President, I am sorry that the usually calm and self-possessed Senator from Vermont has permitted himself to become overexcited as a result of the adoption of the amendment upon which the Senate just voted. I am especially sorry he took advantage of the adoption of the amendment to inject politics into the consideration of the over-all agri-cultural legislation. I am sure that when the Senator finds a calmer moment, which he will do, he will not feel that the Senator from Kentucky and his colleague who sits on the other side of the aisle were playing politics when we offered the amendment or that the Senate was playing politics when it adopted it, or that it destroys the bill, or that it is inimical to the interests of any other grower or of any other crop or of any other product of any kind in the United States.

It is true the President has recommended long-range agricultural legislation, and he may have endorsed yesterday or any other day, in principle, the legislation which the Senate is now considering. But certainly the President of the United States by any endorsement he might give to this legislation did not expect us to take it without the crossing of a "t" or the dotting of an "i" or without any amendments to it; otherwise the amendments already adopted and accepted by the Senator from Vermont would vitiate the legislation according to that standard.

Mr. President, we argued the amendment in good faith. We presented the facts with respect to the special situation which surrounds tobacco and which everyone recognizes. The adoption of an amendment on that one subject had no effect whatever on any other product, any other crop, or any other part of the United States from an agricultural or economic standpoint. I do not know what the chances may be of securing over-all legislation. If there is a defeat of over-all legislation it will not take place in this body as the result of the adoption of the amendment just voted on.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, does he mean he is opposed to the amendment which is to be offered by the Senator from Georgia, which would defeat a long-range program?

Mr. BARKLEY. If I am convinced when the time comes to vote on that amendment that we cannot obtain long-range legislation, I shall vote for it, because it will be necessary to extend the present law beyond the 31st of December, in order to have any price support at all.

Mr. AIKEN. If the Senator will yield further, I might say that perhaps I was wrong in not pointing out to the Senators on the other side, before they voted, just what they were doing to their States in helping to break down a long-range program. I supposed they all knew what they were doing. If they did not, they misunderstood.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I am sure that those who voted against the amendment at least thought they knew what they were doing.

Mr. AIKEN. I also assume that both Senators from Kentucky knew what they were doing when they offered the amendment which has now been adopted, which actually reduces the support on tobacco if S. 2318 is not enacted.

Mr. BARKLEY. We were taking our chances on that.

Mr. AIKEN. I desire to say, too, for the benefit of both Senators from Maryland that the long-range bill would increase the parity price of Maryland to-bacco approximately 16 or 18 cents a pound.

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not suppose any Senator representing a tobacco-growing State would weep very copious tears if an increase in the price of his product were vouchsafed by reason of legislation. What I wanted to say was that if the legislation providing an over-all program is not enacted, it will not be on account of the amendment the Senate has just adopted; it will be for other reasons. The fact that the legislation is only brought here now, at the end of the session, may have made some contribution to the inability of the two Houses to get together on it.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, the legislation has been here for 6 weeks.

Mr. BARKLEY. The committee in the House has not considered the legislation, and I am advised will not consider it at this session.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield, in all fairness? Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. AIKEN. First, I should like to say the legislation was brought to the Senate on the 15th of May. Next, I should like to say that, regardless of what the House does now, the House committee had an appropriation of $25,000 made available to them last fall that they started and took their first step in the direction of long-range agricultural legislation before 'the Senate committee started; and that the House committee held considerably more hearings than did the Senate committee. I am sure most members of the House committee are familiar with the legislation which we are acting upon here now, and would be ready to act upon it on short notice if it came to the floor of the House.

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not know, but I am told by members of the House committee they will not consider the legislation without holding further hearings. We know the difficulty which will be encountered concerning this bill if we adjourn Saturday. I have done what I could to cooperate with the majority in bringing about an adjournment, because I think if we sit here until after the convention, or if we sit here between the conventions, or after the two conventions, the entire time of the Congress will be taken up with political bickering and political legislation and political oratory, and I do not want that to be brought about. I want to finish what we can finish and adjourn the Congress, and I have tried my best to cooperate with the leaders on the other side to bring about an adjournment.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, I wish the Senator would permit me to say that the House committee started holding their hearings on the long-range program before the Senate committee began. We had a joint hearing of the committees to hear the Secretary of Agriculture. The House has held more hearings than the Senate, and admittedly they may not have been as fruitful.

Mr. BARKLEY. Be that as it may, this is Thursday before the contemplated adjournment on Saturday. They have not reported any proposed legislation of this character, and I am advised they will not do so; but that is not our responsi-

Mr. THYE. Mr. President, will the able Senator from Kentucky yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. THYE. The situation is most regrettable. I frankly say to the senior Senator from Kentucky and the junior Senator from Kentucky that I have a great respect and admiration for both of them. My reason for asking to be recognized now is not on the basis of criticism. The Senators could offer the amendment, and if they succeeded in having it adopted it would show they had more friends than those of us who opposed the amendment had. I desire to refer to the question now in order that Senators may understand how thoroughly the committee went into the study of the entire subject, and into the development of the thoughts embodied in this particular long-range agricultural bill. The committee held hearings all over the Nation, and came forth with recommendations which are embodied in the bill. as they got them from the producer groups of the Nation.

In order that the senior Senator from Kentucky may fully appreciate how much thought we gave to the matter and how we attempted to be fair in every sense in dealing with all the price structures and that is why I say it is regrettable that Senators must in a way break it up into little pieces and have special prices in the parity formula for certain commodities. I should like to say to him that if we had wanted to be technical we could have raised the question for the dairy producer in this same manner: During the war years the Congress, through the Commodity Credit Corporation and the marketing organization of the Department of Agriculture agreed that, in order to keep the price of different products down so that the consumer would not have to pay excessive prices, they would pay to the producer a daily feed subsidy payment. They also paid to the processor a subsidy payment. That held the price of milk down to the producer. When we commenced to figure parity, none of us quarreled about having subsidy prices included. We said. "We will take what the producer actually receives per hundred pounds for milk and per pound for butterfat," and if we had wanted to be technical and had asked for special consideration to firm up the price to the producer by use of the subsidy, we would have found that in the case of milk the parity price in the formula would have been, without subsidies figured in, $4.12; with subsidies figured in, $4.35. That would have made a difference of 23 cents higher per hundred pounds.

On butterfat, without subsidies figured in, it would have been 65.2 cents; with subsidies figured in, 69.7 cents; a difference of 4.5 cents per pound of butterfat.

We did not argue the fact that a subsidy had been given the producer. We might have said it was a subsidy to the consumer, rather than to the producer. We took it on the basis of what the farmer had received. That is why it is so regrettable, to me, to see ourselves involved in an argument which might well destroy the chances of the passage of the bill. Furthermore, it gives an opportunity to another group to say, "Give me a special privilege, because you recognized the tobacco people and gave them a special privilege in parity insofar as their commodity is concerned.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I do not care to consume the time of the Senate in arguing and rearguing the merits of the amendment which has been offered. In all our legislation on agriculture we have placed tobacco in a special category because it occupied a special situation. But I shall not go into that. What I want to refute is the idea that because we have adopted one amendment, in the exercise of our judgment, with reference to a product which contributed before the war one-eighth of the entire revenue of the Government, we have destroyed agricultural legislation. There is no excuse for any such red herring to be drawn across the fabric of this legislation because we have adopted one amendment.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I want to make a brief observation to the able Senator from Vermont who is in charge of the bill, if I may have his attention. I am sure the Senator is conversant with the old adage which says "Whom the gods destroy they first make mad. am sure the distinguished Senator from Vermont will not succeed in the persuasion of his colleagues as to the merits of his bill by rebuking and reproving those who may happen to vote a certain way. If the able Senator so departs from his usually genial mann.r of rersuasive arguments as to follow that false policy. I think he will share the responsibility for the ill fate which may overtake the measure which he is sponsoring

Mr. President, we voted a short time ago. I was not aware that it was customary in the Senate for Senators to have to explain to their colleagues the discretion which they employed upon the Senate floor. So far as concerns the advice which was given by the able Senator from Vermont to my colleague and to me, that we would have to explain to our people, I will say that it has been customary for Senators to explain to their own people, but not to feel the necessity of explaining to others. felt in this matter that there was a justifiable distinction for this particular amendment. We consulted about it, we thought about it, and we considered the small number of buyers. We were debating a few moments ago the limited market which exists, with almost the power of conspiracy that the few purchasers have over the market, and I felt justified, on account of the peculiar facts pertaining to the matter, in voting for the amendment offered by the able Sen-ators from Kentucky. If I do not err, I think almost every Senator from the tobacco area voted the same way, certainly with no ill will, and, in my case, certainly with no indisposition toward the final passage of the bill itself.

I want to say to my distinguished colleague that I am proud to be a member of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, and it is my intention generally to support the bill. I do not intend to support the substitute. But the Senator must make it plain, in my humble judgment, what the bill does, and the strength and merit of it, and by his persuasion and by his argument convince his colleagues, rather than to attempt to intimidate them by his rebuke and stern reproval, which are so out of character with the genial and able Senator from Vermont. I am sure his offense will not be repeated.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. President, will the

Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield to the Senator from Kentucky. He has been on his feet for some time.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. President, I have the highest regard and respect for the distinguished Senator from Vermont [Mr. AIKEN], and I speak only out of respect for my friend and colleague the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY ].

I have stated repeatedly that I intended to support the pending bill. Before I offered the amendment for myself and my colleague, I notified the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and several of the members of that committee, of my intended action. Last night it was announced that the amendment would be the pending business today and that I would discuss its provisions at 11 o'clock, and ample notice and opportunity was given every Member to study its provisions.

Today, upon the commencement of debate I admitted, as my colleague from Kentucky later admitted, that the amendment did give special consideration to tobacco with respect to support price. In our arguments we presented the reasons which we believed justified its adoption and I can say that we presented the arguments against it. Every Member had an opportunity to make a decision upon the amendment. I can say for myself, and I know I would have the confirmation of other Senators on this side of the aisle, that I did not urge anyone of the majority to vote for the amendment, other than upon its merits. I am sure that those who voted for it did so upon the basis of their conviction as to its merits.

During the course of the debate I said that I would vote for the farm bill so ably advocated by the distinguished Senator from Vermont [Mr. AIKEN], and I intend to vote for it. I agree with my colleague from Kentucky that the amendment which we presented does not affect adversely the bill. It is fair in its terms, because it deals with a special problem. If the majority-and I speak to my own side-vote for the farm bill. it will be passed. We cannot shift the responsibility to the minority. If we want to vote for the farm bill, we will vote for it, and it will pass.

I simply make this statement out of respect and affection for my colleague and in justice to all of those who supported the amendment.

Mr. BARKLEY. I want to thank my colleague. I have said all I want to say except that I hope other Senators will not be frightened by the fear which the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AIKEN] has sought to inject into their hearts by the adoption of one amendment.

I yield the floor.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me before he yields the

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield to the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. AIKEN. I should like to state for the RECORD the changes in the parity of different types of tobacco which the present law provides and which the present bill would provide. It would increase the parity price of burley and flue-cured tobacco between 31/2 and 5 cents a pound. I leave that latitude because the figures I have are for March 15.

It would increase the parity price of Maryland type 32 tobacco approximately 19 cents a pound.

It would increase the parity price of Pennsylvania seed-leaf tobacco approximately 3.6 cents a pound.

It would increase the parity price of Connecticut wrapper tobacco from 98.9 cents a pound to $1.63 a pound, which is almost 60 or 70 percent.

The reason for the lesser change in the flue-cured and burley tobaccos is that some years ago the flue-cured and burley tobacco growers came to Congress and secured a different base period. In S. 2318 we offer a proposal to put tobacco parity prices in the order in which they should be, namely, a slight increase of approximately 10 percent for burley and flue-cured tobacco, an increase of approximately 40 percent for Maryland tobacco, and an increase of 60 to 70 percent for the northern Connecticut-type wrapper tobacco.

Mr. TYDINGS. Will the Senator from Kentucky yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield to the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. TYDINGS. If I may have the attention of the Senator from Vermont, is it correct or not that the Maryland tobacco farmers have not heretofore shared in any support program?

Mr. AIKEN. The Maryland tobacco farmers' support prices and parity prices have been completely out of line with burley and flue-cured.

Mr. TYDINGS. That was not my question.

Mr. AIKEN. I do not know whether they have ever shared in the support

Mr. TYDINGS. I think the Senator will find that the Maryland tobacco farmers have not come in under the support program, which has been in effect for a long time, and they are asking for it now only because it has become the settled policy of the country. The point is that they have "taken it on the chin" when times are bad and shared in the prosperity of the country when times were good. This is the first time they have ever been in the support program, so far as I know. I wish to bring out that, therefore, there could not be any decrease in their benefits, because heretofore they have not had any.

Mr. AIKEN. I would say that I think one reason why they have not shared in the support price is because of the inequitable parity price which they have

Mr. TYDINGS. No; they asked particularly, when this program was first initiated, to be excluded rather than included under it.

Mr. AIKEN. Then they probably will not be very happy now to get 10 or 12 cents a pound less support than they would under Senate bill 2318.

Mr. TYDINGS. This year, I understand, the price was so low that with the rest of the country receiving the benefits of support prices, they feel they must come in as a matter of self-defense.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendments submitted en bloc by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Saltonstall].

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. President, I appreciate that the distinguished Senator from Vermont has labored long and ably upon the pending bill. I appreciate that his desire has imbued him with such confidence in the bill, including all its provisions, that he very probably is acting under his own convictions when he insists upon the Senate passing his bill without dotting any "i's" or crossing any "t's," but I say respectfully to the Senator from Vermont, if he will be kind enough to give attention to what I am saying now, that in my humble judg-ment he far transcends the bounds of ethics and of proper conduct on the floor of the Senate when he questions the sincerity of conviction and the reliance upon their conscientious convictions of Senators who happen to differ with him and with his judgment'upon one phase of the bill.

It so happens, Mr. President, that I am strongly in support of the bill in general. I so advised the distinguished Senator from Vermont only this morning. That did not indicate by any means that I did surrender or that I should surrender my convictions upon every aspect of the bill, and upon each and every amendment which might be proposed to it.

I wish to say briefly to the Senator from Vermont that I have no feeling because of his accusations, because I suspect he has been led astray by his zeal. I join in the expressions given by my able colleague to the effect that the statements by the Senator from Vermont are entirely out of character. I have never heard him heretofore question the good faith or the soundness of conscience of any of his colleagues.

Be that as it may, let me say that in my judgment this bill itself makes distinctions between various branches of agriculture which existed in the judgment of the committee or a majority of the committee, and which I think are justified. For instance, it makes distinction between basic commodities and nonbasic commodities, and it proceeds to accord different treatment to them. Likewise it makes distinctions between certain other commodities and the wool which was mentioned a few minutes ago by the distinguished Senator from Vermont. It makes distinctions between other nonbasic commodities and a certain agricultural commodity, potatoes, covered by an amendment which has been accepted by the committee.

If there are Senators present who, because of their experience, feel that there is yet another distinction which should be made, and stand up here to be counted in order that that distinction may be made in the bill, it is the humble opinion of the junior Senator from Florida that they should not be questioned for the soundness of their conviction merely because they state it and support it by their votes upon the floor of the Senate.

I join my able colleague in saying that, so far as he and I are concerned, we are quite willing to make our report and to render our account to our own constituents whom we represent. But let me say that while we are making our report and rendering our account to that large number of our constituents who happen to be producers of citrus fruit, I think we will be able to say to that considerable number of our people who produce tobacco that we have stood up for them, and for what we regard as their rights, and for equitable treatment for them, just as we have stood up for the larger group who happen to represent the great and growing citrus industry in the State of Florida.

So far as the junior Senator from Florida is concerned, he was born under an orange tree, he has always represented the citrus fruit producers of his State, he represented them in the city of Washington on citrus matters before he became chief executive of his State, the citrus industry has been his first love and major love in agriculture, and he has been very happy to note the treatment accorded to growers of citrus fruit in this bill. He is supporting the bill, and is supporting the treatment which is accorded them under the provisions of the bill.

Notwithstanding that is the fact, he feels that he also owes a duty to those in his State, and to the people elsewhere in the United States, who produce another agricultural commodity, namely, tobacco, and when in his experience and in his judgment he feels they are entitled to the treatment which is proposed by an amendment, he has the right to support that amendment without having his judgment questioned and the sincerity of his convictions assailed by another Senator who knows far less about the tobacco industry than do the Senators from the States where tobacco is produced.

Insofar as the junior Senator from Florida is concerned, let me say to the Senator from Vermont that but a few months ago, in common with other Senators from the tobacco belt, I learned of a distressing incident, showing the strangle-hold which a relatively small number of buyers, representing the processors of tobacco, have upon the growers who produce tobacco. In a little town in our State, Jasper, in Hamilton County, there was organized a new market, with the approval of the United States Department of Agriculture, which had placed in that market graders to serve it. It was understood that there would be an adequate number of buyers there, but the buyers chose not to be there, and after a few days' operation, as my distinguished colleague will recall, we were advised that, not because that county had not produced a large volume of tobacco, much more than enough to support a market, not because the United State Department of Agriculture had not sent its graders there, because it had, but merely because the tobacco companies of the United States and elsewhere who have buyers at the markets saw fit, in their sole judgment, not to allow their buyers to come there, that market was closed, and the growers of that community were put to great expense, and a near disaster was visited upon them.

Mr. President, so far as I am concerned, I wish to speak with complete approval of the position taken by both of the distinguished Senators from Kentucky in differentiating the tobacco industry from any other agricultural industry of which I know. Not only is the reference to the buyer situation, which was so ably portrayed by both the distinguished Kentucky Senators, accurate, but their statement on the question of the nonfluctuating volume of tobacco produced is likewise accurate. Under the law now in effect the acreage which is planted to tobacco is controlled under a quota system which has been approved by the growers by an overwhelming percentage, and under which no grower who fails to keep within his quota under his allotment of acreage can have his tobacco supported by the price support system set up by the United States Government. There is not any large fluctuation, therefore, in the amount produced.

I fully and entirely agree with the conclusions stated by the junior and the senior Senators from Kentucky that that situation, bringing about as it does a more or less level production of tobacco, has to be differentiated very greatly from that of other agricultural industries.

Let us take the case of the citrus industry, in which the distinguished senior Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER] and myself are particularly interested. and which I think is equally a cause for concern to the Senators from Texas, from Arizona, from California, and perhaps from other States. Let me remind the distinguished Senator from Vermont that when we are talking about citrus we are talking about a crop which is produced on trees that were planted before the Senator was born, before any of us here in this body were born, because there are citrus trees in the Mediterranean area, for instance, now yielding fruit, which are over 500 years old. There are citrus trees in a grove belonging to my family, planted by my father with his own hands in 1881, and they are yielding more now than they have ever yielded at any time since they were planted. It is simply idle to talk about comparing production of trees like that, and on unlimited acreage, with production in an industry where the annual acreage quota is parceled out, man to man and farm to farm, in all the producing areas.

I am going to close in a moment. I want to say to the Senator from Vermont that I resent with all my being his charge that Senators who do not happen to agree with him are not following the convictions of their own consciences. So far as the junior Senator from Florida is concerned, if he had not taken this position, if he had not voted for what he thought was equity for his tobacco producers, he could not have followed the Senator from Vermont in his support of the bill as against the substitute measure, the House measure, which I understand is to be presented by the distinguished junior Senator from Georgia IMr. RUSSELL | because in the judgment of the junior Senator from Florida it is so manifestly clear that unless there is a firm price-support system, not a fluctuating one, in the tobacco field, the tobacco growers are the ones who are going to suffer, and suffer badly. I, for one, without questioning the judgment of the Senator from Vermont and all who agree with him, merely want to say that I do not believe they have sufficiently considered the differences between the tobacco industry and these other great agricultural industries which are covered and protected by the bill.

So far as I am concerned, I would vote for the substitute measure, much as I want this bill and strongly as I will support it, rather than to see a relatively small but important group, so far as our State is concerned, mistreated and placed in such a situation that they can be hurt from year to year and at any time by the machinations of a group of buyers not constituting more in number than the fingers of my two hands.

So, Mr. President, I hope the distinguished Senator from Vermont will realize that he has been led too far by his zeal, and will offer apology, as he should, to those whose judgment happens to differ from his, and who have stood up for what they thought was right, and who should not be questioned as to the soundness or sincerity of their convictions by the Senator from Vermont or by anyone else on the floor of the Senate.

Mr. YOUNG. Mr. President— Mr. SALTONSTALL. I yield to the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. YOUNG. I want to say just a word in support of the position taken by the Senator from Vermont, that special amendments like the one just adopted will kill the bill. The whole theory of the long-range farm bill is to get back to a stable peacetime support program, and away from the Steagall Act which provided for wartime supports to encourage great production in the long-range bill.

In the case of corn the support levels are reduced from $1.60 to $1.42 a bushel. In the case of wheat the support levels are reduced from $2.21 to $1.32 a bushel, a drop of 39 cents a bushel. I have accepted this lowered support on the theory that a farmer would much rather have a permanent support on a fair level rather than high levels for 1 year and probably in the end have no supports at all.

Whenever a crop such as tobacco is singled out for special support higher than other commodities in peacetime, and then lower the supports of all other products of the great Middle West, then I for one will have to vote against this bill and in favor of the House bill if amended. I will not vote to provide special legislation for one agricultural commodity as against all the others.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, will the Senator vield?

Mr. SALTONSTALL. I yield.

Mr. AIKEN. I should like to say in regard to the remarks of the junior Senator from Florida [Mr. HOLLAND], that the Senator from Vermont at no time intended to question the motives of any Senator across the aisle, nor does he question the right of any Senator on either side of the aisle to vote as he thinks he ought to on any question. I was simply making a statement of fact; that is, that the vote to give special legislation to one agricultural commodity in the proposed agricultural program is a vote to start tearing down the entire program itself.

I also wanted to point out to the producers of every State what the effect would be of doing away with Senate bill 2318 and the provisions it contains. I wanted to point out to the citrus growers of Florida that, if that bill is killed and they have to operate only under the stopgap bill, they are going to get only the support they have received this year, which has been totally inadequate, and they will not be able to take advantage of the greatly increased support which Senate bill 2318 would have given to the citrus and the apple growers.

I desire to make one more statement of a fact of which I assume the Senator from Florida was not aware when he voted. If S. 2318 is defeated as a result of the adoption of this amendment, then the level of support to the tobacco growers of Florida and every other State will be lower than it would be under S. 2318. I have already pointed out that Senate bill 2318 provides an increase in the parity price of all types of tobacco, varying from about 10 percent in the case of burley and flue-cured tobacco, up to something like 60 percent in the case of Connecticut seed-leaf tobacco.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. AIKEN. I was very sorry to see the political aspects of this vote, only three Members on the Democratic side voting to sustain the committee's position on the long-range program, and only three or four on the Republican side voting against it. We have tried our best to keep this long-range agricultural program out of politics, and we have been successful up to now. The Senator from Illinois [Mr. Lucas], who is now on his feet, will agree that at no time has politics entered into the writing of the bill. It is unfortunate that it should creep in at this time. But if it must be a political issue, thank God I am on the right side of it. If the Democrats want to kill the long-range agricultural program, I do not know any reason why any farmer should vote the Democratic ticket this fall. I noticed the senior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY] voting for this amendment, which, if carried further, can only spell disaster to the wool growers of his State. I noticed the junior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. ROBERTSON] voting against the amendment and for his sheep growers.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHERRY and Mr. LUCAS addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Vermont yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. AIKEN. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I am intensely interested in this bill, as the Senator well knows. I am certainly interested in building a long-range agricultural program which will be acceptable to the farmers and the voters of the country.

I should like to know from the Senator what the impact of the amendment which has been adopted will be in relation to the farmers of my section so far as concerns partity prices on corn, wheat, or any other product which is raised. What will be the impact of the amendment upon those commodities?

Mr. AIKEN. When special advantages are given to one commodity, they must necessarily be taken from some other. The wheat growers and corn growers of the Senator's State never have protested in the least against this bill. which reduces the parity prices of their products.

If there is any commodity to which the bill gives special advantages, it is tobacco. I have explained the reason why. The tobacco grower is at the mercy of foreign government monopolies, which can break his prices unless we fix a floor below which they cannot go. So in the bill we have given what amounts to 90 percent parity to the tobacco growers of the country for an indefinite time. That means 90 percent of parity figured according to the present parity formula, or as good support as they are getting now. By the terms of the bill we would give much better support to Maryland tobacco and to the cigar-type tobacco than they now receive.

Mr. WHERRY. If the amendment-remains in the bill, a special parity will be granted to tobacco which does not proportionately go to the producers of any other commodities, such as corn and wheat.

Mr. AIKEN. That is correct. Special additional advantages are given to the one commodity which had the greatest advantage given any commodity in Senate bill 2318.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. AIKEN. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. If the amendment which my colleague and I offered, and which the Senate adopted, reduces the parity price for tobacco below what is carried in the bill, how could that possibly affect any other commodity in the United States agricultural picture?

Mr. AIKEN. This is only a start. Mr. BARKLEY. No, it is not a start. Mr. AIKEN. I am not unaware of the purposes which exists in the breasts of some in this country to destroy the longrange farm bill. It can be done by one means or another.
Mr. BARKLEY. Is the Senator accusing me of trying to do that?

Mr. AIKEN. I am not; but the surest way to destroy any program is to start giving special privileges to this commodity, that commodity, and the other commodity simply because there are votes enough to do it.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, that statement is totally unfair.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I demand the regular order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont has the floor. Does he yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, we are on the regular order. The unfinished business is the agricultural bill. The Senator from Vermont has the floor, and he can yield to whomever he pleases, for any question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is protecting the right of the Senator who has the floor.

Mr. AIKEN. I yield to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. LUCAS. The only reason I demanded the regular order was that I wanted to determine to whom the Senator from Vermont would yield.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Chair will state that the regular order is Senate bill 2318, the long-range farm program bill.

Mr. LUCAS. I am sorry if I disturbed my good friend from Nebraska.

Mr. President, I wish to make one ob-servation which I think is pertinent to the colloquy which is in progress. I believe that anyone who understands the bill must agree with the proposition that in the event the bill should be passed as is, with the amendment which was offered by the able Senators from Kentucky, tobacco would receive preferential treatment. Anyone who does not agree with that simply does not understand the bill. There can be no question about it. I am assuming, of course, that no other commodities will come in for preferential treatment, and that the same mandatory 90-percent parity will not be demanded for other commodities.

Mr. President, while I am on my feet. let me pay a tribute to the minority leader [Mr. Barkley]. He has done a great job in behalf of the tobacco amendment. I seriously doubt that my good friend from Kentucky realizes what has been done by the adoption of this amendment. I say that with the utmost

It so happens that the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. Thomas], the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. ELLENDER], and the Senator from Illinois were members of the subcommittee which helped to write the bill. We went all over the country and held hearings. We tried to keep the issue as nonpartisan as possible, and we succeeded. Yet, strange as it may seem.

we were the only three members on this side who voted against the amendment.

I did so knowing that once we permit one commodity to have preferential treatment under the bill, as has been done in the case of tobacco, then there is no reason why I should not offer an amendment to give the corn producers of my State the same kind of treatment. There is no reason why the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. Young] should not offer an amendment to do the same for the wheat producers of his State. So we shall go down the line of basic and nonbasic commodities, and give them all preferential treatment.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will

the Senator yield?

Mr. AIKEN. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. What was it that happened yesterday with respect to potatoes? Something was done in regard to potatoes, putting them in a special classification. Some preference, priority, or favor was granted in the case of potatoes. I do not know just what it was, but it seems to have affected the situation so far as the author of the substitute is concerned.

Mr. LUCAS. The Senator from Vermont can explain what happened to potatoes, if anything. I was not in the Chamber at the time.

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not know whether it happened on the floor or not.

Mr. LUCAS. I am speaking now about a basic commodity which has been under the Agricultural Adjustment Act from the very beginning, namely, tobacco. The corn producers and the wheat producers have taken a terrific lacing in this bill, so far as the reduction of parity is concerned. However, I believe that the farmers in my section have vision enough to look far down the road on this agricultural program. They are attempting to get a stable program. We know that prices cannot continue high forever. What we shall do, if we are not careful, is to fool around and get no program at -not even a continuation of the support prices they have had. That is what some folks want. I do not refer to the Senator from Kentucky, but there are some who want to kill the farm program and go back to 1938, or even farther back than that, if they can. I undertake to say that this attempt on the part of the Senator from Vermont and others who worked for months on the farm bill with the Department of Agriculture and with all segments of agriculture and other interested groups in this country represents a pretty good approach to a longrange farm program.
Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will

the Senator yield?

Mr. AIKEN. I yield. Mr. BARKLEY. I appreciate the hard work and the sincere effort devoted to the solution of this problem by the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. LUCAS. I am sure the Senator does

Mr. BARKLEY. I have great respect for that committee, and I have been sympathetic with it. The tobacco grower has occupied a special situation in the Agricultural Adjustment Act all along,

Mr. LUCAS. Not on the question of parity.

Mr. BARKLEY. He was given a dif-ferent base period, because of the conditions which exist in the tobacco industry.

Mr. LUCAS. He was entitled to that. Mr. BARKLEY. When the bill was originally introduced, it was utterly impossible for tobacco to live on an equitable basis under it. The tobacco growers from all over the country came to Washington and went before the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and asked for five changes in the provisions of the bill as originally introduced by the Senator from Vermont. Three of those changes were made. Two of of those changes were made. the changes were not made. Now because my colleague and I have submitted an amendment asking for a fourth change, which was requested by the tobacco growers, are we to be castigated and accused of not knowing what we are doing, simply because we have asked for what the tobacco growers have asked for? They know more about what they need than anyone else does. Because we in the Senate vote to adopt as a part of the bill what the tobacco growers ask for, I do not think we should be held up to contumely and ridicule for doing what they ask for. We are trying to represent them in a fair way.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I am not castigating the Senator from Kentucky, and I do not expect to do so. I complimented him.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator said I did not know what I was doing.

Mr. LUCAS. No, I said the Senator did not know what he was doing if he contends that tobacco has no preferential treatment, providing the bill is adopted as is, with the amendment.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, would seem that the Senator from Illinois and the Senator from Vermont do not agree. The Senator from Illinois says we have given tobacco special treat-ment by this amendment. The Senator from Vermont says that we have injured tobacco by the amendment.

Mr. LUCAS. Let me repeat that it is impossible to take a basic commodity such as tobacco and make it mandatory that it shall receive 90 percent of parity, regardless of how much is produced, and then say that corn and wheat shall receive from 60 percent to 90 percent of parity, depending on the amounts that are produced.

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course, the Senator does not contend that the parity price of tobacco will have the slightest effect on corn or wheat.

Mr. LUCAS. No; but that is not the point. The Senator does not want to reach the point, it seems.

Mr. BARKLEY. Does the Senator from Illinois mean that after we adopt the tobacco amendment, we have to adopt amendments for corn and wheat?

Mr. LUCAS. Certainly.

Mr. BARKLEY. That does not follow. Mr. LUCAS. That is exactly what will follow. Now that tobacco is to have 90 percent of parity, it will be only fair to provide 90 percent of parity for corn and wheat, which is exactly what is provided under the Steagall amendment. Under it there is provision for practically 90 percent of parity for all basic commodities-and now that must be done under this bill, once the tobacco amendment has been adopted, if Senators wish to be But if we make such a provision in this bill for all basic commodities, then we go back to the arrangement to which the Senator does not want to go.

I do not want to destroy the long-range farm program, but under the circumstances that will be done.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, think it is perhaps a waste of time to talk further about what we have done, but it seems that other Senators are not willing to drop the subject. So I say that all we are doing is what has been done all along with respect to tobacco. because tobacco occupies a special situation which is not recognized in this bill without the amendment.

Mr. LUCAS. In the bill we recognize tobacco as being a commodity which needs special treatment. As the Sena-tor has ably pointed out, tobacco gets a better deal under this bill. But I do not seem to be able to make myself under-

I am saying that when one commodity is set aside and treated specially, and when the producers of that commodity are told, "We will give you 90 percent of parity, and we will guarantee it to you," but when the wheat growers and corn growers and the producers of other basic commodities and the producers of nonbasic commodities are told that they will not get that much, but will get a lower support price, depending on the amount of the commodity produced and the amount of the carry-over, then it is obvious that equal treatment is not provided. Certainly I cannot see that it is. If it is, then my name is not Scott Lucas.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, I wish to say with respect to the amendment just adopted that the amendment guarantees the tobacco grower 90 percent forever or for as long as the amendment remains on the statute books. Senate bill 2318 guarantees tobacco, in a sense, preferential treatment which would amount to a slightly higher support level for the next 2 or 3 years than the support level which will be available to tobacco growers under the present support-price program. However, there is no knowledge but what that might drop in future years. The Senator from Kentucky wants tobacco to be guaranteed 90 percent of parity forever. Certainly that is unfair to the producers of other commodities.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. AIKEN. I yield.

Mr. BREWSTER. I should like to have the Senator from Kentucky realize-inasmuch as I think he said he was not familiar with the potato amendment-that what the potato producers asked for was to be put in the 60-to-90percent-of-parity class. So there was no discrimination at all in their favor. They are to have only the same provision that the producers of wheat, corn, and so forth will have.

Mr. BARKLEY. What was the status of the potato growers until that provision was adopted?

Mr. BREWSTER. They had been outside the provision allowing from 60 percent to 90 percent of parity; they had been under the Steagall amendment provision.

Mr. BARKLEY. I suppose they wished to get 90 percent of parity.

Mr. BREWSTER. The potato producers had it all the time, under the Steagall amendment.

Mr. BARKLEY. But that was to expire, I believe.

Mr. BREWSTER. Yes, on December

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, I think I have no more to say, except to stand by what I have said: namely, that the amendment just adopted is harmful, and may mean the destruction of the longrange farm program. If the program is destroyed, those responsible for de-stroying it should be held accountable for their actions.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the two amendments submitted by the Senator from Massachusetts, which are to be considered en bloc.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, the distinguished and affable Senator from Vermont has twice honored me this afternoon with a reference to me in the castigation he has delivered against those who did not agree with him upon the last amendment. I hope he will not be angry with me throughout the day. I hope his sentiments will not last out the day, if indeed they last through the day.

It seems to me that the debate we have listened to since the vote on the motion to lay on the table was taken is a demonstration of the correctness of the rules of procedure in the Senate. I should like to read to the Senator from Vermont the rule which I think he has slightly, at least, violated today.

Mr. President, the Senator from Vermont spoke with such virility and in such a tone of voice that all of us listened to him. I know that I am not in the passion he was in, but I hope he will accord me the courtesy of listening to me now.

I was pointing out to the Senator from Vermont that when he delivered his rebuke to the Members of this body who voted to lay on the table the motion to reconsider the vote by which the tobacco amendment was adopted, he was speaking in such a timbre of voice that everyone here listened to him, and I hope he will listen to me for just a moment while I say to him that I believe the debate which has taken place here illustrates the sound judgment of those who wrote the rules of debate under which the Senate is supposed to proceed. I doubt very much whether the Senator from Vermont had this rule in mind when he accused those of us who voted with the Senators from Kentucky of voting against our consciences.

This is the rule of debate, and is a part of rule XIX:

No Senator in debate shall, directly or indirectly, by any form of words impute to another Senator or to other Senators any conduct or motive unworthy or unbecoming

I suggest to the Senator from Vermont that when he said, as he did upon this floor a few moments ago, that those of us who voted in support of the motion of the Senators from Kentucky were voting against our consciences and for purely political motives, he was violating that rule. I forgive the Senator that violation.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I yield.

Mr. AIKEN. I ask the Senator, just when did the Senator from Vermont say the Senator from Wyoming was voting against his conscience?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The Senator in his statement-and the RECORD would show it I am sure-was speaking in such fashion that he probably does not remember his words now.

Mr. AIKEN. Does the Senator from Wyoming remember them?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The Senator designates those who voted this way as having voted from mere political motives and against convictions.

Mr. AIKEN. I do not

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The Senator from Vermont accused the senior Senator from Wyoming twice of having voted against the wool growers of Wyoming.

Mr. AIKEN. I think he voted against their interests.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The Senator is entitled to that opinion, but the RECORD shows the vote that was cast was a vote on a tobacco amendment. That can be a vote against the wool growers or against the growers of any other commodity, only if the Senator from Vermont intends to attempt to punish Senators who did not agree with him.

Mr. AIKEN. Does the Senator from Wyoming contend that when all but three Democrats vote on one side of a question and all but three Republicans vote on the other side, the question is wholly nonpolitical?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I may say to the Senator I can never judge what the political motives of Senators may be on a divided vote.

Mr. AIKEN. The Senator is very

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The Senator is very generous. I am merely expressing the hope the Senator's anger will not last out the day. I am pointing out to him that in all legislation, a vote in favor of one agricultural commodity is not a vote against another, unless the Senator in charge of the bill feels so deeply about it that he will attempt to punish the growers of another commodity because of the vote the Senate has cast, evidently not in the manner he desired.

Mr. AIKEN. I do not know what the Senator from Wyoming means by punishment, but if the bill is defeated by a vote of all but three of the Democrats. the Senator from Vermont will do everything within his power to defeat the election of a Democratic administration If that is punishment, the Senator will have to make the most of it.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, does not the Senator from Vermont intend to do that, anyway?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I may say to the Senator from Vermont my belief is, regardless of what may be the decision of the Congress upon the pending bill, and regardless of the vote of any Democratic Member of this body upon the bill, the Senator from Vermont will be supporting the Republican ticket. I certainly do not cast my vote here upon the bill or upon any amendment to it in the hope of inducing the Senator from Vermont to support the Democratic ticket.

Mr. AIKEN. Of course the non-political attitude of the Senator from Wyoming is well known. I am sure nobody in the country would accuse him of being politically minded. I certainly do not accuse him of casting his vote from political motives. I am sure he voted according to the dictates of his conscience, just as did the Senator from Illinois, the Senator from Oklahoma, and the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I thank the Sen-

Mr. AIKEN. There must be consciences enough to go around on the other side of the aisle. [Laughter.]

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I am very glad the Senator has finally made that acknowledgment. As I say, I hope he will not continue to hold his resentment against us to such an extent that he will vote against another commodity should an amendment be offered by one of those who did not vote with him.

Of course, I have no reason for giving any explanation whatever for any vote I may cast here to any other Member of the body. I am content to make my explanations of my votes to my own constituents. But I may say to the Senator from Vermont, that on numerous occasions he has indicated his belief in certain economic principles in which I also believe. The Senator has indicated on numerous occasions that he is an opponent of monopolies and restraints of trade and the great concentration of economic power which has made it necessary for us to have farm legislation. The Senator from Vermont knows very well that the industrial powers of this country have, on occasion after occasion, in year after year, denied to the agricultural group the equal break to which they are entitled. I am ready to compliment the Senator from Vermont here or anywhere and every day for the great fight he is making on behalf of agriculture, but I am sure he knows, as I know, there is probably no agricultural commodity produced in the United States which is more the victim of monopolistic control than is tobacco. I may add my explanation to the Senator, though I need not make it, that I voted with the Senator from Kentucky because I believed the tobacco processors have a stranglehold upon that agricultural product.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I yield.

Mr. AIKEN. Does the Senator believe the tobacco processors can keep a stranglehold upon the tobacco growers under the provisions of Senate bill 2318? Does he believe the bill treats the tobacco growers unfairly?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Oh, not at all; I did not say so.

Mr. AIKEN. But the Senator voted against its provision.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The Senator is quarreling with us because some of us voted against what he is pleased to call special treatment for tobacco. I justify my vote to the Senator and to anybody else who may be interested, upon the ground that I believe the situation is such that the tobacco growers are entitled to the consideration given in the amendment.

Mr. McFARLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I yield.

Mr. McFARLAND. I should merely like to make this comment: The Senator from Arizona does not come from a tobacco-growing State, nor does the junior Senator from Arizona use tobacco. Therefore, the junior Senator from Arizona was not trying to get a smoke out of the vote. But I may say that the votes of some of us have created more smoke than I have seen created by tobacco for a long time.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I am content to say that the process of legislation is always a process of give and take, and eventually of compromise. Nobody ever gets what he would like to get, particularly upon a difficult and detailed bill, such as the one under consideration, which has been reported by the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. I want to make it clear to the acting chairman of the committee and to all the members of the committee who have participated in the work upon the pending measure that I am appreciative of the labors they have performed. I hope their work will be crowned with success. I shall vote to support the bill, but I hope that the members of the committee will not adopt a defeatist attitude and act as though the adoption of a single amendment by a majority vote of the Senate will result in killing the legislation. It need not kill it. One vote upon one amendment will not decide the fate of this measure.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendments submitted by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Saltonstall], which are being considered en bloc.

The amendments were agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is open to further amendment.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, let us now test the issue. I offer the following amendment:

On page 81, line 8, I propose to insert, after the word "pounds" and before the period the words "of shorn wool."

That is a simple amendment intended to make it clear, which I think it was intended to be, that the 360,000,000 pounds of wool referred to in subparagraph (c) of section 302 is shorn wool. Wool is a commodity the production of which in the United States historically has been far less than the consumption. In only one year in the entire recent history of this industry has the United States produced more wool than it has consumed. That was in the depth of the depression.

The average percentage of domestic production of the amount consumed in the United States is less than 50 percent. In recent years the production of wool has been steadily declining, but the basis for wool was established in a year when the price of wool was the lowest in its history, and the result has been that, although the average price of all agricultural commodities has increased 146.9 percent, the price of wool has increased only 12.1 percent.

There are two types of wool—shorn wool and pulled wool. Pulled wool is only a comparatively small part of the total.

The average production of wool has been approximately 400,000,000 pounds. In 1932 it was 442,000,000 pounds. In 1933 it was 438,000,000 pounds. In 1936 it was 419,000,000 pounds. In 1940 it went up to 434,000,000 pounds. It fell off in 1947 to 310,000,000 pounds.

So that, as a matter of making an adjustment to fit the facts, I am urging this amendment so it will be made sure that the purpose of the bill is to support the price of wool at not in excess of 90 percent nor less than 60 percent of its parity price of January 1, so as to maintain an annual production of approximately 360,000,000 pounds of shorn wool, which is less than 33½ percent of the entire consumption of wool in the United States.

Mr. ROBERTSON of Wyoming. Mr. President, may I add to the words of my colleague and point out what I think is very important, that while the production of wool in the United States has decreased, the consumption has increased to a very great extent. At the time the production of wool in the United States was 450,000,000 pounds, which was referred to by my colleague, consumption was approximately 600,000,000 pounds, making it necessary to import approximately 150,000,000 pounds. During the war the consumption of wool increased to more than 1,000,000,000 pounds. While it was anticipated that that increase would drop with the end of hostilities, that has not proved to be the case. As a matter of fact, the consumption of wool today in the United States is approximately 1,000,000,000 pounds, and production is probably not more than 300,000,000 pounds. Anticipating the importation of approximately 700,000,000 pounds of wool each year, it is very necessary that the domestic wool grower should be given every possible encouragement on a long-term basis to bring the production up at least to what it was some years ago, when it reached the figure of 450,000,000 pounds.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, will my colleague yield?

Mr. ROBERTSON of Wyoming. : yield.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I have a table which shows the production of wool on a grease basis, the consumption, and the percentage that the domestic production is of the total consumption for the years 1918 to 1947. This table bears out what the Senator has just stated, that consumption has been increasing in the United States. For example, in 1934 the consumption in the United States was 381,400,000 pounds. That was the only year in the whole period when production exceeded consumption, which was in the depression period. Since that time consumption has been gradually rising, until in 1941, for the first time, it exceeded 1,000,000,- 000 pounds. The record in 1941, 1942, 1943, 1944, 1945, and 1946 has been well over 1,000,000,000 pounds.

I ask unanimous consent that the table may be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the table was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, I should like to say in regard to wool and the amendment which has been offered, that the committee considered that the wool situation, not only in the United States, but in the entire world, is approaching the crisis stage. There is an acute and growing shortage. Production in the United States has been constantly dropping, until last year it dropped to approximately 308,000,000 pounds of both pulled and shorn wool. The indications are—and the Senators from Wyoming will correct me if I am wrong-that it will drop below that figure this year. The committee felt that encouragement should be given to the wool industry, in the interests of national security. only did the growers advocate it, but representatives of the wool trade appeared this year with the growers and advocated a substantial support level for the price of wool. The committee felt. in choosing 360,000,000 pounds as the amount which should be produced in this country, we were taking a 10-year average production, and it appears to the committee that it will take several years to reach that total production.

In the bill the Secretary is instructed to support the price of wool at such level as will encourage production of 360,-000,000 pounds. Inasmuch as the production at present is only 300,000,000 pounds, it would appear necessary to guarantee a 90-percent support price in order to approach that amount of wool production, even over a period of several years. We felt we were generous. If we had felt that 400,000,000 pounds should be the goal, we would have put it in, but we realized that the question of production exceeding 300,000,00 pounds would not arise for many years.

In regard to the stopgap bill which has been passed by the House, so far as I can see, it affords no lasting protection to the wool grower. It extends the present support price of 42.6 cents a pound until June 30, 1950. Senate bill 2318 would result in a support level of something over 46 cents a pound, which would probably increase about 2 cents for next

What I wish to point out is that the House extends the present support level on wool until June 30, 1950. That means that the support level on wool is extended for 2 years for Texas, Arizona, and Oklahoma wool, because the growers in those States can get the wool to the market by June 30, but the wool produced up in the mountains of Wyoming, Montana, and Idaho, would get support for only 1 year, and that would undoubtedly be a year of high prices, when they will not need it, because they cannot get the sheep shorn and the wool to market by the last of June. So, so far as the House bill goes, it is utterly worthless to the wool growers, in my opinion. Per-haps I should not say "utterly worthless," it might conceivably be of benefit to the southern wool growers in the year 1950.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Vermont yield?

Mr. AIKEN. I yield.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I merely wish to say that I quite agree that the bill which is now before the Senate is far superior to the mere continuing measure passed by the House, and I certainly hope that it is the bill which will prevail. I believe what the Senator has said is true of the wool growers not only, but of the producers of all agricultural commodities affected by the bill.

Mr. AIKEN. The Senator from Wyom-

Mr. AIKEN. The Senator from Wyoming evidently understands the difference between the two bills very well, and realizes that one gives long-time protection to the wool grower and a long-time support level, and that the other gives practically nothing at all.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The other would operate just as a stopgap bill.

Mr. ROBERTSON of Wyoming. Mr. President, will the Senator from Vermont yield?

Mr. AIKEN. I yield to the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. ROBERTSON of Wyoming. I should like to say, in connection with the subject under discussion, namely, the great necessity of a long-range program, that the cause of the reduction in the production of wool over the years from 450,000,000 pounds to less than 300,000,000 this year is that the sheep which grow the wool have been reduced in number from some 51,000,000 to probably around 30,000,000, and it is necessary to have a long-range program to encourage the sheepman, the wool grower, to increase his flocks up to 50,000,000 again in order to get the full production of wool in this country, and in doing so to enable the proper use to be made of the range in the western part of the country for the grazing of sheep.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I suggest the absense of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Kem in the chair). Eighty-eight Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY] to the committee amendment,

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, I should like to say in regard to the amendment offered by the Senator from Wyoming that the amendment will make no difference in the support price of wool. It simply sets a little higher objective as the ultimate production. which would amount to probably 40,000,000 pounds a year more. Personally I do not find the amendment objectionable. I have no I have no right to speak for the committee, because it has not voted on the amendment, but, so far as I am concerned, it is not an objectionable amendment, and will not result in any increase, or change in fact, in the support level of the price of wool.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY] to the committee amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

AMENDMENT OF THE CIVIL AERONAUTICS ACT OF 1938

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair lays before the Senate a bill coming over from the House of Representatives which will be stated.

The bill (H. R. 4435) to amend the Civil Aeronautics Act of 1938, as amended, by redefining certain powers of the administrator, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the immediate consideration of the bill. A similar bill is on the Senate Calendar, Order No. 1508, Senate bill 2466, Objection was made to the Senate bill when it was reached on the calendar by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY]. The Senator's objection has been met by the preparation of two amendments which I propose to offer to the House bill. In the interest of expedition of the matter I hope the Senate will pass the House bill with the amendments, and that it may go to conference immediately. I ask for immediate consideration of the House bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 4435) to amend the Civil Aeronautics Act of 1938, as amended, by redefining certain powers of the Administrator, and for other purposes.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, would the Senator from Maine explain what the bill provides?

Mr. BREWSTER. The bill provides for the acquisition of rights in order to permit our airports to function more efficiently. It is a routine bill. It was reported unanimously by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. The Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCarran] objected to certain words in the bill, and he and the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. Barkley] have agreed on the language of the amendments which I now offer to the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the first amendment offered by the Senator from Maine.

The Legislative Clerk. On page 3, line 4, after the word "airspace", it is proposed to insert "immediately adjacent thereto and needed in connection therewith."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the next amendment offered by the Senator from Maine.

The CHER CLERK. On page 3, line 11, after the word "Congress" and before the period, it is proposed to insert a colon and the following: "Provided, That in the case of condemnations of easements through or other interests in airspace, in fixing condemnation awards, consideration may be given to the reasonable probable future use of the underlying land."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment of the amendments and the third reading of the bill.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill (H. R. 4435) was read the third time and passed.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. President, I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments, request a conference with the House thereon, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. Brew-STER, Mr. HAWKES, and Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado conferees on the part of the

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. President, I ask that Senate bill 2466 be indefinitely postponed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

THE NATIONAL HEART INSTITUTE

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. President, one of the good things this Congress has done was to pass the bill creating a National Heart Institute. Congress thereby joined with the millions of Americans who are insisting that an effective attack be launched on heart disease-America's No. 1 killer.

But, Mr. President, the Congress has not yet appropriated the funds needed if the Heart Institute is to become a reality. Unless we do so before adjourning we will be guilty of inadvertently perpetrating a fraud on the public. The people know we have passed the heart bill. They think it means something. Let us be sure, before we adjourn, that it does mean something.

I am confident that my colleagues, the members of the Appropriations Committee, fully intend to take the necessary action to make available such funds as the National Heart Institute can use effectively. I am mentioning the matter merely to preclude any possibility of its being overlooked by reason of the great pressure of work now confronting us and the baste at which we are moving.

In this connection, I ask unanimous consent to include in the record at the conclusion of my remarks an excellent and pertinent editorial from the New York Times of June 16. And in this connection too I want to inform the Members of the Senate of the results of a just-completed Gallup poll on this subject. I am informed that 80 percent of the American people have indicated that they are willing to pay increased taxes if that is necessary to finance an appropriation of $100,000,000 to fight heart disease. I am sure that the Institute will need but a tenth of that amount. And I am sure that we will want to appropriate it. Let us make sure we do not forget.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MONEY FOR HEART ILLS

Both Houses of Congress have passed a bill which would establish a National Heart Institute to combat diseases of the heart and circulatory system through research, the training of physicians, and other means. Even if the President signs the measure, which harmonizes with his views on social security, we have no more than a declara-tion of good intentions in the absence of a specific appropriation. Fifteen million dollars is needed at once to do for heart diseases what is now being done for infantile paralysis and cancer. If Congress pro-vides the money before it adjourns 9,000,000 who know that they have heart trouble will soon receive better medical care and the lives of 600,000 graver cases will be extended.

Because they account for most deaths, diseases of the heart should long ago have been more systematically studied than they are. Our negligence must be attributed chiefly to lack of funds. This year the United States Public Health Service can spend less than $1,000,000 on diseases of the heart and the circulatory system, unless Congress comes to the rescue. The Biblical accusation that the life of a sheep is apparently worth more than that of a man seems to be justified when we learn that the Department of Agriculture will spend nearly $30,000,000 this year on animal and plant diseases, and that 10 times more is to be spent on hoof-and-mouth disease in cattle, black spot in chickens, and even thrips on gladiola than on diseases of the human heart.

Assuming that the President will sign the National Heart Institute bill, Congress should provide immediately the $15,000,000 required for research, better hospital facilities (there are only 200 beds for cardiac cases in research clinics and only 909 special beds for cardiac convalescents), and for special courses that physicians wish to take. Less than $3,000,000 in private and Government funds is available, a pathetically inadequate sum when we consider that, as the average age of the population rises there will be more reports of deaths from heart failure, and that 60,-000,000, most of whom have slight heart defects of some kind and who are unaware of their condition, may be laid low at any moment. There is no question that the public will approve a congressional appropriation which cannot but promote the physical and economic welfare of nearly a third of the population.

LONG-RANGE AGRICULTURAL PROGRAM

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 2318) to provide for a coordinated agricultural program.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that there be printed in the RECORD at this point as a part of my remarks a letter in behalf of the longrange farm legislation, written to me by the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. BUSHFIELD].

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

UNITED STATES SENATE. COMMITTEE ON AGRICULTURE AND FORESTRY June 14 1948

Hon. ROBERT A. TAFT, United States Senate,

Washington, D.C.

DEAR BOB: I have been concerned for some time over the long-range farm legislation which has been before the Senate for several months. As you know, I am a member of the Agriculture Subcommittee which drafted this legislation after extensive hearings last fall. The subcommittee, as well as the whole Agriculture Committee, has spent a considerable amount of time in studying this matter. The Aiken bill, S. 2318, is truly a bipartisan attempt to deal with the long-range problems confronting American agriculture.

Since the bill was reported to the Senate last month I have been worried that action would not be taken on it. The late date which we have now reached compels me to beseech you to do everything possible to bring this matter to the attention of the Senate. I understand the House of Representatives has already passed stopgap price-support legislation. This is good as far as it goes, but it does not go far enough. I feel that now is the time for the Congress to do something about the problems of our farmers. The Senate Agriculture Subcommittee studied this problem very carefully. Testimony was obtained from approximately 300 witnesses in all sections of the United States. as well as from farm leaders and officials of the Department of Agriculture here in Washington. We think we have a good bill. view is shared by Republicans and Demo-crats alike. It simply does not seem right to me that this Congress should neglect our farmers, and I do not believe that the problems of American agriculture should become the basis for political bartering in an election year. The whole matter of long-time farm legislation is too vital for that. I do not want to see the American farmer subjected to this sort of thing. I do not believe that the stopgap legislation is enough, as this simply delays action on this vital matter for another year and will allow the entire subject of long-time farm legislation to become an issue in the fall political campaign. There have already been indications that it will. It has been said that now is not the time to enact a long-range farm program because of inflated prices and abnormal farm conditions. I think now is the time to consider this problem, because for once in history the farmer is receiving an equal share of the national income. I want to see him continue to enjoy this prosperity and favorable position in the economy pattern. Adoption of the long-range farm program as outlined in the Aiken bill will go a long way toward accomplishing this. If you will inspect the parity and price-support provisions of this measure, you will note that provision is made for adjustments in the support-price scale as conditions vary; hence, every assurance is given that prices will not be supported on too high a level. The 10year moving average accomplishes this.

I sincerely hope that, as Republican leader of the Senate, you will give this matter the highest priority so that an arrangement may be worked out with the House of Representatives to give the farmers the best possible long-range farm program in the short time remaining.

Sincerely yours,

HARLAN J. BUSHFIELD,

Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is open to further amendment.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I desire at this time to offer an amendment in the nature of a substitute, provided all the amendments to the committee amendment have been considered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Are there further amendments to the committee amendment?

Mr. AIKEN. I do not know that there are any further amendments, except those proposed by the Senator from Georgia, which are printed.

Mr. RUSSELL. I shall offer those at a later time

Mr. AIKEN. I do not know of any others.

Mr. RUSSELL. I offer an amendment in the nature of a substitute for the committee amendment. I do not ask that it be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment in the nature of a substitute for the committee amendment, offered by the Senator from Georgia, will be printed in the RECORD at this point.

The amendment to the amendment was to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert in lieu thereof the following:

That, notwithstanding any other provision of law, the Secretary of Agriculture is au-thorized and directed through any instrumentality or agency within or under the direction of the Department of Agriculture, by loans, purchases, or other operations—. (a) To support prices received by pro-

(a) To support prices received by producers of cotton, wheat, corn, tobacco, rice, and peanuts marketed before June 30, 1950, if producers have not disapproved marketing quotas for such commodity for the marketing year beginning in the calendar year in which the crop is harvested. The price support authorized by this subsection shall be made available as follows:

(1) To cooperators at the rate of 90 percent of the parity price for the commodity as of the beginning of the marketing year;
(2) To noncooperators at the rate of 60

(2) To noncooperators at the rate of 60 percent of the rate specified in (1) above and only on so much of the commodity as would be subject to penalty if marketed,

All provisions of law applicable with respect to loans under the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, as amended, shall, insofar as they are consistent with the provisions of this subsection, be applicable with respect to loans or other price-support operations authorized under this subsection, and the provisions of Public Law 163, Seventy-ninth Congress, shall continue in effect.

(b) To support until June 30, 1950, a price to producers of commodities with respect to which the Secretary of Agriculture by public announcement pursuant to the provisions of the act of July 1, 1941, as amended, requested an expansion of production of not less than 60 percent of the parity or comparable price therefor nor more than the level at which such commodity was supported in 1948, except that Irish potatoes harvested before January 1, 1949, milk and its products, hogs, chickens, and eggs shall be supported at 90 percent of the parity or comparable price. The comparable price for any such com-modity shall be determined and used by the Secretary for the purposes of this subsec tion if the production or consumption of such commodity has so changed in extent or character since the base period as to result in a price out of line with parity prices for in a price out of line with parity prices for the commodities referred to in (a) hereof. In carrying out the provisions of this sub-section the Secretary of Agriculture shall have the authority to require compliance with production goals and marketing regu-lations as a condition to eligibility of producers for price suprort.

(c) Sections 1 and 3 of the act approved

(c) Sections 1 and 3 of the act approved August 5, 1947 (Public Law 360, 80th Cong.), are amended by striking out in each section the date "December 31, 1948" wherever it appears and inserting in lieu thereof the date

"June 30, 1950."

(d) It is hereby declared to be the policy of the Congress that the lending and purchase operations of the Department of Agriculture (other than those referred to in subsecs. (a), (b), and (c) hereof) shall be carried out so as to bring the price and income of the producers of other agricultural commodities not covered by subsections (a), (b), and (c) to a fair parity relationship with the commodities included under subsections (a), (b), and (c) to the extent that funds for such operations are available after taking into account the operations with respect to the commodities covered by subsections (a), (b), and (c). In carrying out the provisions of this subsection the Secretary of Agriculture shall have the authority to require compliance with production goals and marketing regulations as a condition to eligibility of producers for price support.

SEC. 2. From any funds available to the Department of Agriculture or any agency operating under its direction for price support operations or for the disposal of agricultural commodities, the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized and directed to use such sums as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of section 1 of this act.

SEC. 3. Section 22 of the Agricultural Ad-

SEC. 3. Section 22 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act, as added by section 31 of the act of August 24, 1935 (49 Stat. 773), reenacted by section 1 of the Agricultural Marketing Agreement Act of 1937 (50 Stat. 246), as amended, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 22. (a) Whenever the President has reason to believe that any article or articles are being or are practically certain to be imported into the United States under such conditions and in such quantities as to render or tend to render ineffective, or materially interfere with, any program or operation undertaken under this title or the Soil Conservation and Domestic Allotment Act, as amended, or section 32, Public Law No. 320, Seventy-fourth Congress, approved August 24, 1935, as amended, or any loan, purchase, or other program or operation undertaken by the Department of Agriculture, or any agency operating under its direction, with respect to operating under its direction, with respect to any agricultural commodity or product thereof, or to reduce substantially the amount of any product processed in the United States from any agricultural com-modity or product thereof with respect to such program or operation is bewhich any ing undertaken, he shall cause an immediate investigation to be made by the United States Tariff Commission, which shall give precedence to investigations under this section to determine such facts. Such investi-gation shall be made after due notice and opportunity for hearing to interested parties. and shall be conducted subject to such regu-lations as the President shall specify.

"(b) If, on the basis of such investigations and report to him of findings and recom-mendations made in connection therewith, the President finds the existence of such facts, he shall by proclamation impose such fees not in excess of 50 percent ad valorem or such quantitative limitations on any article or articles which may be entered, or withdrawn from warehouse, for consumption as he finds and declares shown by such investigation to be necessary in order that the entry of such article or articles will not render or tend to render ineffective, or materially interfere with, any program or operation referred to in subsection (a), of this section, or reduce substantially the amount of any product processed in the United States from any such agricultural commodity or product thereof with respect to which any such program or operation is being under-taken: Provided, That no proclamation under this section shall impose any limitation on the total quantity of any article or articles which may be entered, or withdrawn from warehouse, for consumption which reduces such permissible total quantity to proportionately less than 50 percent of the total quantity of such article or articles which was entered, or withdrawn from warehouse, for consumption during a representative period as determined by the President: And provided further, That in designating any article or articles, the President may describe them by physical qualities, value, use, or upon such other bases as he shall determine.

"(c) The fees and limitations imposed by the President by proclamation under this section and any revocation, suspension, or modification thereof, shall become effective on such date as shall be therein specified, and such fees shall be treated for administrative purposes and for the purposes of section 32 of Public Law No. 320, Seventy-fourth Congress, approved August 24, 1935, as amended, as duties imposed by the Tariff Act of 1930, but such fees shall not be considered as duties for the purpose of granting any preferential concession under any international obligation of the United States.

Sec. 4. Section 8 (a) of the Soil Conservation and Domestic Allotment Act, as amended (U. S. C., 1940 ed., Supp. V, title 6, sec. 590h (a)), is amended (a) by striking out "January 1, 1949" wherever appearing therein and inserting in lieu thereof "January 1, 1950"; and (b) striking out "December 31, 1948" and inserting in lieu thereof "December 31, 1949."

SEC. 5. The first sentence of subsection (a) of section 7 of the act approved January 31, 1945 (49 Stat. 4), as amended, is amended by striking out "June 30, 1948" and inserting in lieu thereof "June 30, 1950."

SEC. 6. This act shall take effect on January 1, 1949, except that sections 3 and 5 shall take effect on the date of enactment of this act.

Also to amend the title so as to read: "An act to authorize the Secretary of Agriculture to stabilize prices of agricultural commodities; to amend section 22 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act, reenacted by the Agricultural Marketing Agreement Act of 1937; and for other purposes."

Mr. IVES. Mr. President, if it is agreeable to the Senator from Georgia, I should like to offer an amendment to the substitute. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk and ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment offered by the Senator from New York will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. One page 3, line 1, of the amendment in the nature of a substitute, after the word "hogs", it is proposed to insert "ducks."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from New York to the amendment in the nature of a substitute.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, inasmuch as the distinguished Senator from Vermont [Mr. AIKEN] has said that the tobacco amendment has played ducks ard drakes with his bill, and has already accepted the duck amendment to the committee amendment, I shall accept the amendment proposed by the distinguished Senator from New York.

Mr. IVES. I thank the able Senator from Georgia.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from New York [Mr. IVES] to the amendment in the nature of a substitute.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I offer an amendment to the amendment in the nature of a substitute which I send to the desk and ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 3, line 1, of the amendment in the nature of a substitute, after the word "chickens", it is proposed to insert "(including broil-

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I understand that this amendment is agreeable to the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, there is no question about a broiler being a chicken, so I am glad to accept the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Delaware to the amendment in the nature of a substitute.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I trust that the substitute may be considered in an atmosphere of calmness, and without the spirit of recrimination which was in evidence earlier in the day.

Mr. AIKEN. I assure the Senator from Georgia that I shall be calm.

Mr. RUSSELL. Without the substitute being read in full, I will state that it embodies a bill which has passed the House, known as the Hope bill, for the temporary extension of the agricultural program, to which has been added language extending the soil-conservation privilege to the States to set up State programs for a period of 2 years, as well as an extension of the Commodity Credit Corporation for a period of 2 years.

Mr. President, I believe in the committee system of the Senate. I realize that no parliamentary body can function effectively save through the work which is done by committees. I am always most reluctant to undertake to offer any substitute for a measure which has received careful study and scrutiny on the part of a standing committee of this body. I would not do so now, Mr. President, were I not convinced that it is necessary to make sure that the Congress does not adjourn and go home without any farm program, leaving chaos in the field of agriculture on every farm in the United States, unless we adopt the substitute which has been proposed.

Mr. THYE. Mr. President, will the

Senator yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. THYE. As I have read the Senator's amendment, primarily it would continue the legislation enacted as a wartime measure to increase the production of certain commodities which were essential during the war period. Does not the Senator's amendment propose a continuation of wartime legislation?

Mr. RUSSELL. The Senator is absolutely correct. The reason I say that the long-range program is a shortsighted program and should not be adopted by the Congress is that it is sought to throw us back prior to the war Today we are faced with a devears. mand for agricultural commodities which is equal to any that was ever made upon the farmers of the Nation during the war years. We have a European recovery program for which billions of dollars are being appropriated, and the farmers of the United States are being called upon to feed the world. Yet we see this bill brought in by the committee, undertaking to throw us back to the period of decreased production, and to remove any incentive whatever to the American farmer to produce the food and fiber which are absolutely essential if the Marshall plan is to succeed.

No stronger argument could be made for the substitute than that it recognizes, as the committee bill does not, that the demand on the American farmer will continue for at least a period of five more years.

One of the fatal weaknesses of the committee bill, as I see it, in addition to its complexities and ambiguities, is the fact that it undertakes to throw agricultural production in this country back to prewar years. Not only do the demands from Europe on the American farmer make it essential that we carry on a program of increased production, but the American people are today eating 18 percent more food than they were eating before the war. Yet the committee bill would have us go back to the prewar period-

Mr. THYE. Mr. President, will the

Senator yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. If the Senator will permit me to finish the sentence I shall be glad to yield. The committee bill would have us go back to the prewar period, when we were undertaking to stifle rather than encourage production.

I now yield to the Senator from

Minnesota

Mr. THYE. The Senator says that the committee bill proposes to throw agriculture back to the prewar period. The committee bill does no such thing; and the Senator, I am sure, is quite well aware of the fact that it does not, because it does not affect the parity price. or the 90 percent of parity, until such time as there are actual surpluses in the commodity, and when surpluses occur, the price factor comes in, and the relationship of the carry-over will have its reflex effect in a decrease in the parities paid. If the Senator thinks that he and all other producers can go on indefinitely accumulating surpluses in any agricultural commodities, and still have parity figured at 90 percent indefinitely, I invite the Senator's attention to the fact that public opinion will not follow him, even if that be his idea, because the consumer would be compelled to support by taxation a parity payment even when surpluses would make it almost impossible to obtain Treasury appropriations to finance such a program. I think the Senator knows that to be so.

Mr. RUSSELL, I know of no such thing, and neither does the Senator from Minnesota. I should like to have the Senator point out where we have any great surplus of agricultural commodities at the present time.

Mr. THYE. I wish to say again to the Senator, when the surpluses occur, then the flexible support price will be figured in. But until there are surpluses the parity will remain at 90 percent. When there are great surpluses, then, of course, it will be desirable to reduce the parity price, in order to have greater production in other fields of commodities, rather than to pile surplus upon surplus in one commodity.

That is why the support-price arrangement was conceived and developed, namely, in order to have a stable economy in agriculture, and not encourage high production in certain commodities merely because mechanically they can be produced easily and readily and often very cheaply.

Mr. RUSSELL, Mr. President, the Senator admits there is no surplus at the present time. He says that the Aiken bill contains provision for a flexible loan value so that if a surplus accumulates it will fast disappear.

I say the farmers of the United States are not simple enough to produce if there is likely to be a surplus, if they know the loan value of their commodity is to be reduced. The farmers of the United States will understand how the pending bill will operate. Why have they broken all records of production in the past? It is because they knew they were protected in their production.

But now, with these so-called flexible, escalator loan values running up and down, what farmer will take the risk of producing more bountiful crops of any kind? The farmers certainly will decrease their production. The committee bill is sure to cause decreased production in the United States at a time when our requirements and demands are greater than they ever have been in the past.

I have heard Senators argue time and again that the American people would not stand for these parity values. Mr. President, the present parity values are not hurting the consuming public in the slightest degree. Practically every commodity which would be under the parity values provided by this bill is selling above parity today. So the consuming public is not being hurt; not only is the public not being hurt, but it is being helped-in that the commodity Credit Corporation has earned in excess of $100,000,000 in dealing with these commodities in a way which the Senator says will cause the American people to kill any farm support.

Mr. President, if farm support is killed, it will be because those in this body who claim to represent the farmers and who declare their undying allegiance and love of the farmers in campaign years, do not have the courage to stand by the farmer and see that he is recognized as an American citizen and is entitled to a square deal, along with every other citizen of the United States.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, will

the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Young in the chair). Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield. Mr. MAYBANK. Question came up as to whether the American public would stand for taxation to maintain a farm program at parity. I wish to ask the distinguished Senator if it is not a fact that one of the few great prophecies made by the Republican Party, and for which the Republican Party took credit 2 years ago, was that enormous profits would be made by the Commodity Credit Corporation under the able management of Mr. C. C. Smith; and I ask if it is not also correct that more than $100,000,000 was made for the taxpayers by the Commodity Credit Corporation alone, under the direction of Mr. C. C. Smith.
Mr. RUSSELL, I think there is no question of that, and I am sure the Senator from Minnesota is aware of it.

I have just stated that the Commodity Credit Corporation made a profit of more than $100,000,000 in dealing with the present parity system which this bill proposes to reduce-and at a time when we are crying for more production from the American farmer.

Mr. THYE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at this point?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. THYE. In speaking about the profits made by the Commodity Credit Corporation, in order that we may understand that the Government is not making money through one of its corporations or agencies, and in order that the public may know definitely in what manner the Commodity Credit Corporation made a net profit of $138,505,000, it should be pointed out that it was because the Commodity Credit Corporation happened to have a large inventory of cotton and corn at the outset of the war; and because of war demands and war needs and wartime inflation, profits accumulated as a result of the sale of what the Commodity Credit Corporation had on hand prior to the war or at the outset and during the first years of the war.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, we still have a period of inflation as great as that which occurred during the war. Indeed, it is now much greater than it was then. Certainly, for that reason to say that the farmer has caused inflation of the economy, when he is subject not only to all the vicissitudes of inflation, but also to all the ravages of insects and crop disease, does not make sense. Certainly the farmer is entitled to the protection of existing law, which is what will be provided if the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, the Senator spoke of fluctuation. That is exactly what this bill provides, namely, fluctuation between 60 percent and 90 percent of parity, which will result in enriching the gamblers in commodities. If Senators think there was an investigation of this subject a few years ago, they should wait, if the committee bill is enacted, and see what will happen as a result of the developments in October and November next year, for not only will the gamblers estimate the crops, but they will undertake to estimate the surpluses; and then there will really be speculation and gambling, if that is what is desired.

Mr. RUSSELL. I do not propose by my vote to submit the farmers to that hazard.

Mr. President, I wish to make it perfectly clear that I am not leveling any attack at the committee bill. My statements were provoked by the questions asked by the Senator from Minnesota.

I do not think the question before the Senate at this time is between the Aiken bill and the House bill. As I view the situation, the question is between the House bill and nothing; because if we do not pass the House bill, but, instead, pass the Aiken bill and send it to conference, knowing that the House committee has held long and extended hearings on this entire question, and that the House has decided that due to the unnatural conditions which obtain in the American economy we should carry on with the wartime legislation for the time being, it is obvious that the House will not readily yield to our position. We know that after the House has considered this matter thoroughly from all angles, it will not readily yield and accept this radical innovation in agricultural legislation.

Much has been said of the great study which has been given this matter by the Senate committee. As a Member of the Senate who is proud of this body, I always support the Senate committees if I may consistently do so. But, Mr. President, the House committee also gave this subject study. The House committee also traveled the length and breadth of the land, and the House committee held hearings and examined any number of witnesses. The House committee reached the conclusion that, because of the great uncertainties which exist today and the great demands on the American farmer to increase his production, and also due to the uncertainties of the financial situation in the United States, it would be the part of wisdom to continue the existing law for a period of 18 months; and in this case I heartily sub-I take that position because of the attitude of the distinguished Senator from Vermont, for whom I have the greatest affection, who stated here the other evening, in effect, that it was a case of having either the committee bill or nothing, so far as the continuation of farm legislation was concerned.

Mr. President, for my part, I will not be bound by a choice between nothing and the committee bill, or the Aiken bill, when I know that the Senate can continue the present farm program for 18 months merely by adopting the substitute proposed by me, which already has been passed by the House of Representatives.

So, with me, it is a choice between the House bill or nothing; and when that choice is presented to me, I am glad to seize upon the House bill in order that the farm program will be protected for the next 18 months, the Commodity Credit Corporation extended for a period of 2 years, and the provisions of the Soil Conservation Act preserved, rather than to take the adamant position that the other branch of Congress must yield to this new bill.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. What the Senator has just said disturbs me. I am not on the committee, and I am very anxious, as is the Senator from Georgia, that some farm legislation be enacted. But the Senator has just stated that the Senator from Vermont says it is a choice between his bill and nothing. The Senator from Georgia has told us that in his considered judgment it is a choice between continuation of the present support plan and nothing. If both the distinguished Senators are correct, we may wind up in this session by having a choice between two

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, the whole matter is in the lap of the Senate at the present time. If the Senate wishes to assure beyond peradventure that the present farm program will be continued unimpaired and in full effect for 18 months, the Senate can adopt the substitute, and the program will be con-

Mr. President, I hear a great deal about long-range program, and I am all in favor of having a long-range and permanent farm program. I do not believe we shall ever have a permanent farm program in the sense that any one bill we may pass in one year will apply to any condition that might arise in agriculture over a period of 3 or 4 years. Any program that we call a permanent program we shall be compelled to amend from time to time. But certainly under the circumstances that confront us today it is not the part of wisdom to cut down the loan rates, to reduce the parity values of every farm commodity which is produced in the country, because when that is done, production will be discouraged at the very time that the entire world is looking to the United States of America for food and fiber to enable them to exist and to have wearing apparel. No one can escape the conviction that the reduction in the parity price, the reduction in the loan value, will discourage production on American farms.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. MORSE. A few minutes ago the Senator from New York [Mr. IVES] and the Senator from Delaware [Mr. WIL-LIAMS] secured acceptance by the Senator from Georgia of a certain amendment affecting broilers and ducks. However, the amendment at the desk reads in terms, not of the substitute bill of the Senator from Georgia, but the substitute bill of the Senator from Maine IMr. Brewster], which was withdrawn. I should like to have a correction made, so the amendment will relate to the correct bill. If the Senator will permit me, we can combine the Ives-Williams amendment and the Morse amendment, the latter involving the words "and other poultry," which was accepted yesterday afteroon on the Aiken bill, and add it to the Russell substitute bill.

Mr. RUSSELL, Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the clerk be permitted to insert the words as suggested by the Senator from Oregon at the proper place in the substitute. Is that satisfactory?

Mr. MORSE. That is satisfactory. I thank the Senator very much.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I want to say first we are confronted here with a condition, not a theory. We are within 3 days of the end of the session. Is it wise to gamble with a matter which is important not only to the farmer but to the Nation and to the world, to gamble with a new and revolutionary bill of this kind? I submit, with all respect that the bill is far too complicated and too far reaching to be considered under conditions existing in the Senate today. It is a type of bill that should be given the undivided attention of the Senate for a period of a week or 10 days to enable .

all Members of the Senate to familiarize themselves with the complete change in our farm program which it proposes. Here we have it before us, when the Senate is under unprecedented pressure, when the bill will be discussed for 20 or 30 minutes and then be laid aside for a veto message. The minds of Senators will then be directed to the veto message until its consideration is concluded; we return to the farm bill and undertake to explain another paragraph of the bill, and then there will come in another conference report, and the farm bill will be laid aside again. I say in all fairness-and it is no reflection on the Senate, because we would be miracle men if it were otherwise-that very few Members of the Senate thoroughly understand the pending bill and realize its full I have had some little experiimport. ence in the past with agricultural legislation. I was not privileged to be a member of the committee and to attend the hearings and to see the bill written up, but I have undertaken to read the bill on two different occasions. Mr. President, I assert without fear of successful contradiction that it is as involved and complicated a piece of legislation as has ever been submitted to the Senate. It would require not hours but days and weeks of study fully to recognize all the implications of the meas-

I am sure Senators do not realize all that is in the bill. We have heard a discussion here of tobacco and tobacco parity and the various phases of the 10-year moving average, and of the new parity program. But very little consideration has been given to the complete reorganization of the Department of Agriculture that is carried in the bill, and the great powers that are vested in whoever may be the Secretary of Agriculture under the terms of the bill.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. Does the Senator know that the Secretary of Agriculture agrees with the reorganization program?

Mr. RUSSELL. If the Secretary of Agriculture, or any man whoever hoped to be Secretary of Agriculture, did not agree with the reorganization program, he should be shot because it vests the greatest powers in him that any Cabinet member has ever possessed. But if the Congress lightly deals out these powers and deprives itself of authority over appropriations, I think we would be plain stupid

Mr. LUCAS. Of course, I do not read the bill the same way the Senator does. The truth of the matter is the powers of the Secretary, in comparison with those he has now, are reduced under this bill.

he has now, are reduced under this bill.

Mr. RUSSELL. If the Senator will find where the Secretary of Agriculture has power to allot the appropriation—

Mr. LUCAS. If the Senator will show me in the bill where we give him more power, I shall appreciate it.

Mr. RUSSELL. I shall be glad to do it, if the English language means anything. In title 1, page 49, if the Senator will look he will find where the Secretary of Agriculture is directed by the bill to "establish an agency to be known as the 'Bureau of Agricultural Conservation and Improvement,' to exercise all functions of the Secretary and of the various bureaus within the Department of Agriculture which, (1) prior to the enactment of this act, were assigned to" various branches of the Department as it exists at present, "or (2) the Secretary deems to be principally related to soil conservation and improvement or to those aspects of programs of the Department of Agriculture which require direct dealings by the Department with farmers."

That language gives the Secretary the power himself to say which bureaus within the Department shall do that.

We fought here for weeks over a bill giving the President of the United States power to reorganize the departments of the Government, and we required him to come back to the Congress before his reorganization order should become effective. When he submitted his reorganization orders, the Congress knocked about half of them in the head. But in this bill we give the Secretary of Agriculture power to reorganize the Department of Agriculture, and he does not have to report to the Congress or anyone else. It is just as clear as it can possibly be. Of course, the Secretary of Agriculture would be in favor of it. There has never been any Cabinet member who has ever possessed one-half the power that would be vested in the Secretary of Agriculture under the terms of this bill.

Mr. LUCAS. Where would the Senator vest that power?

Mr. RUSSELL. I would keep it in the Congress of the United States. I am urging the Senate not to insist upon the passage of this bill, but to give Congress time to reorganize the Department of Agriculture. The Congress is not the creature of the Department of Agriculture; the Department of Agriculture is the creature of the Congress.

Mr. LUCAS. That was the argument made all the way through in connection with the tariff policy.

Mr. RUSSELL. If the Senator from Illinois can find any consolation in that analogy, let him lave his soul in it and enjoy it, because there is no analogy whatever between this bill and the establishment of a tariff policy. I am surprised that the Senator would resort to such an argument.

Mr. LUCAS. I am surprised at the Senator from Georgia for making that kind of an argument, when he voted last week on a similar proposition.

Mr. RUSSELL. There is no similarity at all, and no one but the Senator from Illinois would think there was any similarity larity.

Mr. LUCAS. That is the Senator's opinion.

Mr. RUSSELL. Not only does the bill give the Secretary power to reorganize the Department of Agriculture, but it also gives him other powers.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield to the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. AIKEN. I maintain that instead of giving the Secretary authority to reorganize the Department of Agriculture, the bill directs the Secretary to reorganize it and tells him how he shall do it. I do not think that is any additional grant of power. It is a restriction on the power of the Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. RUSSELL. If the Senator from Vermont can find any limitation in the language on page 49, line 24, which permits the Secretary of Agriculture to transfer agencies which he deems to be principally related to soil conservation and improvement, or to those aspects of programs of the Department of Agriculture which require direct dealing by the Department with farmers, I should like to know what the limitation is. It seems to me it leaves the powers of the Secretary wide open as to those agencies.

Mr. AIKEN. If the Senator will read further, paragraphs (a), (b), and (c) state how the duties of the various agencies of the Department of Agriculture are to be divided.

Mr. RUSSELL, It excepts certain agencies, but I have never before known Congress to give any Cabinet member power to select each bureau in his department and say whether it is related to a particular program.

I also want to point out that in section 102 (a) there is no question that the permanent power is giver the Secretary to allot the appropriations made by Congress. Heretofore, in the consideration of appropriation bills, the Secretary has been required to submit budget estimates, minute in detail, as to how each dollar was to be expended, and Congress decided whether it would appropriate this item or that item for approximately 1,850 activities of the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. AIKEN. Will the Senator from Georgia point out any place in the bill where the Secretary will be absolved of the necessity of making reports and pointing out what he wants the money for when he comes before the Appropriations Committee?

Mr. RUSSELL. He is not absolved, but after he receives the money he can allot it as he pleases.

Mr. AIKEN. Can he not do that at this time?

Mr. RUSSELL. No; he cannot. He cannot allot money in that way. But this bill would give him authority to do it.

Mr. AIKEN. No; only as he transfers certain functions from one agency to another under the direction in the bill. What this bill does is to abolish two agencies within the Department of Agriculture and instruct the Secretary to establish one to take the place of the two. The reason for that-and it is being done at the request of the Department of Agriculture—is that things have not always been harmonious between the two agencies, although they have not quite arrived at a very acute stage as vet. It appears that those two agencies, dealing with the problem of soil improvement, should be united at the national level. It will make for more efficiency and more economy in government, in my opinion, and result in the expenditure of a larger percentage of appropriations made by Congress on the actual work for which the money was appropriated.

Mr. RUSSELL. If the bill should ever become law, I would devoutly share the hope that the Senator from Vermont is correct, but I find absolutely nothing in the bill which would justify that hope.

Mr. AIKEN. I am saying it for the record.

Mr. RUSSELL. Yes; but I was reading the Senator's bill. The Senator has said for the record that there was nothing in it to permit the Secretary to allot appropriations, and I shall therefore read section 102 (a) of the bill, on page

Mr. AIKEN. Before the Senator begins reading, I do not have the amended copy of the bill before me at the moment. but I call his attention to the fact that the words "heretofore or", in line 3, have been stricken out, so that any sums hereafter appropriated-

Mr. RUSSELL. Of course, I would not worry much about the money that has been heretofore appropriated. It would read this way:

Any sums hereafter appropriated, other than as grants-in-aid-

I ask the Senators to listen to this, because it is an important matter-and available for functions which the Secretary determines to be functions required by section 101 (a) of this act to be exercised through the Extension Service and cooperating agencies in the several States and in the Territory of Hawaii, to the extent that such funds are available at the time the Sec retary makes such determination, and (B) any sums appropriated specifically for func-tions covered by section 101 (a), shall be paid to the several States and the Territory of Hawaii in the same manner and subject to the same conditions and limitations as the additional sums appropriated under the act

And then it quotes the title of the Cooperative Agricultural Extension Act.

Mr. AIKEN. The Secretary has to allocate these funds according to an act of Congress.

Mr. RUSSELL. That is correct. I am coming, now, to paragraph (2) on page 53 of the bill:

The remainder of the sums so appropri-

That is, when he gets away from that which the Congress has specifically appropriated-and available in each fiscal year shall be paid to the several States and the Territory of Hawaii, without any requirement that equal sums be provided from any other sources, in the same proportions as the sums appropriated for such fiscal year pursuant to section 23 of the act entitled-

That being the general research act. I assert that the Secretary can move agencies and, under this bill, he has a great deal of control over the funds. The same thing is true of section 104.

Mr. AIKEN. The Secretary can utilize funds only in accordance with the regulations laid down by Congress. Either the principal sums or the remainders have to be appropriated pursuant to law. He has no additional powers there.

Mr. RUSSELL. It certainly seems to me that he has, when he has the power, under section 101, to determine which of the agencies he deems to be principally related to soil conservation and improvement or to those aspects of programs of the Department of Agriculture which require direct dealings by the Department with farmers, and so forth. If he has no authority to transfer bureaus under that language, I do not know what the language means.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Georgia yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. Does the able Senator from Georgia believe there should be a consolidation of the soil-conservation program and the agricultural-conservation program into a single program and agency, as suggested under section 101?

Mr. RUSSELL. Yes; I think there should be a consolidation. I am not sure that the provision in section 101 is the best way to do it, however, because I think it is vague and indefinite.

Mr. LUCAS. If the Senator feels that should be done, whom would he delegate as the appropriate administrative agency or authority to carry out that reorgani-

Mr. RUSSELL. I would not delegate it at all. That is the point I have been making all the way through, that I am opposed to the delegation of the power to the Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. LUCAS. In other words, the Senator would keep it right here in the Congress?

Mr RUSSELL. I most certainly would.

Mr. LUCAS. And have the rules and standards prescribed by Congress?

Mr. RUSSELL. We have gone very far afield in the delegation of power to the executive branch of the Government in the past few years, but this is the first time, to my knowledge, that such substantial power has been proposed to be delegated to a Cabinet officer without at least requiring a report back to the Congress as to what he had done. The bill does not even require a report. When we have delegated the power to the President to reorganize the departments, we have made provision for a report to Congress and provision for veto if Congress desired, but under this bill we are asked to delegate power to the Secretary of Agriculture to reorganize the department. The bill does contain some standards, but the standards are not sufficiently far-reaching. I think the Congress should take time to work out a permanent agricultural program on which the Congress would legislate, not one the Secretary of Agriculture would legislate.

Mr. LUCAS. The Senator knows how difficult that is, and he knows we have tried it times without number. the Congress tried to reorganize some department it never did succeed. the final analysis, we have to delegate the power to someone along the line to do the work. Congress has not the time to do it, and Congress cannot do it. I can agree with the Senator that whoever would do the work should perhaps make a report to Congress, but here is a situation in which we are trying to coordinate agencies in the Department of Agriculture under one separate agency, yet the Senator makes an argument that that should not be done, as provided in this bill, but that the Congress should do it itself. If the position of the Senator should prevail there would never be any reorganization of the executive departments of the Government so long as he and I were in the Congress, because Congress cannot do it, and the Senator knows Congress has not the time to do it.

Mr. RUSSELL. It is a very harsh indictment of the parliamentary system to say that the Congress does not have the capacity to reorganize the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. LUCAS. I can go even further than that. If the Senator thinks it is a severe and harsh indictment, let me say that I have never seen Congress yet appoint a committee to reorganize any part of the executive branch that did any constructive work on it and brought back a report. They have talked about it and used it as an argument when there was a desire to kill some proposal, but I have never seen any constructive, actual work done by a committee of Congress that has accomplished anything in the way of reorganizing the executive departments.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I did not intend to stress this particular phase of the pending bill, and would not have done so had not the Senator from Illinois challenged me to show where the bill delegated any power to the Secretary of Agriculture. I answered with the flat statement that the bill delegated too much power to the Secretary of Agriculture, and I was going to pass on to the Senator from Illinois the challenge to show it did not delegate power. Now the Senator from Illinois takes the position that the power which is delegated is necessary to be delegated.

Mr. LUCAS. The bill gives the Secretary no more power than he has at the present time, except power to reshuffle a few clerks in the department under his jurisdiction at the present time.

Mr. RUSSELL. It does more than reshuffle a few clerks. I recognize the difficulty in passing a reorganization act, because I have been a Member of the Senate about as long as the Senator from Illinois has, and I have seen these bills come up time and again, and I would not dispute that the Congress cannot reorganize all the departments of the Government at one time, in one bill. For that reason I have consistently voted for bills to delegate to the President of the United States power to reorganize the executive departments. But I have never voted for a bill giving the President authority to reorganize as he saw fit, and in all the reorganization bills Congress has never granted such power to a President. It was not granted to President Roosevelt; it was not granted to President Truman. We have granted them power to propose reorganization plans, but we have always retained a veto power in the Congress. To my knowledge this is the first time it has been proposed that Congress should delegate carte blanche power to a Cabinet officer to shuffle around a hundred or two hundred bureaus as he sees fit without being required to submit a report to Congress so that it may see what he has done in the matter. I do not intend to vote for any such power as that. I did not intend to labor the point, however.

If our legislative system is no good, Congress should be the last to admit it and we should at least leave it to those outside Congress to say we are incapable. I submit that if Congress has the time to perfect a long-range bill, we can adopt a long-range program that will bring about what is so much desired. That is incidental to my main argument, however, and I did not intend to go into it.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Mr. President, will the Senator from Georgia yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. I thought the Senator was about through with that aspect of the discussion.

Mr. RUSSELI. I am.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. To clarify the matter in my own mind, I should litte to ask the Senator a question. Let us assume this is a good bill, but in the situation as it now exists, do I understand correctly it is the Senator's belief that, even though we pass the bill as is, he does not think there is assurance that the House will accept it, and therefore he thinks we will have no bill at all? Is that the point the Senator makes?

Mr. RUSSELL. I have stated heretofore that in my opinion the issue was between the substitute bill or no bill, because if the committee bill passes, it has been stated the House would not go into it without hearings, and frankly I would not blame them for not accepting such a complicated bill as this.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Who stated that? Mr. RUSSELL. It is against the rules of the Senate to quote any Member of the House of Representatives on the floor.

Mr. AIKEN. Several Members of the House have told me that they had ample time to consider this bill if it is substituted for their bill and goes to conference. It is just a question which Member of the House one is talking to. I know some Members of the House who are insistent on a stop-gap program only. I know other Members who are equally anxious to have a long-range program adopted. I cannot see that any time would be lost by the adoption of the longrange bill and putting it into conference with the House. We certainly cannot accept the House bill as it is if we want to save the Commodity Credit Corporation after July 1. We must go to conference.

Mr. RUSSELL. The substitute I have offered provides for a continuation of the Commodity Credit Corporation.

Mr. AIKEN. Does the Senator think it would not be necessary to go to conference?

Mr. RUSSELL. In my judgment the House would accept the substitute bill with the amendments, without the slightest question.

Mr. AIKEN. There is some reason to believe that the House would accept the Senate long-range bill if they had a chance to vote on it, as they certainly will have, if we put it in very good shape, as I think will be done.

I admit I became impetuous this afternoon, and if I said anything which hurt the feelings of any Senator I am truly sorry for it. The tobacco amendment, while very disappointing to me, does not spoil the bill completely. The wool amendment which was adopted will have no effect upon the bill, so far as I know.

I am very anxious to have the House have an opportunity to vote on the long-range bill in the event we do not agree in conference. We would make every effort to do that first, in any event. I feel that this bill would have a very good chance of passing the House. So let us send them the best bill possible, let us get the best possible bill we can. We have no time to lose in adopting a long-range bill. It is true prices are generally high now, and carry-overs are small. That is just the time to get a good bill on the statute books.

Let me point out that word has come to me from the Department of Agriculture that since January 1 exports of agricultural commodities to other parts of the world have been 15 percent below the exports of agricultural commodities in the previous year. We are going to have increased stocks, we are going to have increased supplies of grain. Before we know it, if I read conditions correctly, only a major calamity, such as a drought. will prevent us having a surplus supply of grain. So we have written into the bill provisos which make it more profitable to feed those grains. I will not go into the bill because the Senator, I am sure, knows what I mean. But a good, long-range bill enacted at this session is not hopeless.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RUSSELL, I yield.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. If I may, I should like to pursue this matter further, because I do not understand thoroughly what goes on in the parliamentary situation which exists at the end of a session, as the Senator from Georgia does. Let us assume we pass the bill tonight, and that it goes to the House tomorrow. Both Houses must agree on the conference report before we adjourn Saturday night; is that correct?

Mr. RUSSELL. That is correct.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. That is what bothers me. It seems to me it ought to be possible to ascertain which of the views expressed by the two Senators is correct. I am speaking along the line the Senator from New Mexico followed a moment ago. There are two very distinguished Members of the Senate, each one giving us a more or less opposite view of what will happen if we adopt one form of bill or the other. That is something which concerns me deeply, because it would be disastrous if we should end up with no bill at all. I do not know how we can resolve the situation, although perhaps it would be possible to do so.

Mr. AIKEN. I am sure some bill will be enacted. Personally I think we would get a good long-range bill sooner if we did not pass a stop-gap measure, because if we were to do so there would be a tendency to let the matter slide again next year, and then we will again find ourselves in another election year; whereas if we do not have any bill at all we would have to do something the first of next January. I do not anticipate any such condition as that coming about. I feel that when we get together with the House conferees we can reach a fair agreement. Those who will be on the conference committee of the Senate have twice met with several Representatives who will be on the conference committee of the House. I think we all understand our problem. I think it is unfortunate that the House has concentrated its study to one feature of agriculture, which is the land-use policy, whereas the. Senate has concentrated on a supportprice program. The Senate committee felt that a support-price program should come first, in order to insure our farmers against a collapse which we know can come suddenly. I do not look for a collapse in the immediate future, but we never can tell. As I said the other day, the time to patch a roof is when the sun is shining so the roof will be ready when the rains come. I hope we can take the bill to conference with the House conferees, and I feel sure that we can work out a much better bill than the House is offering us now, and, perhaps than the bill which we have here.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I wish I could share the belief expressed by the Senator from Vermont, but the bare facts simply do not bear out his statement. If we accept the bill already passed by the House there cannot be any question about having a continuation of the program. If we pass the Aiken bill it will mean throwing the whole matter into the lap of chance as to whether we will ever get a law or not.

Mr. AIKEN. May I point out that if we accept as it is the bill passed by the House there is no question that we will have to spend from fifty to seventy-five million dollars, or more, during the next year to buy eggs which we do not need inthis country. There will be no question but that the wool growers of Texas will get a support price for 2 years, and the wool growers of Montana will get a support price for only 1 year. There are a few other deficiencies in the bill which should be ironed out. If we send the Senate bill to conference, then we will have all the material of both the House and the Senate bills before the conferees for consideration.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, the Senator has made a statement about eggs. The Senator, I believe, stated now that we would lose from fifty to sixty million dollars on eggs if the House bill were to be passed. He has come down some $40,000,000 since night before last, when he said we would lose $100,000,000 on eggs. I was surprised to hear that statement, because I had never heard of any great loss on eggs. Therefore, I checked with the Commodity Credit Corporation to find out about the egg losses.

Mr. AIKEN. I believe the Senator has the same figures I have. They will show that since 1944 the Commodity Credit Corporation has bought, through the support-price program, about $161,000,-000 worth of eggs, and has also made purchases of four-hundred-and-someodd million dollars' worth of eggs, I suppose largely for overseas shipments. Those are eggs which we are not likely to need. I do not think we are going to be exporting eggs by the hundred million dollars' worth from now on. I agree with the Senator that it has not all been a total loss, but we have had to buy, if my memory serves me correctly, since 1944, $161,000,000 worth of eggs to support the price of eggs at 90 percent of parity, which is continued during the next year. Mr. FULBRIGHT. How much loss was there?

Mr. RUSSELL. There has been a loss over the entire program, as I understand, of approximately $18,000,000. The Corporation has dealt in hundreds of millions of dollars' worth of eggs.

Mr. AIKEN. It is difficult to tell what the loss is, because so many of the eggs have been used for cooperative purposes, such as European relief.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. Can the Senator from Georgia tell me why milk and its products, hogs, chickens, and eggs were picked out to be supported at 90 percent of

Mr. RUSSELL, No. I do not know exactly why that was done. I have before me the report of the House committee, which I can read if the Senator desires. I believe it deals at some length with that subject.

Mr. LUCAS. I want to know why these particular products were selected.

Mr. RUSSELL. I can tell the Senator why I am in favor of support of those products. I do not know why the House is in favor of support for them. I am in favor of support for them for the same reason that I am inclined to favor the most attractive features of the Aiken bill, and that is because the parity base heretofore of dairy products and of meat has been unfair to the producers of those commodities, and it has been below a fair parity price for meat and some other commodities. I would favor support of the products in question because it would give them a more equitable treatment under the terms of the bill. The reason so many are supporting the Aiken bill is because it is fairer to the meat producers and to the dairy products producers than is the existing law.

Mr. LUCAS. The present price of pork is up to 90 percent of parity. The Sen-ator's amendment provides that "milk and its products, hogs, chickens, and eggs shall be supported at 90 percent of the parity or comparable price." How can the Senator justify support of the four products I have just mentioned? There will be no way of controlling the number of chickens produced or controlling the amount of eggs produced. Broilers have been added, and every other kind of chicken is included.

Mr. RUSSELL. Is the Senator speaking of my taking in milk and its products, hogs, chickens, and eggs, as well as broilers, when the Senate has voted to include innumerable amendments in the long-range-farm-program bill? The bill has been rewritten on the floor.

Mr. LUCAS. The Senator from Georgia is not answering my question. I think he should answer it because it is tre-mendously important to find out just why we have to guarantee the prices on these four products.

Mr. RUSSELL. Will the Senator read the items again?

Mr. LUCAS. Yes, I will. The Senator will find the language on the top of page 3 of his amendment.

Mr. RUSSELL. I mean the commodities.

Mr. LUCAS. This is the language, beginning at the bottom of page 2 of the Senator's amendment:

Except that Irish potatoes harvested before January 1, 1949, milk and its products, hogs, chickens, and eggs shall be supported at 90 percent of parity or comparable price.

I can understand how Irish potatoes harvested before January 1, 1949, should be supported. That is the 1948 crop. It comes in late perhaps. But it is a little difficult for me to understand how the Senator can support these other four products, milk and its products, hogs, chickens, and eggs, and guarantee 90 percent of parity price.

Mr. RUSSELL. Does the Senator know what parity is for butterfat, which is a product of milk?

Mr. LUCAS. That does not have anything to do with the question.

Mr. RUSSELL. It should have, because I am pointing out the significance. As of March 15, 1948, the parity for butterfat was 65 cents a pound. Under the 10-year average of the Aiken bill the butterfat formula is 65.2 cents a pound. So the two measures go hand in hand so far as the two products are concerned. The Senator having been a member of the committee, I assumed that he would have known that.

Mr. LUCAS. The Senator assumes many things when he wants to get away from the real point.

Mr. RUSSELL. I gave the Senator the

Mr. LUCAS. I do not know why the Senator should continuously castigate me and indirectly infer that I do not know anything about this bill.

Mr. RUSSELL. I am sure that the Senator was trying to help me by asking the question he just asked. I know that he is attempting to assist me in my explanation of the substitute.

Mr. LUCAS. I think it is tremendously important to find out the facts. I propose to offer an amendment to the Senator's amendment-

Mr. RUSSELL, I asked the Senator what the parity price was under this bill. and he said he did not know.

Mr. LUCAS. It does not make any difference to me what the parity price The Senator from Illinois is not in favor of guaranteeing the price of any commodity, regardless of what the parity price is, at 90 percent, when other commodities, basic and nonbasic, have a sliding scale up to 90 percent of parity. There is a reason for it. If the Senator wants to know the real reason, he can go back to the House of Representatives and he will find that there was plenty of logrolling between the milk and dairy producers and the egg producers, in order to get 90 percent of parity.

Mr. RUSSELL. That may be true; but the strange fact remains that under the bill of which the Senator from Illinois is a co-author, the parity price on butterfat, which is the base of milk products, is higher than it is in this bill.

Mr. LUCAS. Of course it is higher, but it is flexible. Tomorrow, or next year it may not be higher; but the Senator would guarantee 90 percent. There is no flexibility in his formula. That is what I am talking about.

Mr. RUSSELL. Of course there is not; and that is why I am opposed to the Senator's bill.

Mr. AIKEN, Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. AIKEN. If the Senator will permit me, I should like to explain the parity figures. I think he has read them correctly; but in figuring the parity prices for milk products and butter under Senate bill 2318 the Bureau of Agricultural Economics failed to include the subsidy which was paid to the dairy farmers during the war. That resulted in bringing down the parity price of butter and milk very considerably. It is my opinion that in figuring the parity price for dairy products under Senate bill 2318, the Bureau of Agricultural Economics should include the subsidy which was paid directly to the farmer. I do not believe that it should include the subsidy which was paid directly to the processor, because there is no way of telling how much of it went back to the farmer. But that is the reason why the figures which the Senator reads for parity for dairy products under Senate bill 2318 are so low. I do not know what the actual parity would be. I believe that the figures which the Senator has, show that the parity price of milk would increase from about $3.80 to $4 if we adopted the proposed parity formula. But if the subsidy were included, as it should be, in computing parity under the new formula, the parity price for milk would be about $4.36 a hundred. It would add materially. In other words, the dairy farmer was penalized because part of his price was received in the form of a subsidy, and the Department of Agriculture, in computing parity under the proposed formula, failed to include the amount which was paid him as a subsidy.

Mr. RUSSELL. I think the Senator from Vermont is correct. I have always felt that dairy products and meat were entitled to some new basis for their parity formula. They have been discriminated against heretofore.

Mr. AIKEN. That is correct.

Mr. RUSSELL. But this bill corrects the discrimination.

The Senator from Illinois says that there was logrolling in the House committee. Some of the House Members felt that the Senator from Illinois had undertaken to outbid them in this bill, because he would increase the parity price of dairy products considerably above the level which obtained under the old system.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RUSSELL, I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. Would the Senator include cattle?

Mr. RUSSELL. Yes. There is not much difference with respect to cattle.

The Senator from Vermont will bear me out when I say that there would be very little difference in the parity price of meat. It would be lower under the House bill and under the old program than it would be under the new bill.

Mr. AIKEN. That is correct.

RUSSELL. The parity would be higher under the bill of the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. I do not seem to make myself clear to the Senator from Georgia. What I am objecting to is guaranteeing a 90-percent parity price for any com-modity, which is what the Senator would

Mr. RUSSELL. Of course I would. Mr. LUCAS. It does not make any difference how many eggs are produced in this country; the Government must support the price. If it costs the Government $100,000,000, we must go to 90 percent of parity on eggs. If the Government loses $100,000,000 on chickens, it does not make any difference. There is no limitation on the number of eggs or chickens that can be produced, and the Government must stand the loss, regardless of what it is. The Senator will not disagree.

Mr. RUSSELL. The Senator from Illinois makes a very fine attack on the whole agricultural system. We are not going to have any farm program that is worth a tinker's damn to the farmers in keeping up prices that will not occasionally run into losses on some commodities. If the Senator wants to bring the parity loans down to 40 percent, we shall not have any losses, but the program will not be worth a thing to the farmer because it will not support his prices.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. The Senator talks about destroying the farm program. Let me say to the Senator from Georgia that this kind of an amendment is the very thing which will ultimately destroy the farm program in public opinion. We cannot continue to do what we are doing at the present time under the 90-percent-ofparity formula, supporting the parity formula for potatoes, chickens, and eggs, and having the Government go in the red to the tune of millions of dollars, without ultimately losing the support of the American public for any farm program in this country.

Mr. RUSSELL. Will the Senator point out where the losses have been incurred? Mr. LUCAS. We lost on potatoes. We lost on eggs last year.

Mr. RUSSELL. On the over-all program we made more than $200,000,000. Of course the Senator can point to a few Irish potatoes or eggs, with respect to which we lost money; but on the overall program the Commodity Credit Corporation made more than $200,000,000.

Mr. LUCAS. I know that that is exactly what happened; but as the Senator from Vermont pointed out a moment ago, if we continue with the 90percent guarantee, some of these days we shall get a wheat crop or a cotton crop which will result in a surplus which will attack the Treasury of the United States to the point where we shall not have any farm program thereafter, just as surely as I am standing on this floor. That is why the Senator from Illinois has been working all this time trying to get something that is basic and fundamental on the statute books rather than a continuation of the temporary support program, attempting to give to the farmer everything that we can possibly give him. We have not lost anything up to this time; but just as surely as we get a surplus, if we ever get what we had back in 1932 or 1933, under this kind of program ultimately there will not be enough money in the Treasury to take care of the losses. If we continue to paint the picture to the American public that we are supporting a program of this kind, to the degree that regardless of what any individual produces in the way of eggs, chickens, potatoes, or what not, we will take care of him and support prices, finally, I do not care how much we make, we shall destroy the faith and confidence of the people in the farm program.

Mr. RUSSELL. There are limitations on what can be produced. This bill does not permit unlimited production. Neither does the basic law under which the program operates. Even with the acreage we have had, there has been excess production of a few commodities. But in looking at a little pile of potatoes which cost the Government a few thousand dollars we lose sight of the wonderful achievements of the American farmer and the incentive provided by the present system. We are not yet out of the woods of the war. Senators argue eloquently about the cold war, and the necessity of carrying out the Marshall plan. We must feed and clothe the people of Europe. The demands for production on the American farmer are as great today as they were during the war. Yet it is proposed to strike down the program which has successfully brought about this great production, in the name of a longrange program and in the name of saving the taxpayer, when up until now the taxpayer has not been hurt, and he will not be hurt by an 18-month extension of the present program to give us an opportunity to study a long-range program.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. AIKEN. I am sure that the Senator from Georgia will agree that no one is better qualified to speak on the effect of the various programs on the farmer than is the farmer himself. During the course of the hearings which the Senate committee conducted on the pending bill there appeared before the committee the Secretary of Agriculture, the president of the American Farm Bureau Federation, the master of the National Grange, the Washington representative of the Council of Farmer Cooperatives, and a representative of the Farmers Union. They all appeared before the committee and advocated a sliding scale of supports based upon a modernized parity which, in turn, was based upon a 10-year moving average. We had the unanimous support of the farm organizations for what we propose today, namely, to modernize the parity formula so as to bring the various agricultural commodities into proper relationship to each other, and then to support the price of the various commodities on a sliding scale, and I believe most of them suggested 60 to 90 percent for the basic and more important commodities.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I have heard the Senator from Vermont make that statement at least once or perhaps twice in the RECORD.

Mr. AIKEN. Yes; it is in the RECORD. Mr. RUSSELL. Perhaps I have heard the Senator say that three times. I am not prepared to challenge it, because I was not on the committee. Let me ask a question: Were the 30 or 40 amendments which the Senator has accepted to the bill explained to the witnesses who testifled and spoke as the Senator from Vermont has indicated?

Mr. AIKEN. Probably 30 amendments have been adopted to the bill, but I can explain how that happened. After the bill was all ready and was reported, it was submitted to the Department of Agriculture, so that the Department might go over the bill with a fine-tooth comb and find out where "t's" were not crossed and "i's" were not dotted, and might suggest amendments which would make the bill operate more smoothly.

I wish to say that in connection with the 3-page bill which the Senator from Georgia is offering as an amendment in the nature of a substitute for the committee amendment-leaving out the section 22 amendment—after the House committee reported that bill, it reported 13 other amendments besides those which were adopted on the floor. So I think we have less amendments per page in our bill than there are in the House bill or the Senator's substitute.

Mr. RUSSELL. The Senator is getting away from his argument that the Senate should take this bill-in other words, the committee amendment-without question because it has been approved by the farm leaders, for it seems that the Sen-ator rewrote his bill after it was said to please the farm leaders.

Mr. AIKEN. I think the Senate should accept this bill, on which the committee has worked for more than 9 months. If we were to wait for each Member of Congress to work out this bill in the same way the committee has worked it out. I am sure we never would be ready to vote on a long-range farm program.

If the Senate did not have confidence in its Committee on Agriculture, I think the Senate should not have given it an appropriation and should not have instructed it to do this work, which we now have presented to the Senate in the form of a bill. It is technical work; it is complicated work. If I had not been working with it for 9 months, I know I would not understand much that is in the bill.

I do not think it is a perfect bill. No doubt we shall have to amend it within 2 years, and probably within 1 year, after it is enacted into law, because experience will develop weaknesses in it, just as experience develops weaknesses in any other long, complicated bill. But this bill is the best we can do, and I do not know how we could improve upon it, even if we were to work for a few weeks longer.

Mr. ROBERTSON of Virginia, Mr. LUCAS, Mr. TYDINGS, and other Senators addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MAR-TIN in the chair). Does the Senator from Georgia yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I do not mind yielding for questions, but I do not like Senators to intersperse long speeches in my remarks.

Mr. ROBERTSON of Virginia. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield to me on the point just made by the Senator from Vermont-

Mr. RUSSELL. Very well; I yield.

Mr. ROBERTSON of Virginia. On the point just made by the Senator from Vermont, Mr. President, let me say that it is true that the witnesses to whom he referred endorsed the principle of a longrange farm program; but the Secretary of Agriculture, Mr. Anderson, offered numerous and serious objections to the bill as drawn. Mr. Kline, of the Farm Bureau Federation, presented 10 pages of testimony suggesting changes. Mr. Goss, of the National Grange, offered nu-merous suggestions. Mr. Charles Holman, of the Milk Producers Association, offered numerous suggestions. Someone representing the peanut industry offered numerous suggestions. All through the nearly 500 pages of testimony-and it was not easy to analyze, because there was no index and no table of contents, when the hearings were published, and we simply had to dig into the testimony as best we could-there were so many suggestions and so many criticisms that finally the committee simply struck out every line of the 46 pages of the original bill, and framed another bill. But, after framing another bill and after debate had started on it, the committee brought in 10 pages of amendments-10 pages of amendments to a 50-page bill, which means about a 20-percent change. Even then, I may not have counted all the amendments. There have been numerous amendments, such as those relating to chickens, potatoes

Mr. AIKEN. And ducks and other

Mr. ROBERTSON of Virginia. So we have reached the point where the committee has abandoned the first bill, and has brought out another bill, and then has proposed changes amounting to at least 20 percent in the second bill, and then has added numerous other changes.

Frankly, although I am trying to find out what has been done, I do not know what is in the bill now.

Mr. AIKEN. Could the Senator suggest a better way?

Mr. ROBERTSON of Virginia. Mr. President, I think a much better way would be to adopt, as a temporary measure, the substitute offered by the Senator from Georgia, and continue the support program. Certainly in a months or in a year if the Senator thinks the support price is too high, he can bring in a long-range bill, which we shall have time to study and understand.

Mr. AIKEN. Will the Senator point out one section of the bill to which the Department of Agriculture objects?

Mr. ROBERTSON of Virginia. There are numerous pages of testimony of the Secretary of Agriculture, of course.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield. Mr. TYDINGS. I should like to ask the Senator from Georgia a question.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, before the Senator asks the question, will he yield in order that I may propound a unanimous-consent request in regard to a time for voting?

Mr. TYDINGS. The matter I have in mind will not delay the presentation of such a request.

Mr. WHERRY. I did not mean to delay the Senator, of course.

Mr. TYDINGS. I shall take only 2 minutes or so. I have waited some time to get the floor.

Mr. WHERRY. Very well; excuse me. Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Georgia whether it is a fact that the acceptance of his substitute is the pending question, also whether it would be in order to offer a small amendment, in the nature of a perfecting amendment, to the substitute.

Mr. RUSSELL. An amendment either large or small would be in order.

Mr. TYDINGS. With the permission of the Senator from Georgia, I should like to offer a 5-line amendment to his amendment. The amendment I offer deals only with Maryland tobacco. I believe it provides for less than is provided by the Senate bill; but as the Representative in Congress from the tobacco section of my State says, this is an amendment which would have been put in the House bill if the circumstances had permitted its consideration there.

I should like to offer it at this time as a perfecting amendment to the substi-tute, so that, regardless of whether either the substitute or the committee amendment is adopted by the Senate, the tobacco situation will be taken care of.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I hope the fact that the Senator's perfecting amendment to my amendment provides for less than the treatment accorded by the Senate bill will not influence the vote of the Senator from Maryland on this measure.

Mr. TYDINGS. My perfecting amendment to the Senator's amendment provides less, but only slightly less.

Mr. President, to the substitute amendment of the Senator from Georgia, I offer the amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. At the proper place in Mr. Russell's amendment in the nature of a substitute for the committee amendment, it is proposed to insert the following:

Except that for the purpose of computing the parity price for Maryland tobacco the base period shall be the period August 1936 to July 1941 in lieu of the period August 1919 to July 1929.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Maryland to the amendment of the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I understand that the amendment offered by the Senator from Maryland to my amendment establishes a parity figure below that contained in the committee amendment, the so-called Aiken bill, if I am not mistaken.

Mr. TYDINGS. I took the amendment to the Senator from Vermont, and he himself told me that I would be better off under his bill than under the amendment in the nature of a substitute, as it would be perfected by the amendment I have now offered to it.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, I think there is no question about that, although I am not sure what the parity price under the amendment would be.

Mr. ROBERTSON of Virginia. President, before the Senator from Georgia accepts the amendment to his substitute, I should like to know what the parity base will be under the substitute as thus perfected. If we accept one parity base for Maryland tobacco and another parity base for Virginia tobacco, and a different base period-

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, heretofore Maryland tobacco has had no base period for its parity except 1909-14.

Mr. TYDINGS. That is correct; and my amendment would simply put the treatment accorded to Maryland tobacco in line with the treatment accorded to Kentucky tobacco, North Carolina tobacco, and Virginia tobacco.

Mr. ROBERTSON of Virginia. Of course, I am glad to have Maryland tobacco receive treatment that is in line with the other.

Mr. TYDINGS. I have not made a profound study of the matter, but I am advised by those who know that this amendment to the Senator's substitute amendment will put Maryland tobacco in a position comparable to that of burley tobacco and flue-cured tobacco.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I continue to be disturbed about the parliamentary situation in which we find ourselves in view of the lateness of the hour, and the question of whether we are going to have any farm legislation at this session. I have a suggestion to make to the two contending forces, if such they be. While I know that ordinarily parliamentary rules would not permit it, yet it could be done by unanimous consent. My suggestion would be-

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, if the Senator from New Mexico will permit me to interrupt him, I attempted a couple of minutes ago to propound a unanimousconsent request. At that time the distinguished Senator from Maryland said he would like to continue. I told him I would wait, and I think I stated that when he concluded we should have a quorum call.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, if I may finish my suggestion first, it will take but a moment. I was going to suggest, if Senators could not agree, that under a unanimous-consent agreement we let the substitute offered by the Senator from Georgia pass as a separate bill and vote on the Aiken bill, sending them both to the House.

Mr. AIKEN. No, absolutely no. That would be the end of the long-range.program.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I am afraid that is a confession.

Mr. WHERRY. Now, let me try.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The
Senator from Georgia has the floor.

Mr. WHERRY. Would there be a possibility of arranging an hour, at which time we could vote on the substitute and on any amendments that might be offered to it, and then proceed to vote on the final passage of the bill as amended?

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I ob-

Mr. WHERRY. I have not even made the request. I am making an inquiry. Mr. MAYBANK. I merely suggest that I certainly intend to speak on the robbery of the cotton farmer.

Mr. WHERRY. I do not want to cut off any Senator at all: that is not the thought, but I should like to suggest an hour for a vote. I would suggest any time—8 o'clock, 9 o'clock, or 10 o'clock. If Senators would merely indicate when they think they may conclude, I would make a proposition to Members of the Senate first on the substitute or any amendments offered thereto, which could be gotten out of the way. If the substitute carries there would be no more votes; if it does not carry, we can begin voting and finally vote on the bill. I would be glad to make it any hour. I will suggest any hour that is agreeable to the distinguished Senator from Georgia or the Senator from South Carolina, and the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. MAYBANK. I may say to the distinguished Senator from Nebraska I will agree to any hour that my distinguished friend from Georgia agrees to.

Mr. WHERRY. Fine. Now we are making headway.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I doubt that. [Laughter.]

Mr. WHERRY. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Georgia has the floor.

Mr. RUSSELL. I do not know how many Senators might desire to speak on the substitute. I know the Senator from Virginia [Mr. ROBERTSON] wishes to speak, and the semior Senator from South Carolina wishes to speak. I want to expedite the sessions of the Senate in every way I possibly can. I have undertaken to do it on every occasion.

Mr. WHERRY. That is correct. It is very fine.

Mr. RUSSELL. But I think this is without any question the most important bill we shall have before the Senate during the remainder of the session. I would not know now what time to fix for a vote, in view of the limited knowledge I have of the number of Senators who may wish to address themselves to the subject.

Mr. WHERRY. I have respect for the Senator from Georgia, and I may say there is not a Member of the Senate who has cooperated more wholeheartedly with the junior Senator from Nebraska in working out unanimous consent requests than has the Senator from Georgia, or the Senator from South Carolina. I would respectfully ask Senators to take an inventory on the possibilities. This is the first time I have made a suggestion. We do not always get an agreement on the first request. I ask Senators to analyze the situation, and if they feel that later on, within as short a time as possible, they can agree upon a time, I shall be glad to submit the request. I thank the Senator for his consideration

Mr. ROBERTSON of Virginia. Mr. President, will the Senator from Georgia vield in that connection?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. ROBERTSON of Virginia. There are certain phases affecting the prospects for agreeing on the general program which I should like to discuss in connection with what I think would be the wisdom of accepting now the substitute offered by the Senator from Georgia. I am convinced from what House Members tell me-and I am pretty close to them, having served with them for 14 years-that the proposal of the Senator from Georgia is all they are going to take. May I ask the distinguished acting majority leader when he wants to cut down on the time some of us may desire to take?

Mr. WHERRY. I do not want to cut down the time of any Senator.

Mr. ROBERTSON of Virginia. What does the Senator plan to bring up next tonight?

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, that is a rather difficult question to answer. [Laughter.]

Mr. BALDWIN and several other Senators addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield first to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. WHERRY. I merely remind the Senate that we are getting to the closing moments of the session. There are several pieces of legislation which are very important. For one thing, the conference report on the Interior Appropriation bill will probably be ready by 8:30 or 9 o'clock

Mr. FULBRIGHT. How about oleomargarine? That would be a good bill. Mr. WHERRY. Did the Senator from Arkansas say something? [Laughter.]

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I think I had best decline to yield further at this time and proceed with my remarks. I decline to yield further. I have been on the floor for more than an hour, and have not been able to occupy to exceed 30 minutes of my own time, so I want to wind up my remarks.

Mr. President, I have undertaken to deal with two phases of the question; first, the fact that it is necessary to adopt the pending substitute if we are to have any assurance whatever that we shall not be deprived of a farm program after the last of December this year. In the second place, I have undertaken to show that the reorganization feature of the pending bill bestows too great legislative powers upon the Secretary of Agriculture.

My third objection to the bill is the fact that it is complicated and so confused as a result of the amendments which have been adopted, and because of the complete change it proposes in the parity program, that it is a lawyer's or a professor's dream. It is so complicated that only a lawyer of great experience in agricultural legislation or a professor who had dealt with matters of agricultural economy could hope possibly to understand it. We are told we should modernize parity. I believe the bill constitutes a revision of the present parity program. As I stated a few moments ago, I know that the present formula is unfair to meat, dairy products, cottonseed, and other commodities, for that matter. But I submit that the 10-year moving average is not a modern basis for computing a parity program.

During 7 of the 10 years, the Nation has been at war. We had ceilings on many agricultural commodities, which held down the prices of those commodities. In the case of other agricultural products we subsidized them and their production, running their values up to 250 or 300 percent of parity. Yet the pending bill proposes to lump them all together and strike an average under the guise of modernizing the parity formula in accordance with present-day conditions.

Any modernization of the parity formula, Mr. President, should be based upon a free market, not upon the restraints and controls of a war period or the encouragement lent to certain commodities during a war period. The so-called modernization is unfair to a great many commodities which were held down by controls during the war. It gives an undue advantage to others which were puffed up through subsidization to where they brought from 250 to 300 percent of parity.

Mr. President, the old parity farm program is at least understood at the present time. It permits every commodity to stand on its own legs. It does not depend upon the fluctuations of any other commodity. The proposed 10-year moving average, in my opinion—and I regret that my opinion is in conflict with that of so many experts on agricultureis violative of plain common sense. We have the great basic commodities, wheat, cotton, corn, tobacco, but other commodities are brought in through the proposed 10-year moving average. Here is the parity line. One commodity will be 5 percent above parity, and another will drop 10 percent below. If we raise the one below parity we increase the one above parity just as much as we raise the one below parity. Because of the way the formula is weighted, a commodity such as flaxseed oil, of which a very small amount is produced in this country, in spite of the fact that we have expended millions of dollars to encourage its production, would have just as much weight under the parity formula and would affect the price of all other agricultural commodities as much as would wheat, cotton, corn, and dairy products.

I submit that it is absolutely absurd to consider that a commodity such as grapefruit, important though it is, could when it fluctuates, change the price of wheat, as would be the case under the 10-year moving average.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, the parliamentary situation is that the committee bill is still open for amendment, is it not?

Mr. RUSSELL. The Chair can answer that question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is still open to amendment.

Mr. WHERRY. I should like to send to the desk three amendments which I ask to have printed and lie on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendments will be received, printed, and lie on the table.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, the period on which the formula rests is not a normal period. In establishing the old parity period, an earnest study was made to find the time when all the segments of American business, industry, and finance were on a comparable basis. We finally found it in the period from 1909 to 1914, inclusive. That is the period on which parity was based. Of course the parity period changes with the passing years. Seven of the 10 years on which the parity period is based by the pending bill were war years, when the prices of some commodities were depressed by controls and the prices of other commodities were encouraged to advance through the payment of subsidies.

Mr. President, it is not, I submit, a fair exchange. A 10-year moving average, in my opinion, is not the proper way to go about a revision of the parity program. The basic idea of the committee bill may be sound. I am frank to say that I do not thoroughly understand its approach to the problem, and I am convinced from the debate which has taken place on the floor that I am far from being the only Member of the Senate who does not understand it. There have been times when even those who should have the most intimate knowledge of it were not completely informed.

I say, again, Mr. President, that those who desire to do so can take the responsibility for pulling down the prices of wheat, corn, cotton, tobacco, or rice, as this bill would pull them down. The bill makes a substantial reduction in the parity prices of those commodities, and of a great many more. Not only does it bring down the parity price—

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. If no legislation on the subject is passed at all, would the present law as to parities remain in force?

Mr. RUSSELL. The present law fixing parity would remain in force, but we would not have the loan values that my amendment seeks to continue. The parity program would be the same, but commodity loans that provide a floor for farm prices would not be in existence.

Mr. CONNALLY. In other words, we would have a law but would have no money to carry it out?

Mr. RUSSELL. That is correct. The farmer could not get price support for his commodities.

So, Mr. President, not only does the bill reduce the parity price, but it reduces the loan value of the great basic commodities from 90 to 75 percent. There are those who say that the farmer is anxious to have his loan rate reduced. Those who wish to do so can delude themselves with that idea. I do not propose, by my vote, to bring about a reduction of 25 percent in the amount available for loans for farmers on these great basic commodities, as this bill proposes to do. The bill, if enacted, will undoubtedly bring about a great reduction in farm income. It will deprive the farmer of the benefit of a loan at a time when he needs it the most.

Mr. McFARLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. McFARLAND. Did I correctly understand the Senator to say that some farmers want the loan rate reduced?

Mr. RUSSELL. The Senator from Vermont [Mr. Aiken] has said that a great many farmers and farm organizations are supporting his bill.

Mr. McFARLAND. Is there anything to prevent farmers from borrowing less money than the maximum?

Mr. RUSSELL. There is nothing to prevent that at all.

Mr. McFARLAND. Did the Senator from Georgia ever hear of a farmer borrowing less than the maximum?

Mr. RUSSELL. No, and I do not think I ever shall.

Mr. President, I am opposed to discouraging production, as this bill will do. It will fail the farmer in his hour of need, when there are surpluses and prices have been beaten down. It will dccrease the value of the farmer's commodities.

I shall not commit myself to any program of this kind, in this shotgun fashion, in the closing hours of the Congress, when our minds are absorbed in innumerable details regarding other legislation. That is no reflection on the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. I have a great regard for the membership of that committee. I am proud of the fact that at one time I served as a member of that committee, and would be a member of it today, but for the fact that reorganization made it impossible for me to continue as a member of it. But, Mr. President, a committee of the Senate has to be an advisory body to the Senate. Merely because we appropriated a few thousand dollars to enable the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry to make a study, I, as one Senator, am not bound to accept the recommendation which the committee imposes.

Mr. McFARLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. McFARLAND. I regret that I have not been able to be present all the time the Senator from Georgia has been discussing the subject. I know he is well informed in regard to this question. He spent years in studying farm problems. Am I correct in my information that the aid to eitrus fruit growers would be substantially the same under the continuation of the present program as under the terms of the new bill?

Mr. RUSSELL. I do not think there is any question about that. The benefits of the citrus producers would be substantially the same stantially the same.

Mr. McFARLAND. How about potatoes?

Mr. RUSSELL. The same with potatoes. Under the substitute the benefits would be greater as to wheat, corn, and cotton.

Mr. McFARLAND. In Arizona we are interested in a great many of these products, but we are very substantially interested in the cotton program.

Mr. RUSSELL. Cotton, of course, would fare much better, and so would wheat and corn. The basic commodities would fare much better under the substitute amendment.

Mr. McFARLAND. In Arizon we are interested also in potatoes.

Mr. RUSSELL. In the case of potatoes there is no substantial difference.

Mr. McFARLAND. We grow grain in Arizona. As I understand the Senator, we would fare much better under the old program with reference to grain.

Mr. RUSSELL. The wheat parity is reduced by the committee bill, and the loan would be reduced in times of surplus.

Mr. McFARLAND. I thank the Senator.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, to sum up, we have not the time to give this bill the study to which it is entitled. I favor a long-range agricultural program, but it should not be adopted in such a way as to discourage production at a time when the American farmer is still being called upon to produce not only for our consumption at home, but to feed and clothe the world.

This bill would eventually reduce the farm income of the country. It would deny the farmer the benefits of legislation which has been enacted for him over a long period of years. To adopt the substitute which I propose would enable us to wind up the discussion of farm legislation for the time being without gambling on the fate of the complicated committee bill in a conference between the two Houses. We could come back at the next session of Congress and start early in the session, without the pres-sures of the present time, and work out a fair and equitable long-range farm program which would do violence to no farmer or group of farmers, or the consuming public of the United States.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT-AP-PROVAL OF BILLS AND JOINT RESOLU-

ACCEPTANCE OF CONSTITUTION OF IN-TERNATIONAL LABOR ORGANIZATION INSTRUMENT OF AMENDMENT—CON-FERENCE REPORT

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I submit a conference report on Senate Joint Resolution 117, providing for acceptance by the United States of America of the constitution of the International Labor Organization Instrument of Amendment, and further authorizing an appropriation for payment of the United States share of the expenses of membership and for expenses of participation by the United States, and I ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The conference report will be read.

The conference report was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 117) providing for acceptance by the United States of America of the Constitution of the International Labor Organization Instrument of Amendment, and further authorizing an appropriation for pay-ment of the United States share of the expenses of membership and for expenses of participation by the United States, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the House amendment insert the following:

"SEC. 2. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated annually to the Department of State-

"(a) such sums, not to exceed $1,091,739 per annum, as may be necessary for the payment by the United States of its share of the expenses of the Organization, as ap-portioned by the International Labour Conference in accordance with Article 13 (c) of the Constitution of the Organization; and

"(b) such additional sums, not to exceed $95,000 per annum, as may be necessary to pay the expenses incident to participation by the United States in the activities of the Organization, including-

'(1) salaries of the representative or representatives and alternates and appropriate staff, including personal services in the Dis-trict of Columbia and elsewhere, without regard to the civil-service laws and the Classification Act of 1923, as amended; services as authorized by section 15 of Public Law 600, Seventy-ninth Congress; under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of State may prescribe, allowances for living quarters, including heat, fuel, and light and cost of living allowances to persons temporarily stationed abroad; printing and binding without regard to section 11 of the Act of March 1, 1919 (44 U. S. C. 111), and section 3709 of the Revised Statutes, as amended; and "(2) such other expenses as the Secretary of State deems necessary to participation by the United States in the activities of the Organization: Provided, That the provisions of section 6 of the Act of July 30, 1946, Public Law 565, Seventy-ninth Congress, and regulations thereunder, applicable to expenses incurred pursuant to that Act shall be applicable to any expenses incurred pursuant to this paragraph (b) (2).

"SEC. 3. No person shall serve as repre sentative, delegate, or alternate from the United States until such person has been investigated as to loyalty and security by the Federal Bureau of Investigation."

And the House agree to the same.

ARTHUR H. VANDENBERG, H. ALEXANDER SMITH, Tom Connally,
Managers on the Part of the Senate.

DONALD L. JACKSON, FRANKLIN J. MALONEY, WIRT COURTNEY. Managers on the Part of the House.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the conference report?

There being no objection, the report was considered and agreed to.

REPORT ON VOICE OF AMERICA

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, from June 1 through June 4 a series of hearings on the Voice of America programs were held jointly by a subcommittee of the Foreign Relations Committee, under my chairmanship, and the investigations subcommittee of the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments. under the chairmanship of the distinguished junior Senator from Michigan. These hearings were held pursuant to a resolution offered by the distinguished senior Senator from Indiana authorizing an investigation of the radio-broadcast operations of the State Department under Public Law 402. As you know, prior to the introduction of the resolution, the Senator from Indiana called to the attention of the Senate certain objectionable material contained in a program called Know North America which was sponsored by the Voice of America.

The immediate purpose of these first hearings was to determine the responsibility for the criticized broadcasts, to the end that the vitally important service that should be rendered by the Voice of American program be strengthened and protected against future mistakes or

The investigation to date and hearings so far conducted establish the fact that a great deal of the material in the Know North America series was erroneous and in very bad taste. The excerpts quoted by the Senator from Indiana were representative of many other equally untrue and ill-chosen passages.

The single, predominate conclusion resulting from the investigation so far made is that foreign broadcasts sponsored and financed by the United States Government must be made on a quality basis. Our Government cannot continue to be responsible for disseminating trash. Neither the Congress nor the public will tolerate preventable mistakes which have the grave effect of holding the United States up to calumny and ridicule. The series of programs called Know North America were a serious blunder which tended to destroy any value which the other South American broadcasts may have had. Instead of promoting a better understanding of the United States in other countries and increasing mutual understanding, this series of broadcasts presented a false picture of the United tates to the detriment of the United States.

The final and unmistakable responsibility for this blunder rests with the Department of State. It not only failed adequately to supervise the contents of these programs in a reasonable manner. but it also failed to make even a cursory check to determine if the policies of the Government were being carried out. No check was made prior to, during or after the broadcasts to prevent this or similar blunders.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President. will the Senator yield?

Mr. SMITH. I shall be glad to yield. Mr. O'MAHONEY. My recollection is that the Appropriations Committee last year, in acting upon appropriations for the Department of State, deducted from that Department's estimates the sums which were recommended by the Bureau of the Budget for the purpose of supervision. Moreover, the law, as passed, distinctly instructed the State Department to abandon these broadcasts under the supervision of the State Department, and required that they should be carried on by private companies. When the Congress tells the Department of State it may not conduct its own programs, that the work must be delegated to private companies, and then takes away the money with which to employ the personnel to supervise the programs, it is very difficult for me to understand why the Department of State should be held responsible. It is true that these programs were not supervised, but the operation of the State Department was hamstrung by the action of Congress.

Mr. SMITH. I will say to the distinguished Senator that we shall continue our hearings and bring out all the facts. Although the funds of the State Department were reduced, I do not think the State Department or the National Broadcasting Co. have adequately carried out their responsibility.

An important collateral responsibility for the failure of these programs rests with the National Broadcasting Co. Its employees failed to appreciate their grave obligation to produce a program that would bring credit to the United States. The fact that the National Broadcasting Co. may have thought that the State Department was monitoring these programs does not excuse their failure adequately to check on the contents thereof over a long period of time. The attempt on the part of both the State Department and the National Broadcasting Co. to advance, if not as a cause at least as an excuse, the thought that there was a divided responsibility under the provisions of the legislation does not stand analysis. What actually existed was a dual responsibility which, if it had been exercised properly by both, should have doubled the supervision and have greatly lessened the possibility of such previous The position taken that the errors. criticized passages were only a small portion of the entire program and that the scripts in their entirety were of good quality is not, even if true, a material factor since one false or incorrect statement may ruin the entire effect of the program and undo all the good which may have been done by other broadcasts.

The firm purpose of the Voice of America program is to present the truth about the United States in terms understandable to the particular country to which the information is directed. This is a vitally important service that must be continued at this critical time. Congress has made it clear on many occasions that an honest, accurate and fair appraisal of our democracy and of our people presented in an enlightened and intelligent manner is the most effective way to compete with the perversions of Soviet propaganda. We want to stress again as we have done in the past that the responsibility—the complete responsibility for carrying out the will of Congress in an intelligent and enlightened manner rests with the State Department. No confusion in this regard should exist and this is especially true insofar as it relates to present and future broadcasts.

It should be clearly understood that the remarks I have just made are not intended as a condemnation of the whole Voice of America program. The idea and the general policies laid down by the Congress are sound. It is my hope that the blunders which have already occurred should not be magnified out of proper proportion because of the inexcusable administrative blunders in this instance.

On the other hand it would be equally unwise to minimize the errors of the past by blandly concluding that mistakes are bound to happen. Therefore our immediate recommendation is this: Those who accept the responsibility for speaking for America must be made to feel this responsibility. Those who accept the responsibility for speaking for America must be made to know that the stakes are high and that their blunders hold our country up to ridicule and disgrace. Our committees have stressed this recommendation to the State Department and we have their assurance that this will be done. We have the assurance of the State Department that enlightened and vigorous care will be given to qualify production in the field of radio broadcasts.

I desire to make it clear that the committees place no part of the blame for this unfortunate occurrence on Secretary Allen. The incidents subject to criticism occurred prior to his assuming his duties on March 30 as head of the Information Service. We are confident that under his able leadership these errors will be corrected.

It is the considered judgment of the two committees that the continuation of our investigation is essential. For this reason we will not file a report at this time but will continue an investigation and study of the Voice of America. At a future time we plan to file a joint report which will summarize the work done by the committees and we hope will report a great many vitally needed improvements.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, speaking as chairman of the Senate Investigations Subcommittee of the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, I wish to state that our subcommittee is in agreement with the views and recommendations made by the Senator from New Jersey concerning the Voice of America broadcasts. lems of adequately and intelligently portraying the story of the American way of life to foreign radio audiences is of utmost importance. Radio broadcasts to other peoples of the world sponsored by our Government must not contain halftruths, untruths, or worthless or silly information. The American public and the Congress has a right to expect that these broadcasts will be presented in an intelligent and enlightened manner. It is inexcusable for the State Department and the private broadcasting companies, with a large grant of public funds available to produce inferior programs.

I am firmly convinced that these overseas broadcasts must be programs of the highest quality. There appears to be too much stress placed on quantity; very little on quality. If such quality cannot be obtained in our broadcasts, they will likely do more harm than good. However, I am convinced of the necessity for such a program, if it is administered properly.

In order that we may be certain that in the future these broadcasts will be handled in an intelligent manner, I believe that the matter should receive the continued surveillance by the Congress. need for continuing our investigation is demonstrated by examples of other broadcasts which went out over the air in Voice of America programs. Representatives of the National Broadcasting Co. and the State Department attempted to point out that this particular series of Know North America broadcasts was a single instance of bad judgment. That. does not appear to be the case. staff, after examining transcripts of other State Department broadcasts, found that in another series of programs there was one on the city of Rochester. N. Y. This program portrayed the visit of a tourist to the city of Rochester. The narrator discussed the various aspects of Rochester, N. Y., and suddenly, about halfway through the program, he discovered that they were passing the Mayo Clinic.

I am sure that the present occupant of the chair [Mr. THYE] would know that the famous Mayo Clinic was in Rochester, Minn., and not in Rochester, N. Y., but the narrator portrayed it as being in Rochester, N. Y.

Thereafter, they carried out an elaborate reenactment of a scene of entering the Mayo Clinic and inspecting the buildings and watching the work of the clinic. This scene at the Mayo Clinic is supposed to have taken place in Rochester, N. Y. I cannot comprehend that responsible people, in a program which attempts to accurately portray the United States, could have made such a factual blunder.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. FERGUSON. Certainly.
Mr. O'MAHONEY. Was this script written by the staff of the broadcasting company?

Mr. FERGUSON. By the staff of the broadcasting company.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. And it was not supervised by the State Department?

Mr. FERGUSON. That is correct. In another program designed for European consumption we found that there was a regular gossip column type of broadcast concerning Hollywood. Recently this program broadcast a detailed description of a Hollywood wedding ceremony and the expensive wedding party of an oft-married movie star and the equally oft-married spouse. It is difficult to understand how a detailed description of such a lavish and expensive affair could promote better understanding of, or good will for, the United States.

Mr. President, these two additional cases merely illustrate the need for a continuing investigation. It is, therefore, the conclusion of both committees that we should continue to investigate and study other programs which are being beamed overseas. We will attempt to find out whether these programs are actually reaching the peoples to whom they are directed, and whether they have the intended effect on the listeners. Furthermore, we shall continue to examine the quality of these broadcasts and, if need be, shall report further to the Senate.

LONG-RANGE AGRICULTURAL PROGRAM

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 2318) to provide for a coordinated agricultural program.

Mr. ROBERTSON of Virginia. Mr. President, before undertaking to discuss either the Aiken long-range bill or the Russell substitute for temporary support prices, I wish to make a few general observations on the problems confronting farmers and those dependent upon agriculture for a living, who constitute about one-fifth of our entire population.

I wish to give to the Senate the estimate of the Bureau of Agricultural Economics about probable prices for this year and probable prices for next year, because I hope that what I have to say on that subject will have some bearing upon whether or not we should proceed at this late hour in the session, and with so little opportunity to know what is in this long-range program, and how it will affect our farmers.

Mr. President, what we do in the way of a long-range program, if it should be adopted by the Congress, will have a very vital effect, as the Senator from Georgia [Mr. Russell] has just said, upon the future of agriculture in this Nation.

In driving Adam and Eve from the Garden of Eden the angel with the flaming sword announced to them a fundamental principle of future life for all mankind: "In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread." Notwithstanding our remarkable progress in the physical sciences there is no alchemy by which man's three essential needs-food, clothing, and shelter-can be produced without labor. Either we sweat or someone sweats for us if we are to eat bread. The progress of civilization has been characterized by an effort to solve that problem either through the invention of labor-saving devices or the shifting of the burden to the shoulders of others.

Of all human needs food is the most essential. There has never been a period of recorded history in which many people did not go hungry and in which some did not die from starvation. In the Far East, hunger has been a perpetual prob-In the land of Goshen, normally flowing with milk and honey, famine during seven lean years was averted only by the prophetic vision of Joseph. In his African Game Trails, Teddy Roosevelt tells about natives falling on some wild animal he had killed and making a hearty meal of "blood and guts." And an ancient prophet of conservation tells us that the sands of the desert have covered once proud cities which nurtured a race that was unmindful of the good earth that fed it.

Western Europe to which we and a large portion of the world are indebted for the Christian religion, a system of law based upon reason and justice, literature, art, and science—in a word what we regard as modern civilization, has failed for several centuries to produce a food supply adequate for its needs. Domestic production has been supplemented by imports from colonial possessions and by the exchange of industrial products for food.

Many factors enter into our greatness, not the least of which has been our ability to produce not only an adequate food supply for ourselves but likewise a surplus for export to others. If the time ever comes when we shall be unable to feed ourselves it will be the harbinger of the day when we shall cease to be the most powerful Nation in the world.

During my 31 years of public service, which commenced in the State senate in January, 1916, my chief ambition and my major objective have been to make some contribution in Virginia and in the Nation to the preservation of our soil and our renewable natural resources and the reestablishment of farming as a satisfying as well as remunerative manner of life. As a State legislator I worked for improved roads that would take our farmers out of the mud, and for rural schools that would release the vigorous minds of rural children from the bondage of ignorance. I supported tax reforms that lifted State taxation from farm lands and transferred the burden of building and maintaining farm roads from the localities to the State. For 10 years as a member of the Tax Committee of the House of Representatives I worked for tax legislation that would give due recognition to the fact that for 100 years the per capita cash income of the farm group was far below that of the nonfarm group. And during my 15 years of service in the Congress I have supported the entire legislative program of the Farm Bureau Federation including the Hull reciprocal trade agreements program to recapture foreign markets for our surplus tobacco, cotton, wheat, apples, and to a lesser degree other farm products, lost to us by an international trade war started by the enactment in 1930 of the Smoot-Hawley protective tariff. And for 12 years as chairman of the House Select Committee on Wildlife Conservation I endeavored to convince some 20,000,000 sportsmen in the United States that the future of hunting and fishing was definitely linked to the conservation of our fields and forests. During that period I insisted that the CCC camps and the Soil Conservation Service include the conservation of wildlife resources in their programs of conserving timber and land, as a means of bringing the farm group and the nonfarm group closer together and improving the recreational opportunities

Since 1939 the net income of farmers, before taxes and before living cost rises are deducted, has increased 83 percent. That is a greater increase than has been enjoyed by any other single group in the Nation, and has given rise to the charge that farm prices are unreasonably high and constitute a major factor in the current inflation equation. The charge is not well founded. Between 1930 and 1939 the farm dollar was exchanged for the industrial dollar at a discount, leading some to believe that they had a vested right to purchase their food below the cost of production. Farm prices have risen more than other prices but they started in 1939 at a much lower level. Notwithstanding recent gains, the current per capita net income of our farmers is only 46 percent of that of the nonfarm group, and the purchasing power of the nonfarm group is above the prewar level of 1939. Our Nation is now consuming 12 percent more food than in 1939 and is consuming better food. If consumption of food at present prices was at the level of 1939 the percentage of the average income spent for that purpose would be 3 percent less than it was in the 1930-39 period. And the nonfarm group may have forgotten but our farmers will never forget that in the depression year of 1932 the net cash income of our farmers was only 23 percent of that of the nonfarm group. Nor will they forget that between May 1920 and January 1922 the cash income of farmers fell 60 percent. During the 1930 to 1938 depression thousands of farmers lost their land completely in foreclosure sales, while other thousands were able to retain their land by the sale of the fertility of its topsoil.

That is a situation which from the standpoint of future national defense as well as economic stability must not be permitted to recur. One-third of our topsoil is gone-exhausted or washed away-and we have an average of only 6 inches left. Our population will continue to increase and those now acquainted with the advantages of good food will always want it. We, plus Canada and Argentina, are the only three nations in the world with a surplus of food grain for export, and there will always be an export demand. Last but not least, the claim made by Thomas Jefferson more than 100 years ago, that our democracy can best be preserved through the preservation of the economic independence of our farmers, was never truer than it is today.

The depression which commenced in 1930 and lasted 8 years should have demonstrated to our industrial workers the extent to which full employment for them was dependent upon the purchasing power of the one-fifth of our population dependent upon agriculture. Sixty millions are now employed in industry and their output is 90 percent above the prewar level. In the years that lie ahead exports totaling not less than $10,000,000,000 and sustained purchasing power of the farm group will be required to furnish employment for 60,000,000 industrial workers.

In the Bible there are recorded prophecies which came true 600 years after they were made. If there be any living man who can prophesy with assurance what will happen even 6 months from now I do not know him. The best that any of us can do is to make a well-informed guess. Since those who work in our Bureau of Agricultural Economics are better informed than I on factors that will influence the future of agriculture I shall give the Senate today its guess on the current outlook. Senators will, of course, observe that in making its guess the Bureau inserts an abundance of ifs, buts, and other qualifications.

The Bureau anticipates that the level of farm prices for 1948 will be about the same as the record level of 1947 and that income from farming will show only a slight decline, but both will be increasingly subject to fluctuations resulting from uncertainties in the foreign situation

Employment, production, and incomes, which underlie domestic demand, set peacetime records in 1947 and only a sharp break, which is not expected now, could cause a big drop in domestic demand for farm products within the next year. But the possible results of inflationary pressure must not be overlooked. With prices continuing to rise and speculation increasing, our economy would become increasingly sensitive to shocks from such sources as shortages of basic materials, work stoppages, shifts in consumer spending and sudden changes in foreign balance. If these resulted in a further price boom followed by a reaction, the farmer would be a principal sufferer, just as he was after World War I. Farm product prices fall fast while interest on indebtedness, taxes, and many other elements entering into the cost of farming drop more slowly when a collapse occurs.

Foreign needs for American raw materials, including farm products, remain so critical that United States exports in 1949 will be limited almost entirely by the supply of dollars available.

We must remember that in 1946 the United States exports were more than $8,000,000,000 in excess of our imports. Even after deducting $3,000,000,000 of exports paid for by direct grants of public or private United States aid, that meant that foreign nations had to draw on their current earnings or reserves to the extent of more than $5,000,000,000 to pay for our export balance.

During 1947 we were exporting at the rate of $11,000,000,000 a year in excess of our imports. United States merchandise exports, particularly agricultural products, have declined this year from the 1947 record level. The value of agricultural exports in the first quarter of 1948 was lower than in any quarter of 1947 and about 13 percent below the 1947 quarterly average of $983,000,000. The European recovery program will tend to support agricultural exports during the remainder of 1948 but may not maintain them at first-quarter levels.

Foreign purchasers probably will not earn exchange much faster next year than in 1947 and their holdings of dollar assets and gold to make up the balance continue to be reduced. So, except to the extent that we find ways of increasing our import trade, the measure of our exports in 1949 will be largely the amount of Marshall-plan aid that is authorized.

The influence of this situation on farmproduct prices is evident when we consider that in 1946 the physical quantity of our agricultural exports was about two and a half times the 1940 level and the value was nearly five times the 1935-39 average. In 1947 the quantity was 5 percent above 1946 and higher prices made the value still higher. This year, however, the quantity is substantially lower to date and if current prospects for crop production abroad are realized, foreign takings of United States farm products will be reduced perhaps 15 to 20 percent below last year's record of $3,900,000,000.

Wheat exports, which accounted for about one-third of the total value of agricultural exports in 1947, will be considerably less than last year's record but exports of cotton, tobacco, and fruits, which declined last year, are likely to be increased.

Before the war, cotton and tobacco made up about two-thirds of the value of our agricultural exports and food the rest. Since the war, the proportions have been reversed. The action of Britain in stopping exports of American tobacco last year to save dollars gave us a sample of how seriously the market for nonfood products may be affected by policies adopted by foreign countries in meeting their exchange problems.

Considering the outlook from a price angle, the Bureau of Agricultural Economics says there should be little change from 1947 levels in 1948 and prices should remain high enough generally to assure farmers a profitable return for a maximum production. At the same time the agency predicts that prices paid by farmers will average as high or higher in 1948 than in 1947 so that the parity ratio will remain about the same.

Here is the price picture, as the Bureau sees it, for some specific classes of farm products in 1948:

Livestock and meats: Total cash receipts to farmers for sales of meat animals probably will be a record or near-record despite prospect that total marketings will be the smallest since 1942.

Dairy products: Average prices about the same or higher than in 1947.

Poultry and eggs: At least as high average prices for eggs in 1948 as in 1947. Prices of turkeys and chickens will tend to remain strong because of shorter meat supplies and high consumer incomes Oils and fats: European demand will remain strong because poor crops have increased food needs and fats and oils are fairly inexpensive sources of calories. Prices in the United States will remain high as long as these conditions continue. Prices to farmers for the 1947 peanut crop were the highest in 37 years of record, due largely to the export demand for oils. Some decline is expected but levels would have to drop about 50 percent to reach support levels and such a drop is regarded as unlikely to occur within the next few months.

With respect to wheat, corn, and feed grain it is likely that prices in 1948-49 will continue well above support levels.

Fruits: Prices in 1948 probably will be about the same as in 1947 although demand may be slightly weaker.

Potatoes: Demand in 1948 probably will be about as strong as in 1947. Prices early this year were higher than last winter and exceeded support prices.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, the Senator from Virginia is making a most able and excellent address on the agricultural situation, and there are so few Senators present to listen to him that I suggest the absence of a quorum, with the Senator's permission.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Virginia yield for that purpose?

Mr. ROBERTSON of Virginia. I yield for that purpose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Suggestion is made of the absence of a quorum. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eightyeight Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

The Senator from Virginia is recognized.

Mr. ROBERTSON of Virginia. Mr. President, today have heard we much discussion about tobacco. Before the war, exports of flue-cured tobacco were half of production; in 1946-47, they were nearly 40 percent of a record crop. Reduced exports are to be expected, because of exchange problems, but this may be offset to some extent by domestic use which is expected to continue at peak levels. Cigarette manufacture will set a record. Because of the large production of flue-cured tobacco for the last 2 years, stocks have increased, and in view of prospects for demand, supplies would have been excessive in 1948-49 if production had not been cut substantially. Supplies of fire-cured and dark air-cured tobacco also are larger than a year ago, and would have been burdensome if reduction of allotments had not assured lower production in 1948.

Without undertaking to prophesy price trends for next year, I do wish to endorse several factors mentioned by the Bureau as having a possible influence thereon. That the farmer would be a principal sufferer if the present boom should turn next year into a deflation is undoubtedly true. Using wholesale prices for 1926 as 100, wholesale prices advanced 27 percent more in 6 years after the commencement of World War I than in a similar period since the commencement of World War II. The former inflation was followed by a deflation which was most injurious to our farmers. With $110,000,000,000 of currency and bank check money in the hands of consumers no one can accurately predict at what exact point enough consumers would be priced out of the market to end the current boom. We know that the margin between purchasing power and prices is rapidly narrowing. The best antidote for our inflation is increased production, especially in such items as steel, coal, fertilizer, automobiles, electrical appliances and housing.

For the long pull with respect to export markets for farm products, the 102 multilateral trade agreements signed last year at the Geneva Trade Conference is an encouraging trend for the American farmer, notwithstanding the fact that the scheduled tariff reductions in many of them will not become immediately effective, although our reductions in the 15 agreements to which we are a party became immediately effective.

In this connection I would like to reiterate the view I expressed in connection with the recent discussion of exten-sion of the Reciprocal Trade Act as to the vital importance of this program to our economy.

To a large extent modern wars have been trade wars. If it be true, and I believe it is, that economic chaos is the spawning bed for communism and that desperate men are willing to exchange ballots for bread, what contribution to a lasting peace would be our help in the economic rehabilitation of the countries of western Europe if after rehabilitation we refuse to trade with them? In two disastrous world wars we have found that war is indivisible. Most of us are convinced that peace is indivisible; that the economic welfare of democracy elsewhere in the world is of major concern to us; and that President Roosevelt was right when he said in 1937: "Our frontier is on the Rhine."

While export markets are available to industry and agriculture alike and particularly valuable to such farm crops as tobacco and cotton, it must be borne in mind that our domestic market has been and always will be our principal market. Any worth-while farm program, therefore, must have as its major objective appropriate adjustments to the domestic market. It is already apparent, for instance, that we are producing more tobacco and more peanuts than we can profitably sell. Some of the land now devoted to those crops must be shifted to other types of production. On the assumption that domestic prices will fall before production costs go down more efficient use must be made of machinery. gas engines, and electric power. I do not know the current figures but a few years ago the average farm in Virginia contained only 50 acres. The owner of such a farm cannot afford to buy and operate the machinery he needs.

Agriculture has become industrialized and to successfully compete, the modern farmer must have modern equipment. I am told, for instance, that 34 years ago 32 minutes of man-labor were required to produce a bushel of corn. Today, only 6 minutes. This tremendous saving in time has been brought about mostly by improved power machinery, plus the improved varieties of seed, disease control, and better use of fertilizers. But from 1913 to 1915 only 29 percent of the cost of corn production was cash outlay. day it is 68 percent. Tractors, machinery, fuel oil, and the necessary reserve for depreciation on machinery make up 33 percent of the cost of producing corn today as compared with only 6 percent some 20 years ago.

During the past quarter of a century the problems of farm production have to a large extent been solved. We have not achieved the ultimate in efficient farm production because some do not apply known principles, others cannot finance the purchase of necessary equipment, and still others do not yet enjoy the benefit of rural electrification. But the farm problem which has not been solved and which merits our hest attention and best efforts is how to make farming a more satisfactory manner of life, how to combine with the vigor and independence of farm life the social and cultural advantages of city life. For more than half a century the trend has been away from the farm to the big industrial centers. Agriculture is so vital to the future of this Nation that we cannot afford to keep losing our brightest and most energetic boys and girls because farm life is distasteful to them. Farm families must have more money to invest in better housing and in the amenities of life. Work on the farm for the boy, work in the home for the girl, need not be ill-paid drudgery. We must seek to develop in rural sections better elementary schools and make available to farm boys and girls in secondary schools and in colleges training in the arts and sciences of modern life as well as in scientific agriculture. We must give support to Ruritan Clubs which seek to develop the social activities and the community spirit of their respective neighborhoods.

In these several ways we can lay foundation stones for the perpetuity of our democracy. We start with the fact that every farmer knows that there is no substitute for work. We start with the fact that every farmer believes in a system of private enterprise under which superior brains, character, and energy may expect a superior reward. It is not an eleemosynary system nor one that guarantees anyone anything. Communism guarantees the essentials of food, clothing, and shelter, but delivers those essentials at a low level and at the price of chains and slavery. Our farmers know that our system of private enterprise is one in which they may take some hard knocks, but in doing so they build strength, character, and self-reliance, and over and above all else they are free. The best collateral for the loans we have made in the past and the loans we shall make in the future to the British people is that they love personal freedom. The best monument that we can build to the memory of those who died in two world wars for our freedom will be to make farming in America a satisfying manner of life. "Let us never forget," said Daniel Webster, "that the cultivation of the earth is the most important labor of man, When tillage begins other arts follow. The farmers, therefore, are the founders of civilization."

Of course, Mr. President, entertaining the sentiments I have expressed on the general problems involved in farming and in agriculture generally, I believe in a long-range program, but I regret very much, with all due deference to the distinguished Senators who are sponsoring the Aiken bill, that I do not feel prepared to vote tonight on that bill, because, frankly, I do not know what is in it. I have studied the hearings, but the hearings were on a different bill. There were about 500 pages of hearings, and nearly all the witnesses had some suggestions or some criticisms to make of the first bill which was introduced. That bill was completely eliminated, and we have another bill of 96 pages. So far as I know, there have been no hearings on it, and I am sure the bill has not been sent over the country for study and comment, because I have not heard or received any comment from anyone in Virginia about what is in the new bill.

Mr. EASTLAND. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. THYE in the chair). Does the Senator from Virginia yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. ROBERTSON of Virginia. I yield. Mr. EASTLAND. The Senator speaks of the new farm bill. Is the Senator speaking of the Aiken bill?

Mr. ROBERTSON of Virginia. Of the new Aiken bill

Mr. EASTLAND. Is it not a fact that we are required to pass a farm bill providing for acreage reduction due to the policy of the Republican Party in enacting the Smoot-Hawley Tariff Act, raising the tariff barriers so high that foreign countries could not get dollar exchange with which to purchase Ameri-can farm products? The Republicanism tariff policy, which has impoverished American agriculture, which has drained off the wealth from American agriculture and siphoned it into eastern industrial areas, is what caused this bill to be brought forth. Because of those tariff walls foreign countries do not have exchange with which to buy the food and fiber they need.

Mr. ROBERTSON of Virginia. I have taken some time this evening-I hope not too much time-in discussing that very problem, and in undertaking to demonstrate that for 100 years the per capita income of the farm group has been lower than that of the nonfarm group, and that foreign markets have always been essential to our farmers because we produce more than we consume. I called attention to the fact that 40 percent of our cotton at one time was exported, from 40 to 50 percent of our tobacco, 20 percent of our apples, from 10 to 15 percent of our wheat. We have always needed the foreign markets, and of course if in the long run we do not receive imports from other countries from which they can obtain dollar exchange, they cannot buy from us. Our exports are running at the present time $5,000,000,000 more than our imports, and those exports are being financed to no small extent by loans and gifts. We know we cannot keep that up indefinitely. But I did want to say before I endedand I have already spoken longer than I had planned to speak-just a word or two as to why I preferred action at this time on the Russell substitute to action on the new and amended Aiken bill.

As I said, the amended Aiken bill may be a wonderfully fine bill, but the first bill was certainly not a good one. I pointed out that practically all the witnesses criticized it, and the committee abandoned it in toto. Then after the proponents had brought out the new bill, on which there was no testimony, they themselves have offered 10 pages of amendments—I counted, I believe, 47 amendments in the 10 pages; I might have missed some—and I could not help but think, when the distinguished Senator from Vermont was reminding us on the Democratic side that a Democratic President had just praised his bill in a speech made in California, that while he was doing so the President's Secretary of Agriculture was pleading with the Senator from Vermont to make changes in his bill, and, as I understood him yesterday, most of these 47 changes were made at the request of the Secretary of Agriculture because he was not satisfied with the form in which the bill was drawn.

So, Mr. President, there is my prob-A bill consisting of 96 pages has been brought before the Senate. When debate began on it 10 pages of amendments to the bill were adopted. Then when Senators on the floor indicated they were not satisfied, the sponsors of the bill accepted an amendment relating to potatoes, another amendment relating to apples, another relating to chickens, and the Senate adopted an amendment affecting tobacco, and, the Senator from Georgia [Mr. Russell] says, an amendment dealing with ducks was put in the bill.

Mr. MAYBANK. Dead ducks.

Mr. ROBERTSON of Virginia. I had overlooked that amendment. I guarantee, however, that with the possible exception of the distinguished Senator from Vermont, who drew both bills, and who agreed to the various amendments, and who prepared other amendments, there is not another Member of this distinguished body who could stand on the floor tonight and without reference to numerous notes tell us what is now in the bill and what it means. I note, for instance, the bill starts off in the first part of it to abolish all local committees of the Production and Marketing Association. It is proposed to combine production and marketing with soil conservation and have an entirely new setup. That might be wise; I do not say it is not wise; I merely say that I am not prepared to vote, in effect, in the dark on taking a step such as that. There are 2.500 individuals in the production and marketing units of Virginia who handle acreage control, price support, and things of that kind. We have soil-conservation districts and men who are engaged in that work. We have the Extension Service, and men engaged in that work.

There is one thing I have noticed in the new bill, which apparently is in the right direction, and that is that it provides that in the future all educational work shall be under the supervision and direction of the Extension Service. I think that is a good provision.

I am not condemning the bill, Mr. President, because it would not be fair for me to condemn something I do not understand. I have tried to understand and have a little knowledge of what I am called upon to vote on. If I did not have to vote on the measure one way or another it would be a good thing; but I am obliged to vote, and being obliged to vote I want to say that I prefer to vote for what I know about, and I do know about the existing plan. Under the amendment of the Senator from Georgia that plan is to be continued in substantially its present form for 2 years. Perhaps the Senator from Georgia [Mr. Russell] will accept an amendment to make it less than 2 years, because June 30 is not a good time to end a support program. But I do know what that program means, Mr. President. It continues 90 percent of parity for certain basic products and a lower percentage for others.

Mr. President, I have given the Senate the statistics which were furnished me today by the Bureau of Agricultural Economics that prices for this year, and so far as it could tell, well into next year, will run about as they are now, and the Bureau cannot anticipate that any major crop will fall below parity. If that be true, and since Congress will reconvene next January, why should we try tonight to adopt a long-range permanent program which we have never had before, which we do not understand, from which we may not be able to get away once we adopt it, and which, as the Senator from Georgia has said, may result, when our farmers are asking for bread, in handing them a stone. The safe, the prudent thing to do is to continue the present support program for the farmers for a limited period, and then when Congress meets next year, if the bill, as amended, is the answer to the farmers' prayer for permanent support for agriculture, we can receive the testimony of experienced witnesses and know what we are doing.

Mr. President, I discussed this matter for a long time with my good friend, AUGUST H. ANDRESEN, of Minnesota, with whom I served in the House. He told me. "We will not take your Aiken bill." Then I discussed the matter with Representative Hope, of Kansas, whom I have known for many years, who is chairman of the Committee on Agriculture of the House. He said, "We will not take your Aiken bill." Then the former chairman of the committee, and now the ranking minority member, Representative John FLANNAGAN, of Virginia, came over to the Senate floor and told me, "The House will not take the Aiken bill." In view of that, does my distinguished friend, the Senator from Vermont, mean to say to us, "We are going to adjourn Congress with-out any relief for farmers at all?" The House will not take this bill. Will the Senator from Vermont, in view of that situation, say, "We are not going to take the House bill," thus winding up in a deadlock and leaving the farmers between the upper and the nether millstones? I hope that is not the Senator's

Mr. President, in view of the fact that the House will not take the Senator's bill. in view of the fact that there are so many Members of this body who want to help the farmers, but do not want to take a leap in the dark, I hope the Senator will join with us in putting through in the present session the House provision for a temporary continuance of the support program, and let us leave alone the longrange program which may come up for action next January.

Mr. MAYBANK obtained the floor. Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. MAYBANK. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska for any questions he may wish to propound.

Mr. WHERRY. There was some discussion a while ago with reference to what the Senate might take up next. I am not sure why that question was asked, but I should like to say that, if it makes any difference in the matter of obtaining unanimous consent, I should like to propound to the proponents and the opponents of the pending measure the following question: If they feel that ample debate has been had on the pending bill, or can be had by a certain hour-and I would suggest not later than 8 o'clock—can we then conclude the debate, and begin voting on the pending amendment in the nature of a substitute, and any amendments thereto which are germane, and then proceed to vote on final passage? Do the proponents and opponents of the measure feel that such an agreement can be entered into?

Mr. ROBERTSON of Virginia. Since I was the one who made the request, and since the Senator from Nebraska says he does not know why I made it, I should like an opportunity to explain why I made it.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President-Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I have the floor, and I yielded to the Senator from Nebraska to propound some questions.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, if I may be permitted to submit my unanimous-consent request, I think we shall not have to argue. I shall be glad to enter into a unanimous-consent agreement that, immediately following the vote on all the amendments and the bill now under discussion, if we can agree on an hour, the Senate proceed to consider Calendar No. 1387, Senate bill 2589, which is a bill to provide for extension of the terms of office of the present members of the Atomic Energy Commission. The idea is that it would expedite matters if we could take up this other legislation tonight. I do not want to cut off debate. If there are Senators who feel that we should continue the debate on the pending bill, I would not want to shut off debate at all. But I feel that if the proponents and the opponents could agree on an hour-say 8 o'clock, or whatever hour is reasonable, if it is early enough-we could then proceed immediately to take up the Atomic Energy Commission bill.

Mr. MAYBANK. I should like to say to the distinguished acting majority leader and to the distinguished Senator from Iowa [Mr. HICKENLOOPER] that I am in thorough agreement with their desire to bring up the Atomic Energy Commission bill. I have a long speech on oleomargarine, in addition to my extemporaneous speech on cotton, which I shall be glad to place in the RECORD. In deference to my good friends from Nebraska and Iowa I do not wish to delay the proceedings.

Mr. WHERRY. I deeply appreciate the Senator's cooperation.

Let me now submit a suggestion to the Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL]. Calendar No. 1387, Senate bill 2589, is a bill to provide for the extension of the terms of office of the present members of the Atomic Energy Commission. Consideration of that bill would be a part of the unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. BALDWIN. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, there is on the calendar Senate bill 1949, a bill providing for an increased salary payment to postal employees. I believe that the bill has great merit. I should like to have the assurance of my distinguished friend from Nebraska that we can get some action on that bill before the Congress

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President. I have the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Carolina has the floor.

Mr. MAYBANK. I had the floor, and yielded to my friend from Nebraska. The distinguished Senator from Connecticut stated that there was a bill on the calendar providing for an increased salary payment to postal employees. That bill provides for more than a salary increase for postal employees, does it not?

Mr. BALDWIN. I believe not. Senate bill 1949 provides for an increase in salary payment to postal employees.

Mr. MAYBANK. Postal employees only?

Mr. BALDWIN. That is correct. Mr. MAYBANK. I am in thorough accord with the wish of my friend from Connecticut. However, the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES] is the sponsor of a bill in behalf of navy yard workers. There are also other bills of that nature which should have consideration.

Mr. BALDWIN. I concur in the statement of the Senator from South Carolina. I believe that all the salaryincrease bills should be considered before we adjourn.

Mr. MAYBANK. Of course, they

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I am in this position: If we are to adjourn on Saturday, we cannot guarantee which bills will receive consideration. However, I think I can assure the distinguished Senator from Connecticut that that is one of the pieces of legislation which will be brought before the Senate in time to get action in both Houses. I cannot guarantee that. I cannot guarantee anything. We can expedite the business of the Senate if we can obtain unanimousconsent agreements and reach a vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the unanimous consent request of the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. RUSSELL, Mr. President, I did not understand what time had been suggested.

Mr. WHERRY. I did not suggest a definite time. I had in mind perhaps 7:20, 7:30, or 8 o'clock.

Mr. RUSSELL. It is now 25 minutes past 7. We could not very well turn the clock back. I would agree to vote on the substitute and conclude the debate thereon by 8:30, the time to be evenly divided. But there are three amendments which I intend to propose; and in the event the substitute should not be accepted, I should like to have 3 or 4 minutes briefly to explain those amend-

Mr. WHERRY. I am sure there will be no objection to that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the unanimous-consent request to vote on all pending amendments at 8:30?

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, reserving the right to object-

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I had reserved the right to object. I want to understand exactly what I am agreeing to before I withdraw the reservation.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Georgia permit me to suggest a unanimous-consent agreement which I think is in keeping with his wishes?

I ask unanimous consent that at the hour of 8:30 the Senate proceed to vote on the pending question, which is the substitute for the committee amendment; and that thereafter the Senate proceed to vote on any amendments which are germane to the bill. I am satisfied that the distinguished Senator from Georgia will have no difficulty in obtaining 5 minutes on each amendment to explain his amendments so that Senators may know what they are voting upon. Then we can proceed to a final vote on the bill.

After a final vote on the bill has been had, a part of the unanimous-consent request is that the unfinished business be made Senate bill 2589, Calendar 1387, a bill to provide for extension of the terms of office of the present members of the Atomic Energy Commission.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, it would be agreeable to vote at 8:30 on the pending substitute, with the understanding that the three amendments which I intend to propose shall not be debated for longer than 10 minutes, the time to be equally divided between the Senator from Georgia and the Senator from Vermont. At the conclusion of the vote on the amendments the Senate would vote on final passage of the bill, and would then proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 2589, Calendar 1387, the bill to provide for extension of the terms of office of the present members of the Atomic Energy Commission. I would agree to that.

Mr. WHERRY. Does the Senator wish to limit amendments to those which are germane to the subject matter?

Mr. RUSSELL. Under my suggestion, no amendments would be offered save the three to which I refer, which have already been printed and are lying on the table.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I make the further request that no amendments which are not germane shall be offered to the Atomic Energy Commission bill.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, let us not get so far out that I do not know what I am doing. I have no objection to that request.

Mr. MAYBANK. I submit the request, Mr. President.

Mr. WHERRY. I have an amendment which I should like to present. May I have 5 minutes to discuss it?

Mr. AIKEN. Certainly.

Mr. RUSSELL. If a rule as to germaneness of amendments is to be adopted, I should like to modify it to this extent, that any amendment which may be proposed may be debated for not longer than 10 minutes, the time to be divided equally between the author of the amendment and the Senator in charge of the

Mr. WHERRY. That is satisfactory to me.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I have a number of amendments to present to the amendment offered by the Senator from

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, let me suggest that if the time is evenly divided, there will be half an hour for each side.

Mr. LUCAS. In view of the vote this afternoon, it is very possible that the amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia will be accepted.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, have

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Carolina has the floor.

Mr. MAYBANK. I decline to yield further. The Senator from Illinois has suggested that the adoption of the amendment of the Senator from Illinois might make possible the acceptance of the amendment of the Senator from Georgia. I hope that the amendment of the Senator from Georgia will be adopted, because it would benefit the cotton farmers, the cotton ginners, the cotton buyers, the cotton workers, and everyone except the New Orleans and New York Cotton Exchanges and the Chicago Board of Trade.

Mr. IVES. Mr. President-Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I decline to yield further.

Mr. IVES. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina field for a parliamentary inquiry?

Mr. MAYBANK. I yield.

Mr. IVES. I am trying to ascertain the request which has been made by the distinguished acting majority leader. As I understand, the request applies to amendments to the substitute amend-

Mr. WHERRY. The unanimous-consent request is to vote on the substitute at 8:30, and thereafter to allow 10 minutes for each amendment which may be proposed to the bill, and that the time be equally divided between the proponents and the opponents of the measure.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Chair wishes to inform the Senator from Nebraska that if the substitute amendment is adopted, that will preclude the offering of any other amendment, inasmuch as then there will be a substitute bill.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, the Chair is entirely correct. For that reason I stated in my unanimous-consent request that in the event the substitute amendment be rejected, the rule as to amendments will apply.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I so amend my request, certainly.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the unanimous-consent request to vote on the substitute amendment at 8:30 p. m.?

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, let me say that I may agree to the request, because I think it is proper. But I wish to state, as I started to say a moment ago, that in view of the vote which was had this afernoon on the amendment of the Senator from Kentucky, it seems to me there is a possibility that the amendment of the Senator from Georgia in the nature of a substitute for the committee amendment might prevail. Mr. President, I have some amendments which perhaps the Senator from Georgia will agree to: they are amendments which I believe would help his substitute amendment. That is what I wish to discuss. Even at this late hour I do not wish to be barred from discussing those amendments, because it seems to me that the matters to which they relate are important.

We have heard a great deal about what is contained in the so-called Aiken bill. but we have not heard very much about what is contained in the Russell amendment in the nature of a substitute.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, if that is the case, there is no possibility of obtaining a unanimous-consent agreement. I assume. I assumed that if the substitute amendment were adopted, that would bring all these matters to an end. However, if the Senator from Illinois wishes to have more than 10 minutes on each of his amendments-

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, it might not take me more than 10 minutes on all of my amendments, but I wish to be able to discuss them with the Senator from Georgia when I have an opportunity to obtain recognition

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the unanimous-consent request?

Mr. LUCAS. I object.

Mr. WHERRY. Then, Mr. President, let me make another request. I ask Senators please to be patient, for I am trying to expedite the handling of this matter. Will the Senator from Georgia agree to the proposed unanimous-consent agreement, if it is modified so as to provide for a vote at 9 o'clock, so that it will be agreed that the vote on the amendment in the nature of a substitute will be had at 9 o'clock, and that between now and then the amendments to the substitute may be offered? At that time we certainly should be able to vote on the substitute if it is amended.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, let me propound a further inquiry. Is it the intention of the acting majority leader to have the Senate take up the atomicenergy bill tonight and conclude action on it tonight?

Mr. WHERRY. I should like to have action on it concluded tonight, if possible; but if not, we would make it the unfinished business, and carry it over until

Of course we have already arranged to begin to call the calendar when the Senate convenes tomorrow.

Mr. LUCAS. Very well, Mr. President; if the Senator is agreeable to having the vote taken one-half an hour later than the time first proposed in the requested agreement, I shall have no objection.

Mr. WHERRY. Then, Mr. President, I submit the request as it has been stated by the Senator from Georgia, except to have the hour for voting 9 o'clock instead of 8:30.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request as now presented?

Without objection, it is so ordered. Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I have no objection to the agreement. I assume that the time will be equally divided.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Georgia a question. As I understand, the situation under the agreement, we shall have half an hour and the other side will have half an hour on the amendments. Is that correct?

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, it is my understanding that the time will be divided equally between now and 9 o'clock, and that at least 30 minutes will be allowed to the Senator from Illinois for his amendments, and that that time also will be equally divided.

Mr. MAYBANK. In other words, we have half an hour.

Mr. RUSSELL. The Senator is correct. REPEAL OF THE OLEOMARGARINE TAXES

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, in connection with the oleomargarine situation, I have prepared somewhat lengthy remarks, and I now ask consent to have them printed at this point in the

There being no objection, the remarks were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. President, the Eightieth Congress seems bent on proving once again that in this democracy the will of the people does not always prevail and even the will of an overwhelming majority of Congress can be thwarted by a few.

The people have made it abundantly clear that they want the Federal antimargarine laws repealed. I do not refer merely to the Gallup poll which showed that 69 percent of the people of this country favor repeal while only 15 percent oppose it and which also revealed that a majority of the farmers of this country favor repeal. I refer to the thousands of letters from housewives and workingmen and merchants-from individuals all over the United States-which, week after week and day after day, have poured into the offices of Members of the Senate and the House asking that these discriminatory laws be removed from the statute books. I refer to the testimony in the House and Senate hearings on this subject by official representatives of organizations of wholeale and retail grocers, settlement houses, hospitals, farmers, veterans, labor, women's groups, consumers, and many others—all overwhelmingly in favor of repeal. I refer to hundreds of editorials from newspapers in every State in the Union, weeklies and dailies, large and small which, regardless of whether they are conservative or liberal, Republican or Democrat, have united in demanding an end to these vicious laws.

Congress has made its attitude abundantly clear, too. Nearly 2 months ago, the House passed H. R. 2245, sponsored by my distinguished fellow South Carolinian, Representative MENDEL RIVERS, the bill to repeal all the Federal taxes and license fees on margarine, by a vote of 260 to 106. the very thorough debate in the House on this issue more than a dozen amendments were offered which would have modified or diluted the repeal measure. Every one of them was voted down. The House had, ear-lier, demonstrated its attitude when 218 Members took the rare step of signing a petition to discharge one of their most respected committees-the Agriculture Committeefrom further consideration of H. R. 2245 after that committee had followed its tradi-tional practice of tabling all margarine tax repeal measures.

Republicans and Democrats, northerners, westerners, and southerners, representatives from States with large dairy interests as well as those from States with cotton and soybean interests, and representatives from large urban and small-town areas, too, all joined to make the position of the House un-mistakably clear—the House of Representatives wants these antimargarine laws repealed.

When the bill came to the Senate this body was so zealous for repeal that it over-ruled its distinguished President and by a vote of 47 to 30 referred H. R. 2245 to the Senate Finance Committee in order that measure might have prompt consideration there so that we might be able to act on it before this Congress adjourned. The Finance Committee held full hearings on H. R. 2245. Both sides had every opportunity to state their positions, clearly and fairly. And what was the result?

The Senate Finance Committee reported H. R. 2245 favorably, with one strengthening amendment. The vote was 12 to 0. I want to emphasize that point, for as you know, there are Members on the Finance Committee from States with large dairy interests, and yet there was not one single vote on that committee against the antimargarine laws.

The attitude of the whole Senate on this issue was further demonstrated on Tuesday of this week when this body voted 57 to 26 to bring up H. R. 2245 for consideration.

I think the record shows convincingly that for every Member of the Eightieth Congress who favors retention of the Federal antimargarine laws there are two or more who favor repeal. I do not believe that even the most avid supporter of the butter lobby's position would deny that statement.

Yes, the people favor repeal of the Federal antimargarine laws—overwhelmingly. The Eightieth Congress favors repeal of the Federal antimargarine laws—overwhelmingly. And yet—it would appear—those laws are not going to be repealed.

Why? I think we are entitled to ask that question and I think the people of this country are entitled to an answer.

We are told that the Senate doesn't have time to consider the question, that Congress must adjourn this week.

I am not satisfied with that answer and I don't think the people of this country will be satisfied with it.

This is legislation by the clock and it is the wrong way to legislate. The leadership of the Congress should be reminded that we are the servants of the people and not independent entrepreneurs. We are, to state it bluntly, hired to represent the people here and to carry on their business here. We have an obligation to the people who sent us here to finish our job before we quit.

I do not delude myself that what I say now will change the minds of the GOP leadership. If they decree it, I suppose we shall quit this week without action on H. R. 2245 and other important matters. And apparently they are determined to decree it.

But even if we quit this week there is no proper reason for not considering H. R. 2245. know that there are Members who have threatened to filibuster this bill. But these same Members are among those most eager to adjourn Saturday night. Let them talk then, until the one desire-to quit-overcomes the other—to defeat by talk—this margarine tax repeal measure. We will at margarine tax repeal measure. We will at least learn then how strongly these Members believe in the absolute necessity of quitting now whether the business of the Senate is completed or not.

I don't believe there is any such necessity, although I am as eager as anyone here to go home. But I don't want to leave until we finish our job. And one of our jobs is to repeal the Federal antimargarine laws.

It is said that there are more important measures to consider than H. R. 2245. In one sense that may be true. Europe will not go hungry, Government bureaus will not be deprived of funds, our foreign trade will not suffer—if we fail to act on H. R. 2245. But the importance of this measure should not be minimized. This is not just a bill to remove a few Federal taxes and license fees. That is not insignificant in itself, but it is only a part—the smaller part of the real issue.

That issue is one of principle and of justice—and it strikes at the fundamental concepts upon which this country was founded and upon which, with a few unfortunate deviations, it has flourished for 160 years. How many tributes have been paid to our free-enterprise system during all these years! How many glowing tales of achievement under a system of free American markets where initiative and skill were justly rewarded and where the economic privileges and royal franchises of European oligarchies were no more! Our proudest boast from childhood has been that we Americans believed in fair play.

But for margarine—for the industry, for the farmers who grow the ingredients of margarine, for the hundreds of thousands of wholesale and retail merchants who sell it, enterprise has not been free. Margarine has entered the market shackled and restricted. The initiative and skill which produced margarine, and has steadily improved it, has been impeded at every step. Butter, its competitor, has been granted economic advantages unique in our Federal legislative history. And "fair play" has been only a mockery as far as margarine is concerned.

No other American product is discriminated against by the Federal Government in this way. For a hundred years before 1886, when the first Federal antimargarine law was enacted, we had avoided the economic sins of our European forebears. We had never before erected an internal tariff against one American product for the alleged protection of another. Indeed, one of the chief differences—one of the great progressive improve-ments of the constitutional system over the earlier Articles of Confederation-was that it opened the way for free trade within the 13 States. No longer could Virginia impose import duties on the products of Massa-chusetts or Pennsylvania on those of the Carolinas. Largely as a result of this free internal trade system, greater economic and industrial progress was achieved in this country in a few generations than had ever been achieved before in the long history of man. It is little wonder then that those who proposed the first Federal antimargarine law proposed in 1886 were apologetic on this They admitted, in the words of Senator Miller of New York—who sponsored that measure in the Senate—that this was "a new species of legislation" in this country. Mr. President, it was a "new species" and it was a shameful one for it had as its frank and avowed purpose—admitted freely over and over again—the crippling or the de-struction of one legitimate American industry for the benefit of another and compet-ing American industry. I could fill the Congressional Record with these admissions of the butter lobby and its spokesmen as to the true purpose of the antimargarine laws. But I shall not take the time. It is all there for you to see in the RECORD. shall mention only a few samples. Miller said that he wanted the bill to protect the dairy industry of New York and he wanted it even if it went so far as to "exterminate the rival industry, if necessary." Other Congressmen repeated this view. In 1902, when the original law was amended to place a prohibitive 10 cents a pound tax on artificially colored margarine, the testimony of the butter interests before the House Agriculture Committee was so shockingly barefaced on this point that it provoked the chairman of that committee, Representative Wadsworth, of New York, and six other members, to issue a minority report in which they said:

'We do not believe that Congress ought to ruin one American industry to benefit another. And that is just the object sought by these men by their own confession. * * The minority believes it to be class legislation of the most pronounced kind and it would establish a precedent which, if followed, would create monopolies, destroy competition, and militate against the public good."

In 1932, when-the earlier laws having failed to destroy the margarine industry— the butter interests secured another amend-ment applying the 10 cents per pound tax to naturally colored yellow margarine, Sen-ator Townsend, who led the fight for that amendment in the Senate, admitted what none can doubt: "The record of the proceed-ings of Congress," he said, "will convince "will convince any reader that the intent of the enactment was to protect the dairy interests." That is still the intent of the antimarga rine laws. It has not changed one iota. late as 1941 the Dairy Record, a magazine representing the dairy industry, said: "The dairy industry * must never rest until the manufacture and sale of oleomar-garine have been outlawed in this country." And testimony of the butter interests in the recent Senate hearings included a demand from John Brandt, president of the Land O' Lakes Creameries, for an increase in the taxes of margarine. "That," said Mr. Brandt, "is the only way to do the job."

I suggest that the job is already being done on the American people and the American economic system. It is not a pretty job. It smells to high heaven. As A. L. M. Wiggins, the Under Secretary of the Treasury, told the Finance Committee, these laws are not revenue laws or even regulatory laws. They are "punitive instruments."

This is the situation, then, beyond quibble or question: 62 years ago Congress passed legislation designed to protect one American industry at the expense of another-to give an advantage in the competitive market to butter over margarine. This punitive legis-lation has survived until today—penalizing one domestic industry for the benefit of another, one group of American farmers for the advantage of another, one group of consumers-the low income group-while another group-those who can afford butterwas left untouched.

I doubt that there is anything that Congress could do today more important than removing this odious precedent, this gross corruption of our basic principles, from our statute books. If this precedent were followed, cotton could with justification de-mand discriminatory taxes on rayon; leather could rightfully ask for punitive taxes on could rightfully ask for pulletve that's plastics; lard could justify a claim to similar protection from shortening, and so on, almost without end. If it were followed we have the characters. would soon find ourselves back in the chaotic economy of the days of the Articles of Confederation or of some of the European states in more recent times. We would Balkanize our economic system.

Now, not next year, is the time to remove this dangerous precedent from our laws. This is primarily a question of principle and of our devotion to the ideals of government and economics to which we pay such constant lip service. The excuses that have been given for not acting now on this issue merely lend credence to the charge of insincerity. We can prove our sincerity only by repealing these laws.

I referred to the statement of the Under

Secretary of the Treasury that the anti-margarine laws were "punitive instruments." This, it appears, has been the view of the Treasury Department, which is charged with Their enforcement, for many years.

Whom do they punish, Mr. President?
They punish the 5,000,000 American farm people who grow cotton—and whose cotton—seed is, in many cases, their only unmort-gaged crop. The discriminatory burdens on margarine are burdens on these needy farmers and their families, for margarine is the largest and most favorable market for their cottonseed oil.

During 1947, 53 percent of all the fats and oils used in margarine came from cottonseed. Thirty-two percent, almost one-third of all the cottonseed oil produced, went into margarine. During the first 4 months of 1948 margarine has consumed approximately 40 percent of the available cottonseed oil.

No one can say how much more margarine would be sold or how much more cottonseed oil would be used by the margarine industry, if the antimargarine laws were repealed. But we can all agree that it would But we can all agree that it would be considerable.

Every day, therefore, that we delay action on H. R. 2245 we deprive these needy people of their rightful access to a free market.

Who else is affected by these punitive laws? I think it would be far easier to say who is not-if there are any who have escaped? Certainly, the 600,000 farmers who grow soy-beans—and their families—are directly harmed by the antimargarine laws. For margarine constitutes the second largest market for soybean oil. During 1947, according to official Government statistics, 37 percent of all fats and oils used in margarine came from soybeans. Soybean farmers and their families were able to buy more of the good things of life because this market existed in margarine but they were deprived of part of their rightful return from their crops by the discriminatory burdens imposed upon margarine by the Federal Government. How much more the margarine market would mean in cash income to these farmers if these burdens were removed is again a matter of conjecture, but we know that it would probably be significant.

These taxes and license fees imposed on margarine are particularly punitive with regard to wholesale and retail food dealers. Less than 1 retail food unit ir 2 in this country handles any margarine at all and only 1 in 100 handles yellow margarine. The reason is simple: The retail dealer must pay an annual license fee of $6 a year in order to sell uncolored margarine; if he sells yellow margarine he must pay $48 a year. In addition, he must keep records and file reports and comply with various burdensome regulations on the handling and sale of the product—all under penalty of heavy fine or imprisonment for violations.

The burdens are multiplied for the wholesaler who handles margarine. He must pay an annual license fee of $200 to sell the uncolored product; $480, if he sells yellow and there is a multitudinous list of regulations with which he must comply. Testimony before the Senate Finance Committee revealed that it costs the average wholesale establishment between $60 and $100 a month for clerical help alone to keep abreast of margarine law requirements. There are 11 separate reports which must be made every month by the wholesaler under There are, in addition, seven separate records which must be kept available for inspection at all times. There is a fine of $50 to $500 or imprisonment for 30 days to 6 months for each violation of the requirements as to any of these 18 records and re-ports. The wonder is not that so few wholesalers handle margarine under these conditions but that any at all can be found to brave the mass of license fees, records, re-ports, and threatened penalties imposed for the sole purpose of restricting, crippling, and punishing the margarine industry.

Who else is victimized by these "punitive instruments"—the antimargarine laws? The American people—or at least the 80 percent of them that, according to a recent survey, now use some margarine. Thirty million American families are consumers of margarine. Many of these are recent converts having abandoned butter when it skyrocketed in price. Some of them use only a little margarine. By far the largest consumption is by low-income people who cannot afford butter—even for special occasions. Since the taxes imposed upon margarine are inevitably passed on to consumers, their burden falls heavlest upon those who are least able to bear it. But the burden is not limited to the amount of the taxes and license fees. This is only a small part of it.

The contribution of the antimargarine laws to the high cost of living has been most damaging to the American people in their effect on competition within the industry. The taxes, license fees and regulations imposed on margarine have resulted in restricting its manufacture and distribution. They have discouraged the investment of new capital in the margarine industry and at every level, manufacturers, wholesalers, and retailers, they have restricted competition. Such restriction, of course, tends to keep prices higher. Again, it is the consumer—especially the low-income consumer—who pays.

Repeal of the antimargarine laws would, in the long run, increase competition within the margarine industry and would inevitably tend to bring about reduced prices to consumers.

But the burden on consumers is by no means wholly economic. The antimargarine taxes and license fees are levied on the health of the people, too. No one—unless he is completely blind to the truth—questions the nutritional values of margarine today. It is comparable in every way to high quality butter. The expert testimony from nutritional experts, medical groups, laboratory scientists, and others is overwhelming on this point. And yet the antimargarine laws prevent margarine from filling the table fat needs of the American people—needs which butter cannot fill. Twenty years ago, in 1927, the combined consumption of butter and margarine in the United States was 20.4 pounds per person. Last year it was 16.2 pounds per person, which means that on an average the American people got 4 pounds less table fat last year than in 1927. even the 1927 level was low from a desirable nutritional standard. The Bureau of Human Nutrition and Home Economics recommended an annual per capita consumption of butter alone of 35 pounds as "an adequate diet at moderate cost." And yet, despite increasing margarine consumption in recent years, the table-fat deficit in the diet of the American people is rapidly growing. The reason is not hard to find. Butter production dropped nearly one-third between 1936 and 1946. Margarine, because of the restrictions imposed upon it by law, could not fill the gap. Yet the gap should be filled if we are to achieve our health goals as a people.

This Congress, if it adjourns without passing H. R. 2245, will be prolonging this nutritional deficit. It will be preventing the margarine industry from properly filling the vital health needs of millions of our people—especially among the low-income groups.

There are special groups of less fortunate people who are particularly affected by the antimargarine laws: the sick in hospitals, the aged in old-folks homes, the children in orphanages, and all others in institutions of this kind. The Federal antimargarine laws impose a tax of $600 per year on restaurants, boarding houses, hospitals, and all other institutions, not publicly owned, which mix yellow coloring into margarine. Under the law they are regarded as manufacturers. As a result, many of these institutions, operating on a limited budget in this inflationary period, have been serving bread dry or with an occasional bit of apple butter or jelly to sick and unfortunate people. Most of these institutions cannot afford to buy butter and, due to the Federal antimargarine laws, they do not buy margarine, either. It is understandable then why the American Hospital Association, representing 4,000 hospitals and 85 percent of the Nation's generalhospital beds, and the National Federation of Settlements, representing 211 settlement houses in 25 States, suggested repeal so strongly in testimony before the Senate Finance Committee.

Yes, the antimargarine laws are punitive laws—they punish the millions of American farmers in 44 States who grow the ingredients of margarine. They punish the hundreds of thousands of wholesale and retail merchants who either handle or would otherwise handle margarine. And they punish the American people who consume margarine—more than a hundred million of them—the sick and the well, the very old and the orphans.

I should like for the apologists for these laws and those who are demanding that Congress adjourn before it acts to repeal them to tell us just what crime any of these groups have committed to deserve the punishment of these punitive laws. I think we would discover that in this case, the punishment does not fit the crime or the perpetrators of the crime. For the guilty are not the cotton or soybean farmers or the distributors of margarine or the American people. The crime was committed by those who enacted this vicious, un-American legislation, and it is being committed today by those who seek to retain it.

Today the butter lobby and those who struggle to maintain the antimargarine laws have lost their best weapon—the lack of knowledge of the American people as to the issues involved. Since the Fiftieth Congress enacted the first antimargarine laws nearly a hundred bills have been introduced for their modification or repeal. Not one of those bills ever reached the floor of the House or Senate. For the most part the debate on the issues was restricted to the cloistered confines of committee rooms—and even there only a handful ever reached the hearing stage.

In 1917, in 1944, and again this year—margarine amendments were introduced in the Senate to the general revenue bills. I am proud that I had a part in those efforts in 1944 and March 1948. I introduced amendments on both occasions. I believe those earlier efforts paved the way for the progress we have made this session. The amendments were beaten chiefly, I think the record will show, not on their merits but because it was contended that they were not germane to the revenue bills. Of course, all of us who voted for those amendments would have preferred a clear-cut decision on the margarine issue without connecting it with the revenue bills, but we could not obtain consideration by the Senate of such bills. We still cannot obtain that consideration,

But one thing we have gained as a result of this year's campaign to repeal these laws. The debate in both House and Senate, the full hearings by committees, the hard-fought but sure progress of the repeal bill has been thoroughly publicized at every step by press and radio. The American people have learned the true facts for the first time about the antimargarine laws. Congress, too, has had a better opportunity to ascertain the merits of the case.

"Give the people light and they will find their own way"—the masthead of a great newspaper chain reads. The people have gotten the light at last on margarine, and so has Congress. The only problem is to persuade Congress to find its way to repeal the antimargarine laws.

The results of this popular education must be dismaying to the butter lobby. They have lost the votes and they have lost the arguments. All that is left to them now is delay.

In conclusion, I want again to urge this Eightieth Congress to act now to repeal the Federal antimargarine laws. This is not a new issue. Margarine has been waiting for 62 years for justice. I cannot accept the idea that injustice must be endured longer simply because it is venerable. That is all the more reason to put an end to it as soon as possible.

Nor, as we have seen, is this a trivial issue. It strikes at the heart of our economic concepts and political principles.

And once again, I urge this Congress to finish its job before it quits. The American people have a right to expect that.

If we adjourn now, without acting on the bill to repeal the antimargarine laws, do not console yourselves with the delusion that the people will forget or will not care. Do not for a moment doubt that those thousands upon thousands of individuals who have written this Congress demanding repeal will be indifferent. The American housewife has a good memory and she knows what she wants—she wants this bill passed. And she wants it passed now. Nor will those newspaper editors—hundreds of them in every State in the Union—who have fought so earnestly for the repeal of the antimargarine laws let maction on our part pass unnoticed. They will all remember what we do here now on this bill—and they will still remember in November.

Justice is never a small thing—never a thing that can be put off or delayed with impunity. It has been denied the margarine industry and those who grow the ingredients of margarine and consume margarine for more than half a century. I call on the lead-ership of the Senate to call up the bill to repeal the antimargarine laws-to call it up now-and to put an end once and for all time to this disgraceful blot on our legislative history.

LONG-RANGE AGRICULTURAL PROGRAM

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 2318) to provide for a coordinated agricultural program.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I am very happy to have this opportunity to address the Senate while the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. THYE] is in the chair and presiding, because the Senator from Minnesota was one of the members of the committee, together with my good friends the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AIKEN], the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. ELLENDERI, and others, who chose Columbia, S. C., as the place at which to hold the cotton hearings. We were delighted to have the distinguished Senator from Vermont and the distinguished Senator from Minnesota, together with the other members of the committee, there with us last fall. I wish to state how grateful I was that the cotton hearings were held in my State, and that the witnesses from North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, and other States attended those hearings. I also wish to say that, as all of us know, the distinguished Senator from Minnesota [Mr. THYE], who now occupies the chair, well understood the views of the farmers and others in our section of the country in regard to the matters there under consideration, as did the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AIKEN].

Mr. EASTLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator vield?

Mr. MAYBANK. I yield.

Mr. EASTLAND. Does the distinguished Senator from South Carolina desire to have me suggest the absence of a quorum?

Mr. MAYBANK. No; in view of the limited time, I would not wish to have the Senator do so, although I appreciate his thoughtfulness. As the Senator knows, I have submitted for printing in the RECORD the speech I had intended to make.

Mr. EASTLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. MAYBANK. I yield.

Mr. EASTLAND. I wish to say that the Senator from South Carolina is a very distinguished cotton expert, who probably knows more about the cotton business and the problems of the cotton farmer than does any other Member of this body. I know the Senator will make a very able speech, and one which will most informative, and one from which great value will come to the cotton growers of the country. So I hoped the distinguished Senator would permit me to have a quorum call, so that a large number of his colleagues could hear him speak.

Mr. MAYBANK. I thank the Senator; but in view of the limited time, although I appreciate the thoughfulness of my distinguished friend, I shall proceed

Mr. President, I was raised with cot-I have planted cotton; I have ton. ginned cotton, I have exported cotton, as the Senator from Mississippi well knows: and I was a member of a firm that perhaps knows more about cotton than does anyone else in this city, including the Department of Agriculture, except Will Clayton, and he left yesterday.

Mr. EASTLAND. Mr. President, let me say that what the Senator has said is entirely true. Certainly the distinguished Senator from South Carolina has accomplished more for the cotton growers of his State and of the South than has any other person who has sat in the Senate. The Senator from South Carolina and the late Senator Bankhead are two of the ablest agricultural statesmen who ever sat in this body. The Senator from South Carolina has a very distinguished record, and I know that his service here has been of great benefit to the farmers of the South. I certainly congratulate him; and I shall stay here to hear his speech, because I know he will make a worth-while contribution to this discussion.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, let me say that the late Senator Bankhead and I for years served on the Banking and Currency Committee, and in those days we wrote many laws. I always admired and revered him. We talked together about many things. As the Senator from Mississippi has indicated, Senator Bankhead consulted me about some things.

Mr. President, I wish to discuss the cotton situation. I do not wish it thought for a moment that I am opposed to this agricultural bill because of cotton alone. I appreciate and understand what the distinguished Senator from Vermont went through in the course of the long hearings which were held throughout the country last year, along with the distinguished Senator from Minnesota [Mr. THYE], who now occupies the chair, and the other members of the subcommittee. I am grateful for all they have done, and I appreciate it. I am not here to-perhaps I may say fly-blow any bill; that is not my purpose. However, in view of the fact that it is expected that the Congress will adjourn on Saturday, certainly there is in this bill too much that has not yet been considered—and certainly many parts of the bill should be thoroughly considered before allowing it to pass hastily.

I thoroughly agree with what my distinguished friend the Senator from Georgia said in his colloquy with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. THYE], who now is presiding; he described the bill as a measure to reduce production. I really believe that. I do not know the wheat situation as the distinguished Presiding Officer knows it; I do not know the dairy situation as the distinguished Senator from Vermont knows it; but I do know the cotton situation.

I have great respect for the Secretary of Agriculture. He is a career man, having come up the hard way. He deserves full credit. However, if he approved the reduction in cotton parity from 90 to 75 percent, then he would approve wide-open gambling in the United States, and everybody running a gambling house ought to open a bucket shop at the crossroads in Carolina, Mississippi, Georgia, and Oklahoma.

Mr. President, there are more than 50 grades of cotton. There are more than 50 different staples. It is possible to have a surplus in one while having a deficit in the other. I know, of course, that parity is based on Middling fifteensixteenths Scotland. Everybody knows that, and everybody knows how parity is established. But the fluctuations between Middling inch, inch and a sixteenth, inch and a quarter, and what we call buzz-fuzz cotton, five-eighths or seven-eighths cotton, will bring only ter-rible headaches and problems that the Department of Agriculture could never solve. Cotton grading, cotton ginning, cotton stippling is an art for which the Department of Agriculture through its appropriations does not have sufficient money to employ adequate personnel.

The large firms in New York and New Orleans-I have no unkind remarks for them-estimate the cotton crop. Mr. President, do you know what is to be done under the pending bill? They estimate the cotton crop in August, September, and October, creating fluctuations in the market that keep the cotton world going round, that keep the market going up and down. Under the pending bill they would be in a position to make an estimate of surplus under the law that will change parity on cotton from 90 percent to 75 percent. In other words, the big firms in this country are being given the right under the law to say what the surplus of cotton may be or the surplus of wheat or any other commodity. Mr. President, you know more about wheat than I do. I know cotton. I was raised with cotton.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, will the .. Senator yield?

Mr. MAYBANK. I yield. Mr. RUSSELL. I am listening with great attention, as I always do when the distinguished Senator from South Carolina addresses himself to any agricultural question, particularly as it pertains to any phase of cotton from the time it is planted, through every stage of its development, the ginning, the marketing, the milling, and the exporting, because, as the Senator says, he has spent his life in that business.

Mr. MAYBANK. That is all I have

Mr. RUSSELL. The Senator is recognized here as being probably the greatest expert in the Congress for many years on that question. The Senator must know that if the bill will affect the speculation and the estimates to which he refers, with respect to cotton, with which he is so familiar, its effect will also be felt on other commodities.

Mr. MAYBANK. I certainly agree. Mr. RUSSELL. They are all handled in a similar way.

Mr. MAYBANK. That is correct. Mr. RUSSELL. While the Senator is an expert on cotton and is more intimately informed as to it, his experience with cotton would be very helpful in arriving at a firm conclusion as to the effect it would have on other commodities of other farmers.

Mr. MAYBANK. I appreciate the kind remarks of the distinguished Senator from Georgia. Having planted cotton, having grown it, having financed the growing of it, having bought and sold cotton, and having been also, as the Senator knows, before coming to the Senate, a cotton broker, I know what the bill would do. It would open the door wide between 75 percent and 90 percent. Who is to determine the surplus? Department of Agriculture? Certainly. They make the crop estimates on wheat, corn, cotton, and other commodities, but the private firms in New York, New Orleans and Chicago-with due respect and appreciation of those cities-make the estimates, and the boys at the cross roads go down to the bucket shop and come out with empty pockets. The poor farmer is taken for a ride.

I have been in the Senate since 1941. I was on the committee which considered the commodity credit bill. I was on the subcommittee of the Committee on Banking and Currency with the late John Bankhead. I knew the Steagall-Bankhead group, I worked with them. I say, Mr. President, we have done pretty well. Through the Commodity Credit Corporation we have made, to this time, about $200,000,000 on commodities. Of course, the war came along. But do you realize, Mr. President, that in 1941, 1942, 1943 and 1944 even with the war, cotton was below parity?

I may be talking too much about cotton. I realize one should not be sec-

Mr. EASTLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MAYBANK. I yield.

Mr. EASTLAND. As a matter of principle, if a farmer is entitled to 75 percent of parity, why is he not entitled to 90 If it is right to give him 75 percent, if we are going into that field, why do we not remove all discrimination against him and place him on an equal basis?

Mr. MAYBANK. The Senator from Mississippi is eminently correct. I voted for 95-percent parity, as did the Senator, when former Senator Bankhead brought the bill in here, which was, if I remember right, in 1943.

Mr. EASTLAND. I was one of the authors of the bill.

Mr. MAYBANK. So was I. We joined in sponsoring the bill. If the farmer is entitled to 75 percent, he is entitled to But, Mr. President, the gamblers will be operating between the 75 percent and the 90 percent.

Mr. EASTLAND. Mr. President, will

the Senator yield?

Mr. MAYBANK. Let me finish this sentence please. It opens up the cotton market and also the wheat markets to the gamblers as they were opened up to the gamblers in the twenties.

I saw it. I yield to the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. EASTLAND. A Democratic administration has given the farmers, on basic commodities, a support price of 90 percent parity. Now we are facing a Republican Congress with their ageold animosity and prejudice against the man who tills the soil for a living.
Mr. MAYBANK. That is correct.

Mr. EASTLAND. We see that here the farmer is being taken for a ride. In an election year, his support price is reduced.

Mr. MAYBANK. Of course, it will be reduced. The price of wheat, corn, cotton, and everything else will be re-

Mr. EASTLAND, Mr. President, will the Senator vield?

Mr. MAYBANK. I yield to the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. EASTLAND. The argument is made for the passage of the Aiken bill now, that if we wait it might not be passed, the farmer might not get anything next year, and that in all probability there will be a Republican Congress, stronger Republican Congress than the present one, and as a result, the whole program will expire and the farmer will get no support price. So we are rushing to give him a half loaf at this

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, if the farmer receives no support price, the city dwellers will receive no support; and the farmers support the city dwellers.

Mr. EASTLAND. The facts are as shown by this bill, that the Republican Party is against the farmers. It is for big business, Wall Street, and great monopolies.

Mr. MAYBANK. That is correct.

Mr. EASTLAND. The Senator knows that for 2 years we have been supporting only legislation that would benefit big business, and that the man in overalls, in the shop and on the farms, can get no consideration from this Congress, or from a Government controlled by the party which dominates this Congress.

Mr. MAYBANK. Certainly the oneand two-gallus boys are left at the crossroads. As the Senator from Mississippi well knows, we can see them picking cotton until Christmas time, in order to get what? To get a stick of candy from the corner store.

Mr. EASTLAND. Does the Senator from South Carolina think we are headed back now, drifting back into economic and political isolation, as we did after the First World War, and that we are confronted with another Republican administration similar to that of Warren G. Harding? Are we not going back to 25cent cotton and 25-cent wheat, and will not those policies give communism the greatest boost it can receive?

Mr. MAYBANK. I cannot deny the argument of the Senator from Mississippi. If we pass this bill and reduce the cotton farmer's parity from 90 to 75 percent, we are taking 15 percent of his income, which is low enough as it is, in Alabama, North Carolina, South Carolina, Mississippi, and Arkansas. cotton farmer buys the bread and manufactured goods; he works from sunup to sundown and spends his money. When we injure the cotton farmer, we injure the wheat farmer and the corn farmer.

Mr. EASTLAND. The Senator overlooks this fact, that we have in this country persons of great wealth, who do not have their wealth invested in commodities or in property, but who keep it in cash in order to loan it. Therefore they want low prices, so that their money will be more valuable. That is the group of persons who control the Republican Party.

Mr. MAYBANK. Certainly. Senator from Mississippi is correct. I can go into any bank in Mississippi, North Carolina, or South Carolina and borrow 90 percent on a cotton-warehouse

Mr. EASTLAND. The Senator is correct.

Mr. MAYBANK. We are turning the situation over to the private bankers. Mr. EASTLAND. This bill will reduce the support prices which a Democratic Administration has given to agriculture to pull it out of the hole. are getting right back to the days when the county newspapers in Iowa and the Midwest were filled with notices of sales of farms through foreclosure of mortgages.

Mr. THYE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MAYBANK. I yield.

Mr. THYE. I should like to ask the Senator a question-

Mr. MAYBANK. May I make one re-mark before the Senator asks his question? I am appreciative of the Senator's being here. I was happy that he was able to accompany my distinguished friend, the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AIKEN], to South Carolina to attend the hearing, at which everyone was in favor of 90 percent parity.

I yield to the Senator from Minnesota. Mr. THYE. I should like to ask the Senator from South Carolina and also the Senator from Mississippi what amendment is being discussed by them?

Mr. EASTLAND. The Russell amendment

Mr. THYE. I did not understand that. Mr. MAYBANK. I am sorry the Senator did not understand that.

Mr. EASTLAND. The Senator from Minnesota did not want to hear the record of his own party. I see that he is fleeing from the Senate Chamber.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I want to repeat that commodity credit under the Bankhead-Steagall bill, which was not passed by the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, but by the Committee on Banking and Currency, saved more than $200,000,000 for the taxpayers. Many expenses were paid outside of that sum. The profits in cotton alone were more than $100,000,000. Had it not been for 90 percent of parity, and had it not been for the production of cotton. General MacArthur's success would not have been as great as it was. I think the Senator from Mississippi will agree with me in that statement.

Mr. EASTLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MAYBANK. I yield.

Mr. EASTLAND. In all seriousness, I should like to make this statement to the distinguished Senator from South Carolina. The solution of the farm problem is in taking down trade barriers and expanding world commerce. There are today millions of hungry people. There are millions of ill-clad people. Those people are willing and able to work and produce the wealth needed in the United States if we would remove the barriers of trade so that they could buy the surplus production of the United States.

Mr. President, that would be the greatest contribution to world prosperity that could possibly occur.

Mr. MAYBANK. I agree with the Senator.

Mr. EASTLAND. But instead of following such a program, we are following a program of acreage-reduction, a program to shut off the production of wealth and, in the last analysis, to spread poverty over the world. Consider the case of Japan. There is a little group of islands in the Pacific Ocean, approxi-mately the size of the State of Montana. Only one-seventh of the area is suitable for cultivation. Seventy-seven million persons live there, under the Japanese flag, without resources. The only chance they have to live is to be able to buy raw materials in the markets of the world, process them in Japan, sell the products thus produced in world markets, and live off the profit that is acquired.

Mr. MAYBANK. They could sell the products to countries in the Pacific, such as Java, Indonesia, and other countries. Mr. EASTLAND. In other words, they could live from their labor.

Mr. MAYBANK. That is correct. Mr. EASTLAND. If we do not reduce trade barriers and take goods from Japan, what will Japan do? There is only one thing she can do, and that is to affiliate herself with the nations under the hammer and sickle.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Carolina has 2 minutes

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, should like to say to my friend from Mississippi that we must remove the trade barriers. I do not think it is necessary for Japan to ship anything to this country, under the rule of the Army government. The Senator from Mississippi and I agree that the Japanese should be benefited and helped by this country, so that Japan might, in turn, trade with the Orient, with the Dutch, French, and other colonies. As a matter of fact, Java was the largest purchaser of Japanese textiles before the war. There are 50,-000,000 people there. I do not think it is necessary to bring any textiles into the United States, because we have more than we need at the present time.

Mr. EASTLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MAYBANK. I yield. Mr. EASTLAND. I am a cotton grower, but I think we should look beyond self-interest and what will benefit our own people and our own sections. should look to the welfare of this Nation.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I may have 1 minute. I appreciate what the Senator from Mississippi says, and I feel as he does. I know as well as he does that prior to the war the Japanese were the second largest purchasers of American cotton. In a short period of time they were the largest purchasers, and they helped the farmers by purchasing their cotton.

I yield the floor, Mr. President.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, I yield 10 minutes to the Senator from Delaware [Mr. WILLIAMS]

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Senator from Delaware is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, first I send to the desk an amendment to the substitute bill offered by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. Russell].

amendment reduces to 1 year the proposed extension of the farm support pro-

PRESIDING OFFICER. amendment will be received and will lie on the table.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, one of the most unpopular things to discuss when a program of this character is before the Senate is how much it will cost the taxpayer. It is impossible to estimate what the pending bill will cost, so I am going to review the costs for the past few years during which a similar program has been in operation.

We find that in recent years, under a similar program, the Government has spent, in the support of American agriculture, $8,573,600,000 for the improvement of soil, soil conservation, triple A payments and other programs. All of this was spent apparently for the purposes of increasing production on the farms.

I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD as a part of my remarks a chart showing how this money was distributed during recent years.

Mr. President, during the same years in which the Government was spending this $8,500,000,000 to increase the production on the farms, we find that the Government at the same time spent $2,-080,300,000 to dispose of surplus agricultural products. In other words, in a support program, to make agriculture more profitable, during this period, the Government spent $2,080,300,000. I have a break-down of that in the chart, which I ask unanimous consent to have inserted at this point.

There being no objection, the chart was ordered to be printed in the RECORD. as follows:

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, here we have a situation where the Government was spending $8,500,000,000 to increase production and an additional $2,-000,000,000 to hold the prices of agricultural commodities up, I find that another Government agency spent $5,519,-301,617 in subsidies to hold the prices of agricultural products down. I ask unanimous consent to have the chart showing these figures inserted in the RECORD at this point.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, most of this $5,500,000,000 was spent to hold down the prices of agricultural commodities. There are included in it some subsidy payments which were made to support other industries, but over $4,-500,000,000 was spent to hold down the cost of agricultural commodities to the consumer during the period in which the Government was spending through another agency over $2,000,000,000 to hold the prices of the same commodities up.

Another thing that is misleading about this proposal is the argument that if Congress does not pass some kind of an extension measure at this time the farmers are left without any suitable agricultural program. That argument is not true, because in the event no agricultural program shall be passed, there will still be left on the statute books the same programs which were in effect prior to the war; in other words, the Triple A Act will still be in effect, as passed in 1938; the soil-conservation programs will continue; the law which authorized expenditures of section 32 funds-customs receipts-for the support of agricultural products will remain in effect; and when the European recovery program measure was passed, under section 11A we authorized an additional subsidy on agricultural commodities, and that will be in effect for the duration of our foreignaid program. All of them without any further action whatever on the part of the Congress at this time will remain in effect. Therefore, when it is said that failure of the Congress to act will leave the farmers without any agricultural relief it is without foundation.

The program which we are asked to extend now is the same as that which was passed by Congress in 1941, at the beginning of the war, as a wartime measure; at that time Congress stated that that measure was to last two years after the war ended. As we know, the President of the United States did not declare hostilities over until December 31, 1946. Therefore this program would run for two more years, to give the farmers a chance to adjust themselves, until the end of this year, 1948. In other words, the program dying this year is a program which every farmer in the United States knew was supposed to die 2 years after the war ended, so there was no reversal of policy on the part of Congress.

I believe Congress should adopt a long-range farm program. It would be folly for us ever to place ourselves in a position where we could revert back to the wholesale bankruptcies of farmers similar to what happened in the thirties, but I think it is equally as bad for the farmer to pass legislation which is economically unsound and in the long run will do him more harm than good. The program which is set up under this bill actually guarantees a margin over cost of production thereby encouraging unbalanced production which will inevitably lead to economic collapse. By using the formula under the Aiken bill we find that despite all the confusion of defining parity-a clear definition of which no one can give-after it is all summed up it boils down to the fact that the final answer on the parity price is 150 percent of the last 10-year average.

In other words, if we take the sales price which the farmer has been getting for any farm product for the last 10 years, and add 50 percent to it, we have the parity of that product as defined in the bill. If we take all the farm products and figure them on that basis, we will come within 1 percent of the same result as the committee formula. Therefore, when it is proposed that we support cotton or tobacco or any other commodity at 90 percent of parity what is proposed in effect is that we guarantee to the farmers a support price of that product equal to 35 percent more than the average price of that commodity for the past 10 years.

I say that is economically unsound. If the support price is 75 percent of parity, which is claimed to be the average, we will still be supporting that agricultural product at 12½ percent more than the average market price for the same product during the past 10 years.

The lowest provision in the formula of this bill is that it can go down to 60 percent of parity. In that event we will then be guaranteeing to the farmers 90 percent of the average price they received for that product during the past 10 years, and under no circumstances, if this bill shall be passed, can the support price drop below that figure.

I have heard of many Senators worrying about the cost of living, yet under this bill the support price of beef will be raised 20 percent above the previous support price. Milk will be raised about 4 percent. Cottonseed will be raised $10 a ton. We are only kidding ourselves when we say that the passage of this bill will not have the effect of increasing the cost of living to consumers.

Mr. President, I think the best thing Congress can do, in view of the fact that we are in the closing days of the session, and do not have time to work out a sound program, is to defeat this measure. It is my considered opinion that a farm-support program should never exceed the cost of production. To enact a law which in effect guarantees a margin of profit encourages overproduction and necessitates a continuation of the ridiculous practice of a Government agency actually destroying edible foods in order to stabilize markets.

Furthermore, the enactment of this legislation means the regimentation of the American farms. This is inevitable because of the production and marketing controls required under this planned agricultural program.

Under this bill our farm program can be planned and directed from the minute details of acreage planted and the kind of products and livestock production that farmers can legally produce by a Government agency which will be manned by men who have never operated a farm but learned their farming out of books.

This is not in accordance with our free-enterprise system, and I believe our American farmer would rather retain his freedom and independence.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I rise in opposition to the amendment offered by the distinguished Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL]. In the course of the few remarks I shall make in opposition to the amendment, I propose also to discuss some of the major objectives of the socalled long-range agricultural program.

The Senator from Illinois has reached a very definite and firm conviction that the time has come when the Congress of the United States must enact a farm program which is permanent and stable. We have been operating under the so-called Steagall amendments, which placed support prices under basic and nonbasic products just prior to the time the United States entered into the war. It was primarily a war measure designed to accomplish an enormous production of basic and nonbasic commodities which were essential to the winning of the war. No one can deny that that legislation, which was passed under a Democratic administration, at that time stimulated production and did achieve the objective for which the legislation was enacted.

It is no trick to receive high prices for everything that is produced in the United States in a great emergency. The trouble with a great many people, when thinking of a farm program, is that they forget what has happened to the farmers of this country in the past as a result of huge surpluses of commodities that were piled high and dry in every section of the country with no outlet for those commodities.

The basic reason for the enactment of the Agricultural Adjustment Act in 1935 was the enormous surpluses that we produced in 1931, 1932, and 1933, with no possible chance of disposing of those surplus products at a decent price. The program under which we are operating at the present time has not resulted in the loss of any money. The able Senator from Georgia [Mr. Russell] said this afternoon that the Commodity Credit Corporation can show a profit of around some $200,000,000 on the over-all transactions that we conducted under the operation of the present program.

What I object to in the substitute amendment offered by the able Senator from Georgia is that it seeks to continue to place a support price under certain nonbasic commodities regardless of the amount of surplus that may be produced in the United States. I am thinking about eggs and potatoes; I am thinking about raisins and prunes; I am thinking about citrus fruits and other nonbasic commodities under which, in my opinion, the farm program at the present time cannot justify its activities. It is true that we have lost only a small amount of money compared to the entire investment as a result of this type of support. But I know, and Senators know, and the country knows the sorry spectacle that was presented with respect to potatoes and eggs. That subject has been discussed on the floor of the Senate many times. The average individual who would be compelled to support the farm program cannot understand why we have to do what we are asked to do with respect to some of these nonbasic commodities.

As I said this afternoon, in order to support a farm program we must have the confidence of the taxpayers of America. Every new spectacle of the kind we have seen in the past has a tendency to defeat the great basic purpose of the farm program which takes care of so many commodities in the United States.

Furthermore, if we continue to guarantee a support price of 90 percent upon nonbasic commodities, I undertake to say that with all the modern machinery we have, with all the farm equipment we have, with all the scientific discoveries that are being made in America at the present time, the time will come when we will have a surplus in many of these basic commodities of which we may not be able to make proper disposition. When that time comes, if it should come, and we have a support price of 90 percent on everything, there is not going to be enough money in the Treasury to pay off, Mr. President.

I am attempting in my limited way to look far ahead respecting this program, and the farmers in my section of the country are looking at this program with vision. They are not stationary out there; they are attempting to look on into the future and to see what may happen to them in 5 or 6 or 7 years from now. If we obtain a permanent, stable farm program on a basis of parity of from 60 to 90 percent, depending upon the crop produced and the carry-over, we will not have any trouble in sustaining a farm program so far as the American people are concerned. On the basic commodities we can, under the law, have quotas and acreage allotments, and in that way control, if necessary, these surpluses, but on the nonbasic commodities there is no control. That is where we shall ultimately get into trouble so far as the expenditure of money is con-

The committee worked hard and long on the bill. For years we have been talking about a long-range program. I regret that this bill has not come before the Senate until the last days of the Congress. It certainly has not been the fault of the able Senator from Vermont and his committee, because they have tried hard to get the bill before the Senate so that Members of the Senate might discuss it at length and understand it.

I am satisfied that members of the Agriculture Committee of the House of Representatives are just as familiar with the provisions of this bill as are members of the Senate committee. If this bill can be passed by the Senate tonight and sent to the House of Representatives, I am satisfied that we can get a long-range farm program before this session ends. This Congress should not adjourn, and the farmers of the Midwest are expecting that it will not adjourn, until they get the kind of a farm program that has been laid down in the bill.

The bill is supported by the American Farm Bureau Federation, the Farmers' Union, the Grange, and other leading agricultural organizations. While perhaps they have not agreed on all the details with respect to the reorganization plan under title I and title II, so far as the parity formula and the support prices are concerned, that question has been gone over in detail with the leading agricultural men of the country, and they all agree upon the parity formula which has been laid down in the bill.

Mr. President, time moves on. Nothing in this world is static. Unless Members of Congress move with the times in connection with parity, they are not doing their duty, as I see it. The parity formula of 1909 to 1914 is outmoded, and all the experts agree that it is. What we are trying to do is to have a 10-year moving average for the parity formula which will keep us up to date all the time, because as 1948 moves on and out of the picture so far as activity is concerned, the 10-year moving average takes in 1949. That is the only way we can keep the formula up to date.

In order to do that the farmers of the Midwest were willing to make a tremendous sacrifice. My dear friend from South Carolina [Mr. MAYBANK] talks about the cotton farmers being robbed under this bill. The cotton farmers do not lose anything under this bill compared with what the wheat farmers and corn farmers in my section of the country are losing so far as the question of parity is concerned.

We have taken care of that loss in the bill by providing that the decrease may amount to not more than 5 percent each year. It will require wheat producers 4 or 5 years, and corn producers 2 or 3 years, finally to get down to parity under the bill.

Notwithstanding that, we are willing to go along. We know that the dairyman, the poultry raiser, the cattle raiser, and the hog raiser get a better deal. We know that the man who raises peanuts gets a better deal. Other basic and non-basic commodities—especially nonbasic commodities—are helped as a result of this parity formula. The only thing it does is simply to change the time. The factors and equations, and all the other elements in the present parity formula, remain just the same.

The amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. Russell] should be defeated. The Senate should pass the long-range bill tonight and send it to the House. I am satisfied that if Members of the House of Representatives are responsive to the demands of American farmers they will pass a long-range farm program on all fours with what we find in Senate bill 2318.

In conclusion let me say that when this bill goes to the other side of the Capitol and conferees are appointed, I want the Senator from Vermont to understand that the amendment which we adopted this afternoon should be taken out of the bill. We cannot leave that amendment in the bill without giving the tobacco growers preferential treatment. There is no good reason why one group of commodity producers should receive a guaranty of 90 percent of parity, leaving producers of 127 or 128 other basic and nonbasic commodities on a basis of 60 to 90 percent. It is not fair. It is not right. If the bill should come back with that provision in it, the Senator from Illinois could not support the bill.

Mr. President, that is about all I have to say upon this important measure. During all the time I have been in the Congress, approximately 13 years in the House and in the Senate, I have been on the Agriculture Committee. I happen to own farm lands on the prairies of Illinois. I know something about the agricultural program and the problems we are up against.

My prayer is that as long as we are a nation we shall never be confronted with what we faced back in 1931, 1932, and 1933. Those were the darkest days in the history of agriculture in all our time as a nation. We have come a long way since that dark hour by reason of constructive and objective legislation. But we are now acting for the moment. We are on a temporary basis; and the sooner the Congress of the United States can get away from this temporary program the better off we shall all be.

It seems all right for the moment to say, "For one more year I am going to get 90 percent of parity on everything I produce. I am not willing to take a chance on a flexible formula over a long period of years. I am going to get my pound of flesh just as long as I can." I sincerely and earnestly fear that the time will come when that kind of a program will fall of its own weight and break down to the point where the American people will not support any farm program at all. I hope the time will never come when there is dissatisfaction to the point where the people of the country will not support a program which is meaningless and futile so far as protecting the American farmer is concerned.

Mr. President, I yield the floor. Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, there is half an hour left. I do not know whether the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. Thye] or the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. Young] wish to be heard.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont has 15 minutes. The Senator from Georgia [Mr. Russell] has 15 minutes.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, there is very little that I can add to the very clear reasons given by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. Lucas] for adopting a longrange program now and not being content with a stopgap affair which gives a high level of support to a few commodities. I agree with the Senator from Illinois that if we continue the high level of 90-percent support, which will cost our Government a large amount of money to maintain, the time will not be far distant when the American people will rise up and say they will no longer have any farm price-support program. In my opinion, that would be a catastrophe, because, above all things, we must continue to maintain the production of farm commodities. It is true that probably there will be some surpluses of certain commodities within the next few years; but in the over-all picture we must maintain an adequate production of food and fiber, sufficient to enable our industries to carry on and to supply the consumers of the United States with the commodities they need, at reasonable prices.

The proposal to have a long-range program should not be mistaken as being a proposal to have a grab bag. It should not be mistaken as an attempt to see how much we can get in a short time for the producers of certain commodities. So I think it most unfortunate that the amendment relative to tobacco was adopted today.

Other than that, Mr. President, all I have to say is that at this time, when there are relatively few surpluses in the commodity field, we should develop this long-range program, so that our farmers will be assured that if in the future they produce enough to meet the needs of the country they will not be faced with ruin and bankruptcy, if at some time they happen to produce a little more than is needed. I think the time to develop such a program is now, so that the plan will be ready when needed.

Mr. President, before closing my remarks, I wish to say a few words about the subcommittee which developed the bill which now is before the Senate. have said before, and I repeat, that I never worked with a more cooperative body of men than the members of the subcommittee and other members of the full committee who helped to develop this plan. The members of the subcommittee were the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. Bushfield], the Senator from Iowa [Mr. Wilson], the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. THYE], the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. Thomas], the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. ELLENDER], and the Senator from Illinois [Mr. Lucas]. Let me say that all of us worked together. We met with the farm people of the United States. We think we know what the farm people want in the way of a farm program. They are not unreasonable. With few exceptions, they are not asking for more than they are entitled to.

from ruin if they produce enough to meet the needs of the country. Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

They are not asking for cost-plus or even ask for a floor which will protect them for a guaranty of receiving cost.

Mr. AIKEN. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. I am sure the Senator from Vermont will agree with me that wherever we went in holding those hearings, the farmers themselves, almost to a man, showed that they understood the farm program almost as well as any member of the subcommittee did. In other words, it was amazing, to me, to discover the number of farmers who are wide awake and know exactly what is going on here in Congress with respect to agricultural legislation.

Mr. AIKEN. The Senator from Illinois never spoke truer words than those. All over the United States the farm people know what is going on. They know farm problems and they know what is needed to maintain a prosperous agriculture and adequate production so that consumers will be supplied with their needs and will not be forced to pay exorbitant prices for their food. Almost everywhere we went we found the farm people very solicitous that the consumers in the cities not be overcharged.

Mr. EASTLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. AIKEN. I yield.

Mr. EASTLAND. I should like to have the RECORD show at this point that the Senator from Vermont has worked zealously, conscientiously, and well on this program. He has devoted to it practically all his time and energies for almost a year. He has brought forth, I know, under the circumstances, the very best bill he could for the farmers.

Mr. President, not only is the Senator from Vermont highly conscientious, but today he is the agricultural leader of the Nation. I congratulate him for the fine work he has done on this bill.

Mr. AIKEN. I thank the Senator very much for his kind words.

Mr. THYE. Mr. President, let me say to the distinguished Senator from Mississippi that when he refers to this program as the best program which could be obtained. I wish to say that it is the best program which could have been conceived. I should like to say that the distinguished chairman of the subcommittee, the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AIKEN], who presided over the subcommittee at all its hearings, and who pro-ceeded to get the views of the farmers in regard to the agricultural program, has been able to develop what now is embodied in Senate bill 2318; and I repeat that it is not simply the best program which could be developed under the circumstances, but it is the best possible program which could have been conceived as a long-range program to replace the so-called war emergency legislation which was enacted in the form of the Steagall amendments.

So I, too, wish to commend the Sena-tor from Vermont for the splendid job he has done.

They

Mr. EASTLAND. Mr. President, I do not desire to become involved in a partisan discussion on that subject with the Senator from Minnesota. My sole purpose was to compliment the Senator from Vermont.

As the Senate knows, I have a very high regard for the Senator from Vermont. I know he is conscientious. I know he is one of the most able Members of this body. I know he has rendered invaluable service to agriculture, not only from a sectional viewpoint, so far as Vermont is concerned, but from a national viewpoint, for he has had the interests of the entire country at heart. If there is any Member of this body who has the national viewpoint and who attempts to do what is best for all the people of the United States, certainly it is the distinguished Senator from Vermont. I congratulate him, and I am happy to be associated with him in this body.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, I thank both the Senator from Mississippi and the Senator from Minnesota for the remarks they have made. I appreciate them very much indeed.

Mr. President, I wish to say that this bill seems to have acquired the name of the Aiken bill, but as a matter of fact it is the bill of all those who worked on it. It is no more the Aiken bill than it is the Lucas bill or the Thye bill or the Wilson bill or the Thomas bill or the Ellender bill or the Bushfield bill or the Young bill, or the bill of any of the other Senators who worked on it. It is the committee bill. It is the bill which has been developed as a result of the request which the Senate made of our committee. We have done the job as well as we could. We think we have done a good job, we may as well admit it. No trace of parti-sanship has entered into our deliberations in connection with the formulation of this bill.

Mr. President, I hope the bill will pass the Senate unanimously tonight, and I hope the Senate will reject any proposed substitutes or further amendments. do not agree with those who say that the House will not accept the bill. The House certainly will not turn down a long-range farm bill for the United States, when the entire Nation is demanding it. If by any chance the bill should be rejected, I do not wish it to be said that the Senate was responsible for blocking what I think is the best longrange farm program which ever has been presented to this body.

Mr. President, let us pass this bill; let us pass it unanimously, so that we can carry the spirit of nonpartisanship right through to the enactment of the bill.

I have nothing more to say on this subject, Mr. President. I believe the Senator from Georgia has 15 minutes' time. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Georgia [Mr. Russell] for 15 minutes.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I know of little that can be added to the statement I made in support of the substitute earlier in the day. I wish again to emphasize that the substitute presents the one certain opportunity for the Senate to assure the continuance of a farm program next year without interruption.

A great many bugaboos have been created by the discussion against the substitute. It has been stated it would cost a great deal of money. That charge is not sustained by the facts. The records of the Department of Agriculture and the Commodity Credit Corporation will show that under the program in existence at the present time, which by the substitute will be continued for a period of 18 months, approximately $200,000,000 has been earned over and above losses sustained by the Commodity Credit Corpo-The most important thing involved in the entire discussion is the assurance that we shall have a farm bill in operation continuously until the next Congress shall have a fair chance to consider the subject. The committee bill with all its complexities, with its entirely new approach to the problem is understood by few Senators. It has never been applied. It leaves discretion in the hands of the Secretary of Agriculture that can cause it to work out in a manner not even envisioned by its own sponsors.

The substitute covers all agricultural commodities.

Mr. THYE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. RUSSELL. I have only a few minutes, bu: I will yield.

Mr. THYE. Mr. President, when the able Senator from Georgia said the Secretary could work out a schedule that was not even now anticipated by the authors, or something to that effect, I merely wanted to ask the question: In what manner could the Secretary work out a schedule which has not been conceived by those who have labored in the preparation and in the formulation of the bill?

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, the point I was making was that the bill leaves so much to administration that while the Senator, as he is a member of the committee, may know what the bill contains-and I am willing to concede that he does-yet time and again I have seen the Senate pass bills on the theory they meant one thing, only to find when they reached the administrator that they meant something entirely different.

The bill leaves great discretion in the hands of the Secretary of Agriculture, not only as to the complete reorganization of the Department, which has scarcely been mentioned in the course of the discussion, but also as to the amount of loans he will allow for the various commodities. He has a great deal of leeway between 60 and 90 percent in some cases, as to the amount of loan that shall be made available to the producers of certain commodities. It is venturing into an entirely new field without, as I insist, adequate consideration, and certainly the other body will have no chance whatever to consider the bill other than to hear it read to them after the conferees agree, if they accept it.

On the other hand, we have a program that has been tried and has proved effective. It is in operation tonight. The farmers of the country understand it: the Members of the Senate know how it is applied; the Department of Agriculture has had experience in dealing with it. It enabled us to produce food and fiber with which to win the greatest war in history. If we continue it in effect, it will enable us to fulfill our commitments under the Marshall plan to the people of Europe. If we pass a new bill, fixing a different standard and destroying the incentives to production, we shall find it necessary perhaps to double the appropriations for the Marshall plan in order to meet the commitments in pounds of food and pounds of clothing promised to those who have joined with us in this great international undertaking to restore stability and preserve democracy on the face of the earth.

Mr. President, the point has been belabored at great length that one of these days, if-we continue to extend this small measure of justice to the American farmer, the American people will rise up in their might and strike down any farm bill at all. What are farmers? Are they not, too, citizens of the United States? Are they not, too, American people? I submit that that kind of argument is merely carrying out the old idea that the farmer is a class aside, to himself, and is entitled to scant recognition and should appreciate any crumbs which happen to fall from the congressional table when we are enacting laws for the benefit of all the people.

The idea that the farmer is getting rich is as wild and visionary a thought as has ever been advanced in the Congress. It is impossible for the farmer to get rich when more than 30 percent of the farmers, even today with high prices. have a total income, including the use of the house in which they live, the fuel and the water they use, that amounts only to $600 a year.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield. Mr. McCLELLAN. The Senator made reference to the threat that the American people might strike down the farm program, and that if we undertake to place a floor under farm prices, the American people may at some time rebel against it. I wonder, if they were ever to rebel against such a program, if they would not at the same time rebel against the Government's fixing of prices, minimum wages, and also granting collectivebargaining rights to the laborers in in-

Mr. RUSSELL. I thank the Senator. I was just coming to that. Here is a farmer of whom it is said that if he is guaranteed a loan of 29 cents a pound for his cotton, the American people will rise up in their might and deny him any rights whatever and will abolish all legislation for the benefit of the farmer. It has been established beyond any peradventure, and it has never been chal-lenged, that it takes 1 hour of labor at 29 cents an hour to produce 1 pound of cotton; and yet with all the benefits of minimum wages-and-hours and of collective bargaining and an industrial pay roll which has increased threefold since 1940, it is said the farmer is going to be victimized by the American people.

The farmer is an American citizen. Senators on this floor are supposed to represent him as well as all other constituents. If the farmer is injured as a result of continuing the program for a short period of time with the pitiful benefits it accords him, it will be the fault of those on this floor who have been sent here by the votes of the farmers. The farmers of this country, Mr. President, are not asleep. If Senators propose to be intimidated, and if the alleged American people of whom the farmer is not a part undertake to grind under foot those who till the soil I respectfully predict there will be some changes made, and there will be other Senators here who will be willing to see that the farmers enjoy at least a small modicum of the unparalleled prosperity which is now sweeping the country. It is high time that the farmer should be permitted to share in it at least to the extent of 90 percent of parity on his basic commodities. That will be assured by the substitute.

Thirty-seven years have passed since the beginning of the period on which parity is based. In those 37 years, for 11 years only have farm prices been at or above parity. In 26 of those years farm prices have been below parity. More than a third of a century has passed, and the farmer has enjoyed only 11 years of parity. To argue on the floor of the Senate, Mr. President, that to enable him to have 90 percent of parity will cause the repeal and the abolition of all farm laws, is, to me, simply not worthy of serious consideration.

Mr. President, whatever else may be said regarding the committee bill, there is no question that it works radical changes, if not revolutionary changes, not only in the Department of Agriculture, but in the farm pregram. I do not like a policy which provides for tying together in one lump all farm commodities in arriving at parity. It is much more fair to have each commodity stand on its own feet, with the same standard to be applied in fixing the parity price. Under the 10-year moving average, the smallest commodity which is admitted to the list of those to be entitled to the meager benefits of the bill would have as much weight in fixing the parity price as the other commodities, such as dairy products, which represents millions of dollars. It is not sound, right, or fair. I care not how many economists may support the policy, it cannot possibly work out and be a SUCCESS.

Those Senators who wish, may vote for the committee bill. They may vote for a measure that fails the farmer in his hour of need, because when there is a surplus and his prices are depressed, his loan value is depressed along with it. That is not the proper concept of farm relief legislation. Such legislation should be of benefit to the farmers and be of help to them when they need help. But an entirely opposite philosophy is adopted by the committee bill. Prices go down and the loan value goes down with them, so that the farmer, at the very time when he needs help to enable him to buy the things he needs, to pay his debts, and to keep his children in school, finds that this bill has failed him because it has brought down the loan value in proportion to the surplus which is on hand. Therefore it does not sustain him in his hour of need.

The substitute which I propose contains proper safeguards to see that there is not overproduction. Senators have referred to the fact that there is no protection in the substitute bill against overproduction. It is written into the substitute in two different places that the Secretary of Agriculture has the right to prescribe the regulations under which loans may be advanced.

Mr. President, the Senators who so desire may go home and tell the farmers that they have passed a great farm bill for their relief. But when the farmer finds that his loan values have been reduced 20 percent, I doubt if he will think he has been helped. When he finds that there have been drastic changes in the Department of Agriculture and that the years he has devoted to the study of what constitutes the parity formula have been all for naught and the formula is no longer applicable, I doubt whether the farmer will think he has been greatly benefited.

A number of commodities are afforded no protection whatever by the committee bill. They had protection under the Steagall amendment. They have protection in the substitute bill. The producers of those commodities have no recourse whatever under the committee bill. By the adoption of the substitute bill we shall end any discussion of a farm program in this session of the Congress. We shall put it beyond the power of any man or set of men to kill the farm program in the last days of the session because of the congested condition of the calendar. We shall be able to return in January and approach the problem in the calm atmosphere of the early days of the legislative session, not when we must be considering what will happen to the draft bill.

Mr. President, the course of wisdom and prudence is for the Senate to adopt the substitute which I have proposed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Georgia has expired.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I should like to discuss my amendment. I ask that the reading of it be dispensed with. If the Senators will turn to page 51 of the bill it will be found that my amendment strikes out the provision for the abolishment of regional offices of the Soil Conservation Service.

Mr. President, the effect of this amendment would be to retain the regional offices of the Soil Conservation Service for greater economy and greater efficiency in the conservation program. We have made quite a point here about improving efficiency and promoting economy in government. It is most puzzling, therefore, to note that this bill would upset a proven administrative structure that has favorably stood the test of time and considerable study.

I recognize that in some instances over the past years the regional office has been an excessive and expensive feature of administration in other Government programs. I recognize, also, that there are some people who object to regional offices as a matter of general principle, because they do not like the idea. Because one set of regional offices has been bad, however, does not mean that all the rest are bad. If that were true we might as well draft a general provision abolishing all regional offices wherever they exist throughout the Government.

As a matter of fact, the well-run regional office is now generally recognized by businessmen to be a necessary and money-saving device in the conduct of any large nation-wide operation. That is true in government as well as in the business world. The regional offices of the Soil Conservation Service have been among the most efficiently run offices in the Federal Government. To abolish them would increase the cost of carrying on the conservation program and would reduce the efficiency of the program.

The organization of the Soil Conservation Service is established along lines well proven by American business. The pattern is similar to organizations such as insurance companies, public utilities, oil and manufacturing companies, as well as some long-established Federal agencies.

The Soil Conservation Service has Washington, regional, State, and field offices, as do many of the Nation-wide business firms which have their home offices, regional offices, district offices, and dealers.

For example, Mr. Mooch, director of business management for the Chrysler Corp., states that:

The automobile business is, as a general rule, operated on the same basis by all companies. In our particular case we have 18 regions, each in charge of a regional manager. These are further divided into districts which are in charge of a district manager. It would be a very impractical operation to try to handle all of the detail of our dealer customers from a central office.

Another example is the John Deere Farm Implement Co., a national business firm dealing with farmers and ranchers, K. W. Anderson, manager of product research, Deere & Co., has this to say about their organizational set-up:

At the present time we have 15 regional branches in the United States, four in Canada and a separate export division. Each is in charge of a general manager. The people of Deere & Co. have adhered to a policy of decentralization since the beginning of its operations over 110 years ago.

The American Bell. Telephone Co. is an example of a national public utility. It has a national over-all policy and financial headquarters in New York. Scattered over the country, geographically located, are subsidiary operating companies with complete authority within delineated territorial lines. The Soil Conservation Service organization parallels this organization very closely.

Mr. R. I. Nowell, second vice president of the Equitable Life Assurance Society of the United States, explains their organization on this basis:

We have operated under a regional organization since about 1930 when our administrative problems first became complicated. We have 10 regional offices. It would be physically impossible for us at the home office to deal directly with all of these field men. Similarly, a State organization would be much too small and numerous for effective and efficient handling. The overhead involved in a State organization would be prohibitive if men of the desired caliber were employed.

The Federal Reserve System, drawing heavily upon the business judgment of the American bankers, was established for practical administration and efficient operation to flow through 12 strategically located districts or regions.

These and many more business firms have a regional type of organization because it is more economical and effi-cient. The Soil Conservation Service has a regional organization for similar reasons. According to a statement made by the budget officer of the Department of Agriculture to the House Appropriations Committee during the hearings on the 1948 budget, the Soil Conservation Service has one of the most economical administrative organizations of any bureau in the Department of Agriculture. According to the data presented, 94 percent of the funds of the Soil Conservation Service went to the field for technical assistance and work with the farmer and rancher.

Careful studies indicate clearly that it would cost substantially more to administer the conservation program if it were handled directly through 48 State and 3 Territorial offices rather than through the 7 regional offices now used. In fact, these studies indicate that at least 363 more people would be required in the Washington and State offices to do the work being accomplished under the present regional organization. To abolish these seven regional offices would automatically increase the number of people required to do the work in offices. This, in turn, could result in a reduction of the number of technicians working directly with farmers and ranchers,

In any event, I seriously question the wisdom of including an administrative restriction of this kind in broad, longrange farm legislation. No evidence is shown to support the proposal, and, in my opinion, it should be deleted.

I think it is a mistake to take out the regional offices at this time. I had quite an argument with reference to the matter. I talked myself out of an opportunity of presenting the amendment, because it is approximately 9 o'clock, when a vote will be had. The Senator from Vermont [Mr. AIKEN] knows the story better than I do. I shall not call for a vote upon it, but will ask the Senator from Vermont, in view of the fact that the amendment is not in the House bill. to take it up in conference and do his level best to see that it is brought to the attention of the conferees in the hope that they can work out the best solution possible. I ask the Senator whether he will do that for me.

Mr. AIKEN. I have 2 minutes left, I believe.

The provision of the Senate bill abolishes regional offices of the Soil Conservation Service because only 10 percent of the funds are spent in those offices. While we require the abolishment of the offices, we do not prevent the reestablishment of regional offices where needed, but the committee felt that States as large as Texas or California could well deal with the Washington office.

I shall call the matter to the attention of the conferees as requested by the Senator from Nebraska, and will see that the question has the full consideration of the conference committee.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHERRY. I yield. I have a half minute left, I think.

Mr. LUCAS. This is one of the maters I had on my program which I overlooked. I want to associate myself with the Senator from Nebraska on this question, because the elimination of the regional offices will increase substantially the size of the State and national offices. In my opinion, it will cause greater expense if we eliminate them, and we shall have less efficiency.

Mr. AIKEN. I will say to the Senator that the matter will be considered by the conferees.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHERRY. I yield.

Mr. COOPER. I know the Senator from Vermont is familiar with Public Law 163, of the Seventy-ninth Congress, and particularly with section 2 of the act dated July 28, 1945, for which relationship is established between the support prices of fire-cured tobacco and flue-cured tobacco.

Mr. AIKEN. The same relationship will exist under Senate bill 2318.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All time for debate under the agreement has expired.

Mr. WHERRY. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Eightytwo Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

The pending question is on agreeing to the amendment of the two Senators from Maryland to the Russell amendment in the nature of a substitute.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I accept the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Georgia accepts the amendment to his amendment. The question is on the substitute offered by the Senator from Georgia as modified.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President I have an amendment at the desk which I ask to have stated. It is an amendment to be proposed to the substitute.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Clerk will state the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 2, line 18, after the word "until" it is proposed to strike out "June 30, 1950", and insert in lieu thereof "December 31, 1949."

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I have no objection to that amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Senator from Georgia further modifies his substitute by the acceptance of the amendment offered by the Senator from Delaware.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment in the nature of a substitute offered by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. Russell], as modified.

Mr. ELLENDER. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Chief Clerk called the roll.

Mr. WHERRY. I announce that the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. Bush-FIELD], the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CAPPER], the Senator from Indiana [Mr. JENNER], and the Senator from Maine [Mr. WHITE] are necessarily absent. If present and voting, the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. BushFIELD], the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CAPPER], and the Senator from Indiana [Mr. JENNER] would vote "nay."

So Mr. Russell's substitute amendment, as modified, to the committee amendment, was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now is on the committee amendment, as amended. The committee amendment is still open to amendment.

The Chair would like to state at this point his understanding of the unani-mous-consent agreement. The Chair's understanding is that 10 minutes of time is available on each amendment to the committee amendment: 5 minutes being available to the author of an amendment, and 5 minutes to the opposition. General debate has been concluded.

Mr. RUSSELL, I desire to call up my amendment "K" which has been printed and lies on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK, On page 71, between lines 11 and 12, it is proposed to insert the following:

(1) (A) The "parity price" for any agri-cultural commodity, as of any date, shall that price for the commodity which will give to the commodity a purchasing power with respect to articles that farmers buy equivalent to the purchasing power of such commodity in the base period; and which will also reflect current interest pay-ments per acre on farm indebtedness secured by real estate, tax payments per acre on farm real estate, costs of all farm labor (on the basis of the national average and including hired workers, farm operators, and members of the families of farm operators engaged in work on the farm, computed for all labor on the basis of wage rates for hired farm labor), and freight rates, as contrasted with such interest payments, tax payments, farm labor costs, and freight rates during the base period; or

(ii) the alternative parity price for the commodity determined as provided in sub-paragraph (B) of this paragraph, whichever is higher. For the purpose of clause (1) of the preceding sentence the base period shall be the period August 1909 to July 1914 in the case of all agricultural commodities except tobacco, the period August 1919 to July 1929 in the case of all kinds of tobacco except burley and flue-cured, and the period August 1934 to July 1939 in the case of burley and flue-cured tobacco.

On page 71, line 12, it is proposed to strike out "(1) (A) The 'parity price'" and insert in lieu thereof "(B) The 'alternative parity price'."

On page 71, line 16, it is proposed to strike out "(B)" and insert in lieu thereof "(C)."

On page 72, line 4, it is proposed to strike out "(C)" and insert in lieu thereof "(D)."

On page 72, line 7, before the word "and", it is proposed to insert the following: "costs of all farm labor (on the basis of the national average and including hired workers, farm operators, and members of the families of farm operators engaged in work on the farm, computed for all such labor on the basis of wage rates for hired farm labor)."

On page 2, line 9, after "rates", it is proposed to insert "costs."

On page 72, line 11, it is proposed to strike out "(D)" and insert in lieu thereof "(E)."

Beginning with line 14 on page 72 it is proposed to strike out all down to and including line 4 on page 73.

On page 73, line 6, it is proposed to strike out "and (E)."

On page 73, lines 7 and 8, it is proposed to strike out "subparagraphs (A) and (E)" and insert in lieu thereof "subparagraph (A)."

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President-

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Georgia is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. RUSSELL. Having failed in my effort to get a good bill at one bite, I desire to offer my amendment "K" to undertake to improve the pending bill. The amendment does two things. First, it includes in the parity formula all farm labor. The Senate has had that issue before it heretofore and has voted to include farm labor in the parity formula.

The amendment does another thing. It adopts the original provision of the Aiken bill, as introduced, providing the basis on which farm loans are made. The Aiken bill as originally introducedand it will be found in the matter that is stricken out-allowed two bases for these loans, one of them being the existing parity formula, and the other being the new parity formula which is established by this bill, whichever is the higher. If Members of the Senate do not desire to have a lower loan rate, this amendment gives them an opportunity to meet their wishes in the Aiken bill, because it provides that the loan rate shall be based upon either the new parity formula established by the bill, about which there has been so much discussion and controversy, or on the old farm parity formula, including farm labor, whichever shall be higher.

I think that is a perfectly fair proposal. I regret that the committee saw fit to strike the provision from the original bill. This amendment proposes to reinstate it. I do not care to attempt to discuss this question in the 5 minutes allowed me, but I do wish to say that if we are to pass this bill we should do what we can to get a fair parity formula while we are at it. Farm labor and the labor of the family on the farm should be taken into account in computing a parity formula. The Senate has voted at least twice in the past to bring that factor into the parity formula. Now that we are adopting a long-range program, one that will be permanent from now on into the endless reaches of eternity, while the opportunity is afforded us, we should correct this error and vote to put farm labor into the parity formula.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield. Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. net effect of this amendment be to increase the cost of labor or decrease it, or will it have any effect whatsoever upon the cost of labor?

Mr. RUSSELL. It does not affect the cost of labor. It merely brings that ele-ment of cost, whatever it may be, into the computation of the parity formula.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Is it based on an average?

Mr. RUSSELL. It is based upon an average, established by the Bureau of Agricultural Economics. They establish every year the average cost of farm labor of certain types.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. So they set the price of farm labor.

Mr. RUSSELL. No; they ascertain what has been paid for farm labor. They do not fix the price of farm labor. This is not a price-fixing amendment. It merely brings into the parity formula the element of the cost of labor, just as the cost of what the farmer buys, what he pays in taxes, and the interest on his mortgage are all included in the parity formula.

No one can deny that labor is an essential element in the cost of production of agricultural commodities. This amendment recognizes that fact—not only hired labor, but labor of the farmer's family. If we are to adopt a longrange program, it would be very unfair to the farmers of the Nation to leave out this important element in the cost of production which all farmers have to pay.

Mr. President, I have not the time in 5 minutes to go into this question at any great length; but if the long-range bill is to be approved, this amendment will strengthen it immeasurably. I hope the Senate will adopt it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AIKEN].

Mr. AIKEN. I yield to the Senator from Illinois [Mr. Lucas].

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I rise in opposition to the pending amendment. This is the most far-reaching amendment any one can imagine, if one really does not understand what is in it. We were told by the Senator from Georgia that we discussed a bill this afternoon with many features in it that were not understood. Here is an amendment which would require a long time to discuss. It is far-reaching and important. It should not under any circumstances be accepted after 10 minutes of debate.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, will

the Senator yield?

Mr. LUCAS. I cannot yield. I have only 5 minutes.

When the parity formula was enacted by Congress many years ago labor, as one of the factors, was considered by the best minds of agriculture at that time. At that particular moment labor was cheap. If Congress had put labor into the parity formula as one of the factors at that moment, we would have denied the farmer the parity prices he obtained at that time for many years thereafter.

As prices rose and as labor became more costly, and when the element of labor, figured into a parity formula, would give the farmer a better price for his produce, the same individuals who denied labor a place in the formula in the beginning then wanted it. They now want it, in order to give the farmer more money for his products.

Of course labor is an element. No one denies that labor is a factor, but it was not considered in the beginning. should not consider it now. If the time should ever come when labor would again be cheap, the same group who now want labor included would be saying, "Let us take labor out, because labor is cheap, and the farmer will get more if we take it out." It is a dangerous thing with which to tamper.

Furthermore, it is administratively impossible to do what this amendment would attempt.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LUCAS. No; I cannot yield. I regret it.

When we talk about including farm operators and members of the family of farm operators engaged in work on the farm, and computing all such labor on the basis of wage rates for hired farm labor, think what that would do. In discussing hired labor alone in the committee hearings, we discovered it was difficult to determine how such a provision could be administered. Now it is proposed to include everyone in the family in the formula. We never could get around to administering the law in a way that would be efficient and honest. It would be a case of guesswork from beginning to end.

Mr. President, this is no time to tam-per with the parity formula, which has worked so well for the American farmer all these years. Practically every important witness, including Mr. Kline, of the American Farm Bureau Federation said, "Leave the parity formula as it is."

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LUCAS. No; I cannot yield. I am sorry

Mr. RUSSELL, I yielded when requested to do so.

Mr. LUCAS. The Senator will have more time. I did not interrupt him. He knows that we are operating under a 5-minute limitation.

Mr. President, if there was ever an amendment which should be voted down. this is the one.

Mr. THYE. Mr. President-

So Mr. Russell's amendment lettered "K" to the committee amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Are there further amendments to be proposed?

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I call up my amendment lettered "J" to the committee amendment, and ask that it be stated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment to the committee amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In the committee amendment, on page 72, line 6, after the comma, it is proposed to insert the following: "costs of all farm labor (on the basis of the national average and including hired workers, farm operators, and members of the families of farm operators engaged in work on the farm, computed for all such labor on the basis of wage rates for hired farm labor).

On page 72, in line 9, after "prices". it is propose to insert "costs."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Georgia is recognized for 5 minutes

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, the amendment does not call for a loan value at a high rate of parity or under the 10year moving average. It is confined solely and exclusively to the question of whether or not the farmer and those engaged in agricultural pursuits shall be allowed some consideration for the tremendously high cost of labor that goes into agricultural production today. The Senate may, if it chooses, vote down my amendments, but the amendments are fair, they are just, and the cost of production is the element that goes into every other commodity sold on the American market today.

Mr. President, I merely want to say a word or two in reply to the Senator from Illinois, who was not kind enough to yield. He said this amendment would disturb the parity formula when the bill of which he is the sponsor wipes out the parity formula we have always known and writes a completely new formula. I am trying to perfect that for-mula by protecting the farmers and those engaged in agriculture in what they have to pay in farm wages today.

He stated that the amendment was administratively impossible. When we discussed the matter here once before, and the Senator from Illinois was opposing the proposal on the floor, the Senate was dealing with the farm problem more calmly than it is this evening. When the Senator from Illinois rose on that same question, he said it could not possibly be determined what element of wages went into the cost of production in farming and into the parity formula. He then proceeded for the next 15 minutes to read a speech which had been prepared in the Department, which set forth in great detail the exact changes which would be brought about in parity if farm wages were included, and said it would put farm products so high that wages should not be included.

There is nothing administratively impossible about the proposition. It is fair and just and equitable, and I would ask that Senators consider it squarely on its merits.

Mr. President, I yield the remainder of my time to the Senator from Florida [Mr. Pepper].

Mr. THYE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I regret, Mr. President, obviously do not in 2 minutes have the time to yield, unless by unanimous consent my time may be extended. If that is not granted, I shall be unable to yield to the able Senator from Minnesota.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator wish the Chair to put the request to the Senate?

Mr. PEPPER. If the Senator wishes me to yield— Mr. THYE.

Mr. PEPPER. Very well. Mr. President, since I have been in the Senate I have been identified in every way I could with an effort to raise the wages of working men and women. I have been identified with every minimum-wage bill with which I could associate myself. In the past, minimum-wage legislation has been restricted to nonagricultural labor, and every time we talk about extending minimum-wage laws to agricultural labor, where the need is greater than it is even in the industrial field, we are told it cannot be done. I know it never will be done unless somehow we find a formula by which the cost of the labor the farmer hires, the money the farmer spends for wages, is included in the price he gets for his commodity; that is, in this instance, into the parity formula.

I say, Mr. President, the need is greatest among farm labor for a decent wage level. We will never get such a level unless the farmer can in some way or other be protected by having included in the price he gets for his commodity in the market place the good wages he pays his working men and women in the field. I believe it is a salutary step forward. It is a principle of equity and fairness to the farmer laborers, to put them on a parity eventually with the industrial labor of the Nation. I hope the amendment will be adopted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Senator's time has expired. Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. AIKEN. I yield 5 minutes to the Senator from Minnesota.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Minnesota is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. THYE. If farm labor were figured in the parity formula under the bill, it would have this effect: During an inflated era, when prices were high, parity would be raised by the inclusion of farm labor possibly as much as 5 percent. For the effect in a depressed era in agriculture, when prices are low, suppose we go back to the early 1930's. If we then figured the hired farm wage into the parity formula, it would have had a tendency to lower the parity and possibly would have brought parity several points below the actual parity that would have obtained if the farm labor were not figured into the formula.

It was for that reason the economists, the Department of Agriculture, and finally the committee, made the decision that they would accept the formula which did not include farm labor.

I think the able Senator from Georgia will agree that in figuring the formula for parity in the high inflationary prices we have today, we certainly would not want to increase the cost by including farm labor in the parity. But in the event we had a low, depressed condition, a return to agriculture that would be comparable, in other words, to what it was in the early 1930's, we certainly would want every factor to help lift the parity or the price structure of the agricultural economy at that time.

For that reason, I think, Mr. President. if we should adopt the amendment offered by the able Senator from Georgia it would be a mistaken attempt to aid the farmer. I would not do one thing that would injure agriculture in any way.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THYE. The able Senator from Georgia had his moment of time, and I must beg that I be permitted to use my moments of time.

Mr. RUSSELL. I yielded to Senators all afternoon.

Mr. THYE. Mr. President, each and every member of the committee sat through many, many hours of public hearings on the entire question this past fall and during the winter months of the second session of the Eightieth Congress, and studied every phase of the entire farm program. I know that every committee member who served on that subcommittee, and even the entire Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, will agree with me that every figure we received from the economists was accompanied with advice against writing into the parity formula the cost or hire of labor, including family labor.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, if the Senator has time, will he yield for a moment?

Mr. AIKEN. How much time have I left, Mr. President?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Two minutes

Mr. RUSSELL. The Senator can yield now if he will. He has 2 minutes.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, I should like to say what the Senator from Minnesota has said is true, that including the cost of hired labor and family labor in the parity formula would increase the entire price of farm commodities during periods of inflation or periods such as we are going through now, about 5 percent. If, however, the time came when labor became more plentiful and cheap, the effect of including the cost of labor would be to lower the parity prices of farm products below what they would normally be. The committee took this into consideration in fixing the levels of the bill at which farm commodities should be supported. Had we expected that farm labor would be included in the formula, we then would have so arranged the bill that the level of support would have been somewhat lower, but we took into consideration in fixing the level at which farm commodities would be supported the fact that the cost of farm labor or the value of the family labor, which is very difficult indeed to figure, should not be included in the computation of the parity program for farm commodities.

I believe that the bill is very well balanced as it is, and I do not believe it would be advisable to adopt any amendment which would have the effect of raising parity prices on an average of 5 percent.

Tht PRESIDENT pro tempore. time on the amendment has expired.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment lettered "J" offered by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL].

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Chief Clerk called the roll.

Mr. WHERRY. I announce that the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. Bush-FIELD], the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CAPPER], the Senator from Indiana [Mr. JENNER], and the Senator from Maine [Mr. White] are necessarily absent. If present and voting, the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. Bushfield], the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CAPPER], and the Senator from Indiana [Mr. JENNER] would vote "nay."

The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. Bridges] and the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. Moore] are detained on official business. If present and voting, the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. Bridges] would vote "nay."

The Senator from California [Mr. KNOWLAND] is absent by leave of the Senate. If present and voting, the Senator from California would vote "nay."

The Senator from Massachusetts IMr. Longel is necessarily absent and is paired with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE]. If present and voting, the Senator from Massachusetts would vote "nay" and the Senator from Georgia would vote "yea."

The Senator from Indiana [Mr. CAPE-HART] is unavoidably detained. If present and voting, the Senator from Indiana would vote "nay."

Mr. LUCAS. I announce that the Senator from Georgia [Mr. George] is absent because of a death in his family.

The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CHAVEZ], the Senator from Washington [Mr. Magnuson], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCarran], the Senator from Maryland [Mr. O'CONOR], the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY], and the Senator from New York [Mr. Wag-NERl are necessarily absent.

The Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS] is absent by leave of the Senate, having been appointed a national delegate by the President to the annual conference of the International Labor Organization, meeting in San Francisco, Calif.

On this amendment I announce that the Senator from Maryland [Mr. O'CONOR] would vote "nay," if present.

I announce further that the Senator from Georgia [Mr. George], who would vote "yea," if present, is paired on this vote with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Longe], who would vote "nay," if present.

So Mr. Russell's amendment lettered "J" was rejected.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I now call up my amendment lettered "I," and ask that it be stated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will state the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 72, line 6. after the word "buy" and the comma it is proposed to insert "wages paid hired farm labor," and on page 72, line 9, after the word "prices", insert the word "wages."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Geor-

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President-The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Georgia is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, the amendment just rejected by the Senate recognized the labor the farmer does on his farm, the labor the farmer's wife does in the field, and the labor his children do on the farm, in computing the parity index. That has now been eliminated by the vote just taken, and is not before the Senate for further consideration. The amendment which is now proposed merely asks that wages paid hired farm labor, in other words, the cash taken out of the farmer's pocket and paid to farm labor, shall be considered in computing the parity formula.

Mr. President, the Senate may vote again that wage costs have nothing to do with costs of production, and should not be considered in what a farmer should receive. I appreciate the fact that the Senate has given me a record vote on the two votes which have heretofore been had. I have learned a bitter lesson in regard to the 5-minute rule by what has transpired up until now. The very able Senator from Minnesota, in discussing the last amendment voted on, said that this was a period when farm wages were high, and that therefore the prices of commodities would be run up too high if we included all farm labor.

Mr. President, I merely wish to call attention to the fact that the bill which the Senator from Minnesota sponsors as a coauthor contains this provision in arriving at what is parity:

The general level of prices for articles and services that farmers buy.

That is in the committee bill. The general level of the prices for what the farmer buys is considered in arriving at the proper parity under the committee bill. The prices of what the farmer buys today are certainly inflated. No one would deny that the cost to the farmer of the things he purchases are approximately what they were in 1940. If they go down, under the parity formula in the pending bill the farmers' parity will go down with them.

Mr. President, this amendment recognizes that farm wages are at an all time high, and that the wages should be considered—this refers to out-of-pocket wages paid by the farmer—in arriving at a proper parity formula.

I submit that the cost of farm wages, the amount the farmer or the ranch owner or the plantation operator reaches in his pocket and pays out to the hands employed on his place, is as much a cost of production as anything else the farmer has to purchase, and that it is unfair and unjust to adopt this long-range program without taking into consideration farm wages actually paid out of pocket by the farmer in the computation of parity.

The amendment would have the effect of increasing parity a little; that is quite true; it might increase parity of wheat 2 or 3 cents a bushel, and corn a like amount. But the bill would lower the parity on wheat by 25 or 30 cents a bushel, it would lower the parity on corn, and would lower the parity on cotton by 4 cents a pound. This small amount should be restored to the parity value because, while Senators may blind themselves to it if they will, what the farmer actually pays out of pocket for labor is just as essentially a part of the parity formula as the purchase of a tractor, or the purchase of a truck, or of any other commodity the farmer may need in the planting or making of his

The Senate has denied the farmer the right to take into consideration his own wages, it has denied him the right to take into consideration the labor of his children in the field with him. I implore the Senate at least to permit him to have recognition in the parity formula, as an element of what constitutes a fair base, the labor cost he pays out of his own pocket.

Mr. President, in the great civilization in which we live today wages have advanced in all lines in the past several years. The level of industrial wages has increased some three or four times. The cost of farm labor has greatly increased. No one complains when there is a slight increase in the price of a commodity. For example, when Mr. Lewis gets a high wage rate for his coal miners, the price of coal rises a few cents a ton, and no one expects anything else. But the farmer is expected to pay the present high wages out of pocket and have the parity held down to an unfair and uninst level

I say, Mr. President, that if we are to write a long-range farm program, it is unjust, it is unfair, it is unsound and un-American, to eliminate from the program the wages which are actually paid out of pocket by the farmer in computing what is a fair parity for the product which he has for sale.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. AIKEN. I yield to the Senator from Illinois [Mr. Lucas].

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Illinois is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. LUCAS. I have only 5 minutes.
Mr. HATCH. I will make the question very short. I have voted with the Senator from Illinois on the previous amendments, but I have always believed the wages paid out by a farmer were a farm cost, and I wish the Senator would explain to me what the word "services" in line 5, page 72 means, and why wages paid out in cash are not included under "services."

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I do not propose to discuss that question at all. I propose to answer the Senator from Georgia under the 5-minute rule.

The same arguments made a moment ago in opposition to the other amendment submitted by the Senator from Georgia are apropos to the amendment he now offers.

On page 72 of the bill, paragraph (C) reads as follows:

(C) The "parity index," as of any date, shall be the ratio of (i) the general level of prices for articles and services that farmers buy, interest on farm indebtedness secured by farm real estate, and taxes on farm real estate, for the calendar month ending last before such date to (ii) the general level of such prices, rates, and taxes during the period January 1910 to December 1914, inclusive

Mr. President, that is the parity formula which has been in existence almost from the very beginning. Yet I recall taxes were added, and that was used as a factor in the consideration of the parity formula.

It is strange that in offering the amendment which was proposed as a complete substitute for the bill offered by the Senator from Vermont the Senator from Georgia did not see fit to change the parity formula. He was content with the amendment he offered without any change in the parity formula what-

If the Senator was so interested in farm labor as he has contended here all along, it would have been reasonable to have proposed such a change in the parity formula and had it adopted for the period of the next 18 months.

No, Mr. President; the same old argument has been made year after year since the cost of labor has become so high. What we would be doing if we added this as a factor or a part of the equation making up the parity formula would be adding 5 percent to the present parity price. Instead of having a 90-percent parity, we would be giving the farmer a parity of 95 percent.

Mr. President, after all, I undertake to say that the farmers of America are not asking for this change; at least, the farmers of the State whence I come are not asking for it. The farmer is satisfied with the deal he has received under the present parity formula. The farmer of America is better off today than at any time in all his history, under the parity formula we have been operating through the Department of Agriculture all these years. This is no time to change it now, to cause all the administrative confusion which would result from adding the cost of hired labor. I make the same argument I made before against the amendment, and I ask that it be rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. All time on the amendment has expired, and the question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. RUSSELL. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Chief Clerk called the roll.

Mr. WHERRY. I announce that the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. Bushfield], the Senator from Kansas [Mr. Capper], the Senator from Indiana [Mr. Jenner], and the Senator from Maine [Mr. White] are necessarily absent. If present and voting, the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. Bushfield], the Senator from Kansas [Mr. Capper], and the Senator from Indiana [Mr. Jenner] would vote "nay."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The committee amendment, as amended, is open to further amendment.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I offer my amendment No. 2, and ask to have it stated

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 51, line 14, after the period, it is proposed to strike out beginning with the words "The Secretary" and the remaining lines on the page, and to insert the following:

CONSERVATION SURVEY

(d) In order to effectuate the purposes of this act the Secretary of Agriculture shall, as rapidly as practicable, make a conservation survey of the Nation's present and potential agricultural lands, and he is authorized to analyze, publish, and distribute information concerning such survey and to provide land use capability maps to landowners and op-erators applicable to their units of land and to assist them in interpreting and analyzing such maps. On the basis of this conservation survey, maps shall also be prepared delineating those lands suitable for cultivation, those primarily suitable for the production of forests and forest products, those primarily suitable for range livestock production, those primarily suitable for wildlife purposes, and shall specify in addition those lands potentially suitable for intensive agricul-tural use through irrigation, drainage, clearing, or otherwise, and this survey shall be utilized by all agencies of the Federal Government in the development of agricultural lands within their jurisdiction.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I propose this amendment because we need an accurate inventory of our present agricultural land and our potential agricultural land. We need to know how much land we have. We need to know how much and where our land reserves are that are not now being used. We need to know what their quality is, and what and how much they would produce if it becomes necessary to use them. It is important to know how much land we Of the 1,142,000,000 acres of land now in farms in this country, we need to know how much of it is good, how much of it is just fair, and how much of it is poor. We should know its quality and its condition, what conservation measures and other attentions the land needs to maintain its fertility, and its productive capacity while in use.

This is a logical first step in undertaking to assure the Nation of a supply of food, fiber, and other raw materials that can come only from land that is properly used and protected. The survey proposed in this amendment would show the best use for each piece of land and it would indicate the treatment required on each farm in order to prevent erosion damage and to maintain its productivity. It is the only sound basis on which we can develop and direct any long-range agricultural program. It will be valuable for each individual farmer as he works out a soil-conservation program for his own farm and as he plans his own production year after year.

No well managed enterprise, either private or public, would try to conduct its business without this much of an inventory of its basic assets. We are spending a lot of time and hundreds of millions of dollars of public funds on various agricultural programs without an adequate inventory of the land that is basic to every agricultural program. The land is the source of most of the raw material upon which this Nation is dependent. Therefore, we have a need to obtain the essential information about the land as a basis for conserving it and as premise for planning our farm programs.

I have checked with authorities in the Department of Agriculture, and the information that I have received would indicate that it is both possible and feasible to undertake such an inventory and that it could be completed in about 5 years.

Mr. President, because of the lack of time, I ask unanimous consent that the remainder of the statement I had intended to make be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the remainder of Mr. Wherry's statement was ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

What is a conservation survey, and what features are shown? The conservation survey is a detailed record of physical land conditions on each farm. It shows variations in such features as the kind of soil, slope of the land, erosion damage, and present land use. This information is recorded on a map, usually on an aerial photograph, and shows all features of the land that affect its capability for use and its needs for management. What is a land-use capability map? The land-use capability map is a map that shows what the land can do and what it needs for permanent production. Detailed information obtained in the conservation survey about soil, slope, erosion, and other land features is bolled down into eight classes to show specifically the land suitable for cultivation, grazing, forestry, and wildlife, and the intensity of treatment needed to protect the land.

How much land has been surveyed? Two hundred and seventy-five million acres of land have already been surveyed in this way. Other surveys that have been made will be utilized by supplementing them with additional information in order to make them adequate as a basis for developing farm and ranch conservation plans.

What will be the cost in making such a land inventory? The cost of making this farm-land inventory will be about 5 cents per acre. This cost is less than two-tenths of 1 percent of the value of farm land.

At 5 cents an acre for 1,142,000,000 acres in farms, the cost would be over $57,000,000, but much of the land has already been surveyed—it is estimated that it will cost about $40,000,000 to complete such a survey of all the land in farms.

Who will use the information obtained from the survey? It provides essential information about the land for making farm conservation plans on individual farms and ranches, and will provide it in time to carry out soil-conservation practices with the greatest efficiency.

The survey gives information that is essen-

The survey gives information that is essential in planning a long-range agricultural program. It would serve as a basis for determining the acreages of land suitable for specific uses and the treatment needed to protect the land in those uses.

It will provide information for flood control, drainage, irrigation, and other similar activities.

What does the individual farmer get out of this survey? The farmer gets a map of his farm that shows him the best use for each field and aids him in selecting the practices needed to protect and improve his land. Specifically, the map of each farm that the farmer gets will show field and pasture boundaries, streams, roads, building sites, the eroded or steep lands that are now in cultivation that should be put in grass or trees, the wet areas that can be improved by drainage, the location of waterways, the fields that need terracing and strip cropping, the soils that are best adapted to special crops like alfalfa, tobacco, or peanuts, etc.

What is the difference between a soil survey and a conservation survey? The soil survey classifies and maps soils showing how they differ in color, texture, structure, and other features as they occur in their natural state.

The conservation survey is a practical inventory of the land conditions on a farm-by-farm basis. It shows, in addition to the kind of soil, the amount of slope, the erosion that has occurred, and whether the land is cultivated, is in grass or trees. It provides the necessary information to plan and apply practices and measures to conserve the soil.

What is a land capability map? It is a map of a farm, colored so as to show the different kinds of land; that based on the information from the conservation survey, together with knowledge of the climate, indicates what the land needs, and what it can best produce while in continuous use.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I think the amendment should be taken to conference.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, I have not read the amendment. I have not seen anything before but the heading of it. I should be willing to accept it and take it to conference with the understanding that it does not bind the Senate conferees if there is something in it which we would otherwise oppose. I do not think there is.

Mr. WHERRY. I thank the Senator. I think the Senator will agree with me and I am satisfied the Senate conferees will agree with me, that the amendment should be included in the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. Wherry].

The amendment to the committee amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I now offer my amendment No. 3 and ask to have it stated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. At the proper place in the bill it is proposed to insert the following:

LAND SURVEYS AND DEVELOPMENT TIMETABLE

(e) Prior to the first request for an annual appropriation for purposes of this act, the Secretary of Agriculture shall prepare and submit to the Congress a preliminary land conservation and development timetable showing the current rates and extent of land damage in the United States, the dates practicable for the completion of the conservation survey, and a specification of the land treatment in his opinion deemed necessary, including estimated costs thereof. On completion and analysis of the conservation survey of the Nation's land, the Secretary of Agriculture shall revise the land conservation and development timetable accordingly and shall submit it to Congress.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, this amendment simply provides a timetable for the conservation program which we have just asked the Senator from Vermont to take to conference. I think it is necessary if we are going into the conservation program. It seems to me that we should not only make an inventory of the land, but should also have some sort of timetable showing us how fast we can proceed with conservation methods. Also there ought to be some idea of whether or not we are going too fast.

Mr. President, in view of the late hour and the limitation on debate to 5 minutes to each side, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a statement I have prepared.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

I propose a conservation timetable in order that we may begin to apply some real business principles to the conservation job in the United States. Everyone agrees now that we have a conservation job to do and everyone agrees that it ought to be done right. What we have all failed to find out, so far, is just how big the job is—and how much time we have to do it in.

The way we are going now we could go on and on with these soil-conservation programs until doomsday. The way we are going now I cannot tell whether we will have the land of the country conserved by the year 2,006 or by the year 3,000. I am convinced, however, that if we keep up this unbusinesslike approach to the job we shall come face to face with the fact, one of these days, that there is not much land left to conserve.

I am convinced of another thing. The conservation job ahead of us has some size that can be determined. Maybe every last acre in the country needs conservation work. Maybe three-quarters of our land needs the work—or two-thirds. I do not know what the percentage may be, but I am sure there must be one. Only we do not know today the size of the lab was at trying to deal with the size of the job we are trying to deal with.

We have been going at conservation blindly.
We have not only falled so far to find out how big the job is, we have falled to find out how fast we must do the job. I know that if land is wearing out fast, you can't loiter along and take 20 or 30 years to protect it. Any businessman who handled his machinery and equipment that way would be driven to the wall. On the other hand, I am sure that there is much land in the country that is not being damaged very fast. Some of it is not being damaged at all. We do not know how much of our land is being damaged fast; how much is being damaged slowly; or how much is free from damage. This is most unbusinesslike. How can we hope to deal intelligently with this highly important matter if we do not know either the size of the job or how much time we have to do it?

We ought to take steps to find out these facts. Then we ought to provide a conservation program especially designed to meet the needs—doing what needs to be done each year—and then finishing the job.

I am told that we have some preliminary information along this line. I am told that approximately one-quarter of all our cropland is being damaged at a very serious rate. The trained conservationists in the States and in the Federal Government say that this land will suffer permanent damage unless it is given sound conservation treatment within the next 10 to 15 years. They call this a critical rate.

Another quarter of our cropland, I am informed, is being damaged at a slower rate, but still fast enough to cause us grave concern. This land will suffer a permanent loss in its ability to produce unless it is given conservation protection within about 20 years.

Our conservation program should be operated on a schedule. We ought to know how much we need to do each year in order to protect the vital soil resources of the country, and then we ought to do it. With such a schedule—I call it a conservation timetable—we can go ahead with some real assurance that we are dealing effectively with the job. We can proceed with some assurance that the money we are appropriating for soil conservation is actually getting the job done—so much every year.

The conservation job in the United States can be scheduled ahead, just as businessmen schedule their operations ahead. With a conservation timetable we can get the conservation job done surely and on time. It would be the most practical and economical way of getting it done. Without a timetable we shall have to go along appropriating huge sums of money year after year, never knowing whether we are actually meeting the needs of the Nation, and indulging in a hitor-miss flirtation with one of the most serious problems facing the country.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I ask the Senator from Vermont to accept the amendment and take it to conference and see whether or not the conferees will accept the amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, a point of information.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is the Senator raising a point of order?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I wish to find out something. I wish to find out what happened to the previous amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska. I did not hear the Chair say anything about it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair announced that it was agreed to.
Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. WHERRY. If I have any time left.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator has 3 minutes.

Mr. LANGER. Will the Senator explain what is meant by a timetable?

Mr. WHERRY. I mean a schedule showing how fast we should go with conservation methods annually. I think we should go as fast as we can, but I think we should proceed over a period of years according to a timetable and make our appropriations annually on that basis to cover all the land—not too fast and not too slow. I think we are going at the program hit or niss. I think the amendment should be taken to conference to see if a timetable can be worked out

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska calls for a tremendous job on the part of the Department of Agriculture. I suppose it is a job which should be done. Whether now is the time to do it, I do not know. I am willing to take the amendment to conference. If it is left in the bill, there will still have to be an appropriation, and I doubt if it will be possible to obtain an appropriation for this purpose between now and the end of the session.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHERRY. If I have any time left.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator has 1 minute.

Mr. BUTLER. I have some comments on the bill relating to the subject of conservation which I should like to have inserted in the Record at this point.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT BY SENATOR HUGH BUTLER, OF NEBRASKA, ON S. 2318

Mr. President, in my judgment it is very unfortunate that we are forced by circumstances to take action on such an important matter so late in this session and under such trying and confusing conditions. I have a fear that many of the decisions we are making may not be wise decisions. This is a very complicated bill. It will have farreaching effects on every farmer in the country. It deserves more careful and extended consideration than it is receiving.

Thus far, almost all the debate has centered around the new parity formula and the new proposals for price supports contained in the bill. Yet these provisions relating to farm prices are not the only important changes provided for in the bill. In titles I and II of the bill, a wholesale reorganization of the administrative agencies handling the agricultural program is provided. These titles would have far-reaching effects on the administration of the soil-conservation program, on the payments for conservation practices, and on other programs, if these should be enacted in their present form. Yet they have received almost no discussion during the course of the debate. There is real danger that they may be enacted into law without any real consideration by the Congress.

I do not believe such far-reaching changes in the organization of the Department should be enacted at the present time without much more thorough consideration by the Congress. In fact, I have considered preparing an amendment or amendments striking out all those sections of the bill which would reorganize the administrative framework for the programs. I finally decided not to offer such amendments at this time, since I realize it would be out of the question to ask the Senate to give them detailed consideration at this late hour. In any case, I feel fairly confident that the House will refuse even to consider these proposed administrative changes. Before the final vote is taken, however, I want to record a protest against these changes in the conservation program and other programs, so that it cannot be said there was no opposition to them.

Mr. President, very briefly I want to mention at least a few reasons why I believe this wholesale revision of the conservation program would be most unwise. First of all, we have not had time to give the implications of the new plan fair consideration. I believe that is obvious. We should not attempt to reshuffle the principal bureaus of the Department of Agriculture, the State and County Committees, and all the rest of the Department without giving very careful thought to every aspect of the proposed change.

Second, we already have at work a Commission—the Hoover Commission—which has been hard at work for some time on a general investigation and study of the organization of the entire Government, with a view to recommending changes and improvements in our methods of operation. I understand that the Hoover Commission is going very thoroughly into the various problems of the organization and administration of the farm programs. It seems that it would be foolish to try to legislate such changes at this time, when the Hoover Commission, early next year, may report recommendations along entirely different lines. I believe I am just as well aware of the need for certain changes in the methods of conducting these programs as are the sponsors of this bill. I do not believe, however, that this is the time or the way to make those changes.

Third, the effect of this bill apparently will be to place control over the soil-conservation program in the hands of county and State committees, rather than in the hands of the soil-conservation districts. I do not believe that would be wise. I am not sure it would even be practical. The sponsors of the bill seem to forget that the soil-conservation districts were authorized and created by action of each of the 48 States. This district set-up should not be wiped cut, as proposed in this act. It is doing an excellent job for conservation at the present time. Personally, I do not see why the soil-conservation districts should be changed at all. They are one of the most successful elements of our agricultural program.

There are other reasons why no such drastic organizational changes should be made at this time. I will not try to give them in detail. I hope I have said enough to show why this proposal should not be rushed through in such a hasty fashion. I sincerely hope that the House will refuse to be stampeded in this matter, and will insist that these questions be put over for more thorough study.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. All time has expired.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. Wherry] to the committee amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The committee amendment is open to further amendment. If there be no further amendment to be proposed, the question is on agreeing to the committee amendment as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill (S. 2318) was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading and was read the third time.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, in order to expedite the legislative process, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry be discharged from the further consideration of House bill 6248, which is the stopgap bill which was passed by the House; that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 6248; and that the House bill be amended by striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting in lieu thereof the language of Senate bill

2318, as amended, the bill which has just gone to a third reading. The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry will be discharged from the further consideration of House bill 6248, a bill to authorize the Secretary of Agriculture to stabilize prices of agricultural commodities; to amend section 22 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act, reenacted by the Agricultural Marketing Agreement Act of 1937; and for other purposes.

Is there objection to the present consideration of House bill 6248?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, House bill 6248 will be amended by striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting the text of Senate bill 2318 as amended.

The amendment is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That this act may be cited as the "Agricultural Act of 1948".

DECLARATION OF POLICY

SEC. 2. It is hereby recognized that a sound national economy requires that each segment of the population be maintained as an efficient producer and a constant consumer of goods and services, and it is hereby declared to be the policy of Congress to provide for a coordinated program, to be administered by the Secretary of Agriculture in cooperation with agencies in the several States, and designed—to restore, develop, conserve, and wisely use our basic resources of soil, water, forests, and wildlife habitat in order to assure an abundant production of all agricultural products necessary for the general well-being of all our people;

(2) to develop a means of supporting agricultural income on a flexible basis relative to prices and production so as to foster desirable shifts in agricultural production and aid in stabilizing the national economy;

(3) to improve methods of marketing, fa-

 (3) to improve methods of marketing, facilitate distribution, and increase utilization of agricultural commodities in both domesto and foreign markets;

(4) to regulate interstate and foreign commerce in cotton, wheat, corn, tobacco, rice, and peanuts to the extent necessary to provide an orderly, adequate, and balanced flow of such commodities in interstate and foreign trade through price support, marketing quotas, diversion to various economic uses, and other means:

(5) to assist consumers in obtaining adequate and steady supplies of high-quality farm products at fair and equitable prices;

(6) to assist low-income families and school children in maintaining an adequate diet, particularly in periods of underconsumption and unemployment;

(7) to obtain full cooperation and coordinated action of land operators living on the farms in restoring, developing, conserving, and wisely using our basic resources of soil, water, forests, and wildlife habitat;

(8) to provide more adequately for the coordination and expansion of Federal and State soil surveys and other investigations, experimentation, and research pertaining to the conservation, restoration, and development of our natural agricultural resources, and for the publication of the results of such studies;

(9) to assure that payments to farmers in each State for soil-conservation practices shall be made only for practices approved by the Secretary of the United States Department of Agriculture upon the recommendation of the State agricultural council (hereinafter provided for);

(10) to provide for the fullest development and the most efficient employment of rural human resources;

(11) to provide more fully for adult education through cooperative agricultural extension work as the recognized educational and demonstrational medium for reaching farm people and others in regard to agricultural information, policies, and programs;

(12) to provide for the full development of personal initiative and local responsibility in the development and administration of programs for the maintenance of a progressive agriculture;

(13) to provide for the adaptation of agricultural programs to the different and changing needs of regional and local communities;

(14) to encourage producers, processors, and distributors to enter into marketing agreements for the supplying of adequate quantities of selected farm products at a reasonable and assured price;

(15) to continue the use of certain revenues and funds for judicious support of prices of highly perishable products, including fresh fruits, vegetables, milk, and eggs, in facilitating distribution of such products for diet improvement of low-income families and school children, in stimulating improved nutrition, and in encouraging the exportation of such products; and

(16) to assist in the retention of foreign outlets in order to (a) maintain long-run export demands, (b) prevent short-run demoralization of domestic markets, and (c) maintain productive capacity sufficient to satisfy expected long-run domestic markets plus foreign demand for agricultural products.

TITLE I-REORGANIZATION

DECENTRALIZATION OF FUNCTIONS

Sec. 101. The Secretary of Agriculture (hereinaster called the 'Secretary") shall stablish an agency, to be known as the "Bureau of Agricultural Conservation and Improvement," to exercise all functions of the Secretary and of the various bureaus and agencies within the Department of Agriculture which (1), prior to the enactment of this act, were assigned to the Soil Con-servation Service or to the Agricultural Conservation Programs Branch of the Production and Marketing Administration, or (2) the Secretary deems to be principally related to soil conservation and improvement or to those aspects of programs of the Department of Agriculture which require direct dealings by the Department with farmers; except that, subject to the supervision and direction of the Secretary(a) the educational, informational, and demonstrational features of such functions shall be exercised, in the several States, Alaska, Hawaii, and Puerto Rico, through the Extension Service of the United States Department of Agriculture in cooperation with the agencies performing cooperative agricultural extension work;

(b) the research and investigational features of such functions shall be exercised in the several States, Alaska, Hawaii, and Puerto Rico through the agricultural experiment stations in cooperation with the Secretary acting through the Office of Experiment Stations; and

(c) such functions, except as provided by clauses (a) and (b) of this section, shall within the continental United States be performed at State and county levels, insofar as the Secretary may deem practicable, by the State agricultural councils, the county and community agricultural program committees, and the county agricultural program executive committees, all hereinafter provided for.

Except as provided in clauses (a) and (b) of this section, the furnishing of technical assistance, and machinery and equipment to soil-conservation districts and others, as heretofore performed by the Soil Conservation Service, shall be performed by the Bureau of Agricultural Conservation and Improvement in cooperation with the State agricultural councils established pursuant to this act and the soil-conservation districts established by State laws. The functions assigned pursuant to this section to the State agricultural councils and the agencies performing cooperative agricultural extension work shall be closely coordinated by the secretary and by such councils and agencies.

Conservation survey

(d) In order to effectuate the purposes of this act, the Secretary of Agriculture shall, as rapidly as practicable, make a conservation survey of the Nation's present and potential agricultural lands, and he is authorized to analyze, publish, and distribute information concerning such survey and to provide land use capability maps to landowners and operators applicable to their units of land and to assist them in interpreting and analyzing such maps. On the basis of this conservation survey, maps shall also be prepared delineating those lands suitable for cultivation, those primarily suitable for the produc-tion of forests and forest products, those primarily suitable for range livestock production, those primarily suitable for wildlife purposes, and shall specify in addition those lands potentially suitable for intensive agri-cultural use through irrigation, drainage, elearing, or otherwise, and this survey shall be utilized by all agencies of the Federal Government in the development of agricultural lands within their jurisdiction.

Land conservation and development timetable

(e) Prior to the first request for an annual appropriation for purposes of this act, the Secretary of Agriculture shall prepare and submit to the Congress a preliminary land conservation and development timetable, showing the current rates and extent of land damage to the United States, the dates practicable for the completion of the conservation survey, and a specification of the land treatment in his opinion deemed necessary, including estimated costs thereof. On completion and analysis of the conservation survey of the Nation's land, the Secretary of Agriculture shall revise the land conservation and development timetable accordingly and shall submit it to Congress.

APPROPRIATIONS AVAILABLE FOR FUNCTIONS TO BE PERFORMED AS COOPERATIVE EXTENSION WORK

SEC. 102. (a) (A) Any sums hereafter appropriated, other than as grants-in-aid, and available for functions which the Secretary determines to be functions required by section 101 (a) of this act to be exercised through the Extension Service and cooperating agencies in the several States and the Territory of Hawaii, to the extent that such funds are available at the time the Secretary makes such determination, and (B) any sums appropriated specifically for functions covered by section 101 (a), shall be paid to the several States and the Territory of Hawaii in the same manner and subject to the same conditions and limitations as the additional sums appropriated under the act entitled "An act to provide for cooperative agricultural extension work between the agricultural colleges in the several States receiving the benefits of the act of Congress approved July 2, 1862, and all acts supplementary thereto, and the United States Department of Agriculture," approved May 8, 1914 (U. S. C., title 7, secs. 341-343, 344-348), except that—

(1) not more than 2 per centum of the sums so appropriated and available in each fiscal year shall be available for paying expenses of the Extension Service of the United States Department of Agriculture; and

(2) the remainder of the sums so appropriated and available in each fiscal year shall be paid to the several States and the Territory of Hawaii, without any requirement that equal sums be provided from any other sources, in the same proportions as the sums appropriated for such fiscal year pursuant to section 23 of the act entitled "An act to provide for research into basic laws and principles relating to agriculture and to provide for the further development of cooperative agricultural extension work and the more complete endowment and support of landgrant colleges," approved June 29, 1935, as amended (U. S. C., title 7, sec. 343d-1).

(b) The sums paid pursuant to this sec-

(b) The sums paid pursuant to this section shall be in addition to and not in substitution for sums appropriated under such act of May 8, 1914, as amended and supplemented, or sums otherwise appropriated for agricultural extension work. Allotments to any State or the Territory of Hawaii for any fiscal year as provided by this section shall be available for payment to such State or the Territory of Hawaii only if such State or the Territory of Hawaii complies, for such fiscal year, with the provisions with reference to offset of appropriations (other than appropriated funds allotted pursuant to this section) for agricultural extension work.

DIVISION OF SOIL CONSERVATION AND IMPROVEMENT

SEC. 103. The Secretary shall establish within the Office of Experiment Stations an organizational unit to carry out the functions assigned to him by section 101 (b) of this act. Not more than 5 percent of any Federal funds made available for research projects supervised by such organizational unit shall be available for its expenses.

APPROPRIATIONS AVAILABLE FOR FUNCTIONS TRANSFERRED TO EXPERIMENT STATIONS

SEC. 104. The Secretary is authorized to make available from any funds heretofore or hereafter appropriated, other than as grants-in-aid, for functions which pursuant to section 101 (b) are to be exercised through the agricultural experiment stations in the several States, Alaska, Hawaii, and Puerto Rico such sums as he may deem appropriate for allotment to such agricultural experiment stations. The sums so allotted shall be in addition to and not in substitution for sums otherwise appropriated for the work of such agricultural experiment stations.

COMMUNITY, COUNTY, AND STATE AGRICULTURAL COMMITTEES AND COUNCILS

Community agricultural program committees

SEC. 105. The farm operators within each local administrative area of the continental United States hereinafter provided for shall elect annually from among their number (1) three members of a community agricultural program committee, designating one of such members to be chairman, and (2) first and second alternates. In any county in which only one such area is situated five members and two alternates shall be elected for the community agricultural program committee for such area. Vacancies occurring in the membership of the committee between annual elections shall be filled for the unexpired terms by the first and second alternates in that order, or if there are no alternates available, by an election by the farm oper-Vacancies occurring in the chairmanship of the committee between annual elections shall be filled for the unexpired term by election by the committee from among its members. No member shall be elected for four full consecutive terms. The committee shall perform within its area the function assigned to it pursuant to section 101 (c) of this act and such other functions as Secretary may assign to it. The local administrative areas designated by the Secretary and serving on the date of enactment of this act as units for administration of programs under section 8 of the Soil Conservation and Domestic Allotment Act shall serve as local administrative areas for the purposes of this section, but each county agricultural program committee may, with the approval of the State agricultural council, from time to time designate different local administrative areas within its county for the purposes of this section.

County agricultural program committees

SEC. 106. In each county there shall be a county agricultural program committee consisting of—

(1) the members of the community agrieultural program committees in the county;

(2) the agricultural extension agent for the county, who shall have no vote; and

(3) one representative designated by each of such agencies concerned with soil conservation, grass conservation, drainage, irrigation or other agricultural interests as the State agricultural council may specify, but the number of agencies so specified shall be at least one less than the number of members provided for by clause (1).

The county agricultural program committee shall perform within its county the functions assigned to it pursuant to section 101 (c) of this act and such other functions as the Secretary may assign to it. It shall meet at such times as it may specify, or upon call of the chairman of the county agricultural program executive committee for its county.

County agricultural program executive committees

SEC. 107. The elected members of each county agricultural program committee shall elect annually from among their number (1) not less than three and not more than five, as determined by the State agricultural council, members of a county agricultural program executive committee, designating one of such members to be chairman, one to be vice chairman, and one to be secretary, of such executive committee, and (2) first second alternates. Vacancies occurring among the members of such executive combetween annual elections shall be filled for the unexpired terms by the first and second alternates in that order, or, if there are no alternates available, by election from among their number by the elected members of the county agricultural program committee, and at such election first and second alternates again shall be elected. Vacancies in the offices of chairman, vice chairman, and secretary occurring between annual elections shall be filled for the unexpired terms by election by such executive committee from among its members. No member shall be elected for four full con-secutive terms. The executive committee shall, through personnel employed by it, perform within the county the functions assigned to it pursuant to section 101 (c) of this Act and such other functions as the Secretary may assign to it.

State agricultural councils

SEC. 108. (a) For each State of the United States there shall be a State agricultural council consisting of the ex officio members hereinafter specified who shall have no vote, four farmer members, and as many additional farmer members as may be specified in accordance with the provisions of this section; but the number of additional farmer members so specified shall not exceed the greater of (1) two, or (2) one for each full 20 counties in the State, plus and if the number of counties in the State is not evenly divisible by 20 and exceeds by more than 10 the multiple of 20 which it least exceeds. The Commissioner (or Secretary or Director, as the case may be) of Agriculture, or his designee, the Director of the Agricultural Experiment Station, or his designee, and the Director of the Agricultural Extension Service, or his designee, for such State shall be the ex officio members.

(b) The farmer members shall be appointed by the Secretary from among farmers nominated, by majority vote, by the chairmen of the county agricultural program executive committees of the State, three nominations being submitted for each appointment to be made. Not more than two of the three nominations for any appointment shall be from among the number of such chairmen. The farmer members first appointed after the enactment of this Act shall be appointed for three-, two-, and one-year terms in as nearly equal groups as may be possible; and their successors shall be appointed for three-year terms. Farmer members shall be subject to removal by the Secretary at any time. Va-cancies occurring among the farmer members shall be filled for the unexpired terms by appointment by the Secretary from among the farmers nominated, but not appointed, at the time of the last regular appointment prior to the occurrence of such vacancies. No farmer member shall be appointed for any term which, with any previous periods of service by him as such a member, would exceed five years during any six-year period.

(c) The number of additional farmer memif any (not exceeding the maximum number prescribed by the first sentence of this section), to be appointed first after the enactment of this Act shall be specified by the ex officio members of the State agricultural council. The number of additional farmer members thereafter to be appointed shall be specified by the State agricultural council. Should the number of additional farmer members at any time be increased as provided by this section, the additional farmer members so added shall be appointed for such terms that the number of terms expiring in succeeding years shall, as nearly as may be possible, be equal. Any decrease, as provided by this section, in the number of additional farmer members shall be made by allowing terms to expire without appointing successors in such manner that the number of terms expiring annually after the decrease has been completed shall, as nearly as may be possible, be equal.

(d) The State agricultural council shall develop plans to effectuate the purposes of section 7 of the Soil Conservation and Domestic Allotment Act in its State, shall perform the functions assigned to it pursuant to section 101 (c) of this Act and such other functions within its State as the Secretary may assign to it, shall supervise and direct the work of the county agricultural program and executive committees in its State, and shall otherwise cooperate with the Secretary in the planning and carrying out of soil-conservation programs in its State. It shall elect from among its number a chairman, vice chairman, and secretary, shall employ, on an annual basis, a State administrator, and may employ such other personnel as it may deem necessary to carry out its functions. In carrying out the functions assigned to it, and subject to the approval of the Secretary, it may enter into arrangements with (1) the Agricultural Extension Service in its State for the conduct of educational and demonstrational programs, and (2) State agricultural councils of other States for cooperation on matters of mutual interest. Federal grants-in-aid for programs administered by the State agricultural council shall be disbursed by the appropriate agency of the State only pursuant to direction by the State agricultural council. Any grants-in-aid or other funds allocated to a State for programs administered by the State agricultural council may be withheld or recalled by the Secretary if he determines that such council is not faithfully administering the programs assigned to it.

Administrative expenses

SEC. 109. The Secretary is authorized and directed, from any funds made available for the purposes of the acts in connection with which State agricultural councils, county or community agricultural program committees, or county agricultural program executive committees may be utilized, to make payments to such councils or committees to cover the estimated administrative expenses incurred or to be incurred by them in carrying out the functions assigned to them under such acts. All or part of such administrative expenses of any such council or commit-tee may be deducted pro rata from the Soil Conservation Act payments, parity payments, or loans, or other payments or grants-in-aid under such acts, unless payment of such expenses is otherwise provided by law. The Secretary may make such payments in advance of determination of performance. The administrative expenses covered by such payments shall not include compensation for services of members of State agricultural councils and of community and county agricultural program and executive committees except (subject to approval by the Secretary) as follows:

(a) Each farmer member of a State agricultural council shall be entitled to compensation, at such rates as may be fixed by the Secretary, for time actually spent by him in the work of the council pursuant to its direction; and

(b) Each member of a county agricultural program executive committee shall be entitled to compensation, at such rate as may be fixed by the appropriate State agricultural council, for time actually spent by him in the work of the committee pursuant to its direction and subject to the approval of the State agricultural council.

Subject to such limitations as the Secretary may prescribe, such council and committee members shall also be entitled to their reasonable expenses incurred in serving as such members. No such member shall, out of any amounts paid by the Secretary, be paid for performing any services in addition to his services as member for any such council or committee, but a member may resign as member in order to accept employment by a council or committee, and a member of a community agricultural program committee may be paid for services performed at the request of the county agricultural program, or executive committee, or the State agricultural council. The Secretary shall make such regulations as are necessary relating to the selection and exercise of the functions of such councils and committees, respectively. A county agricultural program executive committee may, except as may be disapproved by the Secretary, accept, in ad-dition to the amounts paid to it by the Secretary, funds from other public agencies to be utilized for agricultural purposes.

Membership limited to one council or committee

SEC. 110. No person shall be a member of more than one council or executive committee established pursuant to this act. Appointment of any chairman of a county agricultural program executive committee to be a member of a State agricultural council shall cause the offices he holds as a member of a community agricultural program committee, a county agricultural program committee, and a county agricultural program executive committee to become vacant.

TITLE II—AMENDMENTS TO SOIL CONSERVA-TION AND DOMESTIC ALLOTMENT ACT

UTILIZATION OF LOCAL ORGANIZATIONS IN STATE PLANS

SEC. 201. Section 7 (d) of the Soil Conservation and Domestic Allotment Act is amended by inserting at the end thereof the following:

"No such plan submitted by a State of the United States shall be approved by the Secretary, except upon the recommendation of the State agricultural council created pursuant to the Agricultural Act of 1948; and unless by its terms such plan provides—

"(A) that any sum to be allocated by the Secretary to carry out the plan shall be disbursed by the appropriate agency of the State only pursuant to direction by the State agricultural council, and

"(B) that (i) the State agricultural council, and (ii) the community and county agricultural program committees and county agricultural program executive committees created pursuant to the Agricultural Act of 1948, shall, respectively, if authorized by the State, be administering and participating agencies as provided in clauses (1) and (2) of this subsection".

EXTENSION OF NATIONAL-PAYMENT PROGRAMS

SEC. 202. Section 8 (a), as amended, of the Soil Conservation and Domestic Allotment Act is amended (a) by striking out "January 1, 1949" wherever appearing therein and inserting in lieu thereof "January 1, 1951", and (b) by striking out "December 31, 1948" and inserting in lieu thereof "December 31, 1950."

UTILIZATION OF LOCAL ORGANIZATIONS IN NATIONAL PROGRAMS

SEC. 203. Section 8 (b) of the Soil Conservation and Domestic Allotment Act is amended to read as follows:

(b) Subject to the limitations provided in subsection (a) of this section, the Secretary shall have power to carry out the purposes specified in clauses (1), (2), (3), (4), and (5) of section 7 (a) by making payments or grants of other aid to agricultural producers, including tenants and sharecroppers, in amounts determined by the Secretary upon the recommendation of the respective State agricultural councils to be fair and reasonable in connection with the effectuation of such purposes during the year with respect to which such payments or grants are made, and measured by (1) their treatment or use of their land, or a part thereof, for soil restoration, soil conservation, or the prevention of erosion; (2) changes in the use of their land, including the development of suitable wildlife habitat in carrying out the purposes of section 1 of the act of August 14, 1946 (60 Stat. 1080); (3) their equitable share as determined by the Secretary, of the normal national production of any commod-ity or commodities required for domestic consumption; or (4) their equitable share, as determined by the Secretary, of the national production of any commodity or commodities required for domestic consumption and exports adjusted to reflect the extent to which their utilization of cropland on the farm conforms to farming practices which the Secretary determines will best effectuate the purposes specified in section 7 (a); or

(5) any combination of the above. or semiarid sections, (1) and (2) above shall be constructed to cover water conservation and the beneficial use of water on individual farms, including measures to prevent run-off, the building of check dams and ponds, and providing facilities for applying water to the land. In determining the amount of payment or grant measured by (1) or (2) the Secretary shall take into considera-tion the productivity of the land affected by the farming practices adopted during the year with respect to which such payment is made. In carrying out the provisions of this section in the continental United States, the Secretary is directed to utilize the State agricultural councils and community and county agricultural program committees and executive committees created pursuant to the Agricultural Act of 1948. In carrying out the provisions of this section, the Secretary shall, as far as practicable, protect the interests of tenants and sharecroppers; is au-thorized to utilize the agricultural extension service and other approved agencies; shall accord such recognition and encouragement to producer-owned and producer-controlled cooperative association as will be in harmony with the policy toward cooperative as-sociations set forth in existing acts of Con-gress and as will tend to promote efficient methods of marketing and distribution; shall not have power to acquire any land or any right or interest therein; shall, in every practicable manner, protect the interests of small producers; and shall in every practical way encourage and provide for soil-conserving and soil-rebuilding practices rather than the growing of soil-depleting crops. Rules and regulations governing payments or grants under this subsection shall be as simple and direct as possible, and, wherever practicable, they shall be classified on two bases: (a) Soil-depleting crops and practices, (b) soilbuilding crops and practices. Notwithstand-ing any other provision of law in making available conservation materials consisting of seeds, seed inoculants, fertilizers, liming and other soil-conditioning materials, trees, or plants, or in making available soil-conserving or soil-building services, to agricul-tural producers under this subsection, the Secretary may make payments, in advance of determination of performance by the producers, to persons who fill purchase orders covering approved conservation materials or covering soil-conserving or soil-building services, furnished to producers at not to exceed a fair price fixed in accordance with regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary, or who render services to the Secretary in delivering to producers approved conservation materials, for the carrying out, by the producers, of soil-building or soil-conserving practices approved by the Secretary. "Appropriations are hereby authorized for the purchase in advance of the program year for which the appropriation is made of seeds, fertilizers, lime, trees, or other plants, or any other farming materials or any services, and making grants thereof to agricultural producers to aid them in carrying out farming practices approved by the Secretary in programs under this act, as amended; for the reimbursement of any Federal, State, or local government agency for fertilizers, seeds, lime, trees, or other plants, or other farming materials, or any services, furnished by such agency; and for the payment of all expenses necessary in making such grants, including all or part of the cost incident to the delivery thereof."

SEC. 204. The Soil Conservation and Domestic Allotment Act is amended-

(a) By striking out the first word of section 8 (e) and inserting in lieu thereof "Subject to the provisions of section 18 of this act, payments";

(b) By striking out the proviso contained in section 8 (e); and

(c) By adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"SEC. 18. Payments or grants of aid to farmers in any State, under a State plan or by the Secretary, for soil-building or soilconserving practices shall be "(a) made only for such practices as may be approved by the Secretary upon the rec-ommendation of the State agricultural coun-

"(b) made, except with respect to farms designated as demonstration or experimental farms, only for practices which the Secretary, upon the recommendation of the State agri cultural council, determines have long-term conservation and improvement value; and

(c) divided among the landlords, tenants, and sharecroppers of any farm, with respect to which such payments are made, on the basis of relative value of their contributions to such practices in such manner as may be provided by the Secretary upon the rec-ommendation of the State agricultural coun-

"Beginning with the calendar year 1949, the total payments for any year to any per-son, under all State plans and otherwise under this act, not including payments made with respect to demonstration or experimental farms, shall not exceed $1,000; but programs under this act may provide that, at the election of the owner of any farm, soil conservation or improvement practices taken with respect to such farm in any year which have long-term effect may form the basis for payments in such year and not to exceed the succeeding 4 years with respect to such farm." SEC. 205. Section 11 of the Soil Conservation and Domestic Allotment Act is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 11. All funds available for carrying out this act shall be available for allotment to the bureaus and offices of the Department of Agriculture and for transfer to such other agencies of the Federal or State Governments as the Secretary may request to co-operate or assist in carrying out this act, and for payments to State agricultural councils or county or community agricultural program committees or executive committees to cover the estimated administrative expenses to be incurred by any such council or committee in cooperating in carrying out this act: Provided, That the Secretary may prescribe that all or part of such estimated expenses of any such council or committee may be deducted pro rata from the payments or grants made to the members thereof: And provided further, That the Secretary may make such payments in advance of determination of performance."

TITLE III-AMENDMENTS TO THE AGRICULTURAL ADJUSTMENT ACT OF 1938

DEFINITIONS OF "PARITY PRICE," "CARRY-OVER," "NORMAL SUPPLY," AND "TOTAL SUPPLY

SEC. 301. Section 301 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938 is amended-

(a) By striking out paragraphs (1) and (2) of subsection (a) and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"(1) (A) The 'parity price' for any agri-cultural commodity, as of any date, shall be determined by multiplying the adjusted base price of such commodity as of such date by the parity index as of such date.

"(B) The 'adjusted base price' of any agri-"(B) The adjusted base price of any agricultural commodity, as of any date, shall be (i) the average of the prices received by farmers for such commodity, at such times as the Secretary may select during each year of the 10-year period ending on the 31st of December last before such date, or during each marketing seesen herdparing in such each marketing season beginning in such period if the Secretary determines use of a calendar-year basis to be impracticable, divided by (ii) the ratio of the general level of prices received by farmers for agricultural commodities during such period to the gen-eral level of prices received by farmers for agricultural commodities during the period January 1910 to December 1914, inclusive.

"(C) The 'parity index,' as of any date, shall be the ratio of (i) the general level of prices for articles and services that farmers buy, interest on farm indebtedness secured by farm real estate, and taxes on farm real tate, for the calendar month ending last before such date to (ii) the general level of such prices, rates, and taxes during the pe-riod January 1910 to December 1914, in-

"(D) The prices and indices provided for herein, and the data used in computing them, shall be determined by the Secretary, whose determination shall be final.

"(E) Notwithstanding the provisions of subparagraph (A), the transitional parity price for any agricultural commodity, computed as provided in this subparagraph, shall be used as the parity price for such com-modity until such date after January 1, 1949, as such transitional parity price may be lower than the parity price, computed as provided in subparagraph (A), for such commodity. The transitional parity price for any agricultural commodity as of any date

"(i) its parity price determined in the manner used prior to the effective date of the Agricultural Act of 1948, less

"(ii) five percent of the parity price so determined multipled by the number of full calendar years which, as of such date, have elapsed after January 1, 1948.

"(F) Notwithstanding the provisions of subparagraph (A) and (E), if the parity price for any agricultural commodity, computed as provided in subparagraphs (A) and (E) appears to be seriously out of line with the parity prices of other agricultural commodities. ties, the Secretary may, and upon the request of a substantial number of interested producers shall, hold public hearings to determine the proper relationship between the parity price of such commodity and the parity prices of other agricultural commod-ities. Within 60 days after commencing such hearing the Secretary shall complete such hearing, proclaim his findings as to whether the facts require a revision of the method of computing the parity price of such commodity, and put into effect any revision so found to be required.

"(2) 'Parity,' as applied to income, shall be that gross income from agriculture which will provide the farm operator and his family with opportunities for living equivalent to those afforded persons dependent upon other gainful occupation. 'Parity' as applied to income from any agricultural commodity for any year, shall be that gross income which bears the same relationship to parity income from agriculture for such year as the average gross income from such commodity for the preceding 10 calendar years bears to the average gross income from agriculture for such 10 calendar years."

(b) By amending paragraph (3) (A) of subsection (b) to read as follows:

"(A) 'Carry-over,' in the case of corn, rice, and peanuts for any marketing year shall be the quantity of the commodity on hand in the United States at the beginning of such marketing year, not including any quantity which was produced in the United States during the calendar year then current.'

(c) By amending paragraph (3) (B) of subsection (b) to read as follows:

"(B) 'Carry-over' of cotton for any marketing year shall be quantity of cotton on hand within the United States at the beginning of such marketing year, which was produced in the United States 1 rior to the begin-ning of the calendar year then current, plus the quantity on hand within the United States at the beginning of such marketing year which was produced outside the United

(d) By striking out paragraph (10) of sub-ection (b) and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

'(10) (A) 'Normal supply' in the case of corn, cotton, rice, wheat, and peanuts for any marketing year shall be (i) the estimated domestic consumption of the commodity for the marketing year ending immediately prior to the marketing year for which normal supply is being determined, plus (ii) the esti-mated exports of the commodity for the marketing year for which normal supply is being determined, plus (iii) an allowance for carry-over. The allowance for carry-over shall be the following percentage of the sum of the consumption and exports used in computing normal supply: 7 percent in the case of corn; 30 percent in the case of cotton; 10 percent in the case of rice; 15 percent in the case of wheat; and 15 percent in the case of peanuts. In determining normal supply the Secretary shall make such adjustments for current trends in consumption and for unusual conditions as he may deem necessary.

"(B) 'Normal supply' in the case of tobacco shall be a normal year's domestic consumption and exports, plus 175 percent of a normal year's domestic consumption and 65 percent of a normal year's exports as an allowance for a normal carry-over."

(e) By amending paragraph (16) of subsection (b) to read as follows:

"(A) 'Total supply' of cotton, wheat, corn, rice, and peanuts for any marketing year shall be the carry-over of the commodity for such marketing year, plus the estimated production of the commodity in the United States during the calendar year in which such marketing year begins and the esti-mated imports of the commodity into the United States during such marketing year.

"(B) 'Total supply' of tobacco for any mar-keting year shall be the carry-over at the beginning of such marketing year plus the estimated production thereof in the United States during the calendar year in which such marketing year begins, except that the estimated production of type-46 tobacco during the marketing year with respect to which the determination is being made shall be used in lieu of the estimated production of such type during the calendar year in which such marketing year begins in determining the total supply of cigar filler and cigar binder tobacco.

PRICE SUPPORT

SEC. 302. (a) Section 302 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 302. (a) The Secretary, through the Commodity Credit Corporation (except as provided in subsection (c)) and other means available to him, is authorized to support prices of agricultural commodities to producers through loans, purchases, payments, and other operations. Except as otherwise provided in this section, the amounts, terms, and conditions of such price-support opera-tions, and the extent to which such operations are carried out, shall, in the case of operations carried out by Commodity Credit Corporation, be determined by the Corporation with the approval and subject to the direction of the Secretary, and, in the case of operations carried out by other means, be determined by the Secretary. In making such determinations, consideration shall be given to (1) the supply of the commodity in relation to the demand therefor, (2) the price levels at which other commodities are being supported, (3) the availability of funds, (4) the perishability of the commodity, (5) its importance to agriculture and the naits importance to agriculture and the na-tional economy, (6) the ability to dispose of stocks acquired through a price-support operation, (7) the need for offsetting tempo-rary losses of export markets, and (8) the ability and willingness of producers to keep supplies in line with demand. Compliance by the producer with acreage allotments, production goals, and marketing practices prescribed by the Secretary may be required as a condition of eligibility for price sup-port. The Secretary shall in all cases give consideration to the practicability of supporting prices indirectly, as by the development of improved merchandising methods, rather than directly by purchase or loan.

"(b) (1) Price support shall be made available to producers of any basic agricul-tural commodity at levels determined as hereinafter provided in this subsection. On the basis of the latest available statistics of the Department of Agriculture as of the beginning of each marketing year for each such basic agricultural commodity, the Secretary shall, with respect to such marketing year and such basic agricultural commodity-

"(i) estimate the total supply;

"(ii) determine the normal supply; and "(iii) determine the percentage which the estimated total supply is of the normal supply (such percentage being referred to herein as the 'supply percentage').

"(2) The level at which the price of such basic agricultural commodity for such marketing year shall be supported for cooperators (other than cooperators outside the com-mercial corn-producing area, in the case of corn) shall not exceed 90 percent of the parity price of such commodity as of the beginning of the marketing year or be less than the percentage of its parity price as of the beginning of such marketing year determined from the following table:

The level of support shall be not less than the following percentage of the visions of this section-

(A) the minimum level of price support to cooperators for any basic agricultural com-modity shall be 120 percent of the minimum level determined from the foregoing table, if acreage allotments are in effect at the beginning of the planting season for such com-modity, or if marketing quotas are in effect at the beginning of the marketing year for such commodity; but in no case shall the level of price support for any commodity be increased thereby above 90 percent of its parity price as of the beginning of the marketing year; and

"(B) the level of price support for any basic agricultural commodity normally mar-keted in any marketing year with respect to which marketing quotas have been disapproved by producers shall be 50 percent of the parity price of such commodity as of the beginning of such marketing year.

(4) The level at which the price of corn shall be supported for cooperators outside the commercial corn-producing area shall be 75 percent of the level at which the price is supported for cooperators in the commercial corn-producing area with respect to corn.

"(5) Notwithstanding the foregoing provisions of this section, the level of price port to cooperators for any crop of tobacco for which marketing quotas are in effect shall be 90 percent of its parity price as of the beginning of the marketing year.

(c) The support price for any nonbasic agricultural commodity shall not exceed 90 percent of the parity price for the commodity as of the beginning of the marketing year or season in the case of a commodity marketed on a marketing-year or seasonal basis, and as of January 1 in the case of any other commodity. Any price-support operation un-dertaken with respect to either turkeys or chickens shall be applicable to all chickens, including broilers, appropriate adjustments being made as provided in subsection (e) of this section: Provided, That if any pricesupport operation is undertaken with respect to either chickens or turkeys, the same parity price-support operation shall be undertaken with respect to ducks and ducklings and other poultry. The price of wool shall be supported at such level, not in excess of 90 percent nor less than 60 percent of its parity price as of January 1, as the Secretary may consider necessary in order to encourage an annual production of approximately 360,-000,000 pounds of shorn wool. The price of any kind of Irish potatoes harvested after December 31, 1948, shall be supported at not less than 60 percent nor more than 90 percent of the parity price for Irish potatoes as of the beginning of the marketing season. The Commodity Credit Corporation shall not rne commodity Credit Corporation shall not carry out any operation to support the price of any nonbasic agricultural commodity (other than Irish potatoes) which is so perishable in nature as not to be reasonably storable without excessive loss or excessive cost, but any such operation may be carried out by the Secretary through other means available to him such as those provided by section 32. Public Law No. 320 vided by section 32, Public Law No. 320, Seventy-fourth Congress, approved August 24, 1935, as amended: Provided, That the foregoing provisions shall not be construed to prohibit the Commodity Credit Corporation from supporting the price of any perishable nonbasic agricultural commodity by a loan, purchase, payment, or other operation undertaken with respect to a storable commodity processed from such perishable nonbasic agricultural commodity: Provided further, That the Secretary in carrying out pro-grams with respect to perishable and non-perishable commodities under section 32 of Public Law No. 320, Seventy-fourth Congress, approved August 24, 1935, as amended, and section 6 of the National School Lunch Act, may utilize the services and facilities of the Commodity Credit Corporation (including but not limited to procurement by contract) and make advance payments to it: And provided further, That in any fiscal year, if at the end of the preceding fiscal year the sums appropriated under said section 32 and remaining unexpended do not exceed $300,000 .-000, Commodity Credit Corporation may, as provided in section 302 (a) of this act, carry out any operation to support the price of any such perishable, nonbasic agricultural commodity to the extent that the reserve for the postwar price support of agriculture established pursuant to the First Supple-mental Appropriation Rescission Act of 1946 (60 Stat. 8) and other funds appropriated for agricultural price support are sufficient to cover any losses which may be incurred in connection with such operation. "(d) Notwithstanding the foregoing provisions of this section, price-support operations at levels in excess of the maximum level of price support otherwise prescribed in this section may be undertaken whenever it is determined by the Secretary after reasonable public notice and public hearing with records of said hearing and a finding thereon by said Secretary available to the public that price support at such increased levels is necssary in order to increase or maintain the production of any agricultural commodity in the interest of national security. "(e) Appropriate adjustments may be made in the support price for any commodity for differences in grade, type, staple, quality, location, and other factors. Such adjustments shall be made in such manner that the average support price for such commodity in each marketing year will, on the basis of the anticipated incidence of such factors, be equal to the level determined as provided in

"(f) For the purposes of this section—
"(1) A 'cooperator' with respect to any basic agricultural commodity shall be a producer on whose farm the acreage planted to the commodity does not exceed the farm acreage allotment for the commodity under this title, or, in the case of price support for corn to a producer outside the commercial corn-producing area, a producer who com-plies with conditions of eligibility prescribed by the Secretary. For the purposes of this subsection a producer shall not be deemed to have exceeded his farm acreage allotment unless such producer knowingly exceeded such allotment.

"(2) A 'basic agricultural commodity' shall mean any of the commodities cotton, wheat, corn, tobacco, rice, and peanuts of a crop harvested after December 31, 1948.

"(3) A 'nonbasic agricultural commodity' shall mean any agricultural commodity other than a basic agricultural commodity.

"(g) No producer shall be personally liable for any deficiency arising from the sale of the collateral securing any loan made under authority of this section unless such loan was obtained through fraudulent representations by the producer. This provision shall not, however, be construed to prevent Commodity Credit Corporation or the Secretary from requiring producers to assume liability for deficiencies in the grade, quality, or quantity of commodities stored on the farm or delivered by them, for failure properly to care for and preserve commodities, or for failure or refusal to deliver commodities in accordance with the requirements of the program.

"(h) The Commodity Credit Corporation shall not sell any farm commodity owned or controlled by it at less than (1) a price de-termined on a pricing basis for its stocks of such commodity on hand, which makes due allowance for grade, type, quality, location, and other factors and which is reasonably calculated to reimburse it for costs incurred by it with respect to such stocks; (2) a price halfway between the support price, if any, and the parity price of such commodity; or (3) a price equivalent to 90 percent of the parity price of such commodity, whichever price is the lowest, except that the foregoing restrictions shall not apply to (A) sales for new or byproduct uses; (B) sales of peanuts for the extraction of oil; (C) sales for seed or feed if such sales will not substantially impair any price-support program; (D) sales of commodities which have substantially deteriorated in quality or of nonbasic perishable commodities where there is danger of loss or waste through spoilage; (E) sales for the purpose of establishing claims against persons who have committed fraud, misrepresentation, or other wrongful acts with respect to the commodity; (F) sales for export; (G) sales of wool; and (H) sales for other than primary uses."

(b) Section 381 (c) of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938 is repealed.

(c) Section 4 (a) of the act entitled "An act to extend the life and increase the credit resources of the Commodity Credit Corpora-tion, and for other purposes," approved July 1, 1941 (U. S. C., title 15, sec. 713a-8), is amended by inserting after the first sentence thereof the following: "Notwithstanding the expiration of the period specified in the preceding sentence, the price of Irish potatoes harvested prior to January 1, 1949, shall be supported as provided in this section until the close of June 30, 1949."

MARKETING QUOTAS

Corn

SEC. 303. (a) The first sentence of section 322 (a) of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938 is amended to read as follows:

"Whenever in any calendar year the Secretary determines

"(1) that the total supply of corn for the marketing year beginning in such calendar year will exceed the normal supply for such marketing year by more than 20 percent; or

"(2) that the total supply of corn for the marketing year ending in such calendar year is not less than the normal supply for the marketing year so ending, and that the average farm price for corn for three successive months of the marketing year so ending does not exceed 66 percent of parity the Secretary shall, not later than November 15 of such calendar year, proclaim such fact and marketing quotas shall be in effect in the commercial corn producing area for the crop of corn grown in such area in the next succeeding calendar year and shall remain in effect until terminated in accordance with the provisions of this title."

(b) Sections 322 (b) and 322 (c) of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938 and the joint resolution entitled "Joint resolution relating to section 322 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, as amended," ap-proved July 26, 1939 (53 Stat. 1125), are hereby repealed.

(c) Section 322 (d) of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938 is amended (1) by striking out "(c)" and inserting in lieu thereof "(a)", and (2) by striking out "September" and inserting in lieu thereof "March."

UTILIZATION OF LOCAL ORGANIZATION IN CARRY-ING OUT THE AGRICULTURAL ADJUSTMENT ACT CF 1938

SEC. 308. Section 388 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938 is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 388. In carrying out the provisions of this act the Secretary is directed to utilize the State agricultural councils and community and county agricultural program committees and executive committees created pursuant to the Agricultural Act of 1948; and the local administrative areas and local and county committees referred to in this act shall be the local administrative areas and the community and county agricultural program committees and executive committees provided for by the Agricultural Act of 1948."

Tobacco

SEC. 309. Section 312 (a) of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938 is amended by inserting before the period at the end of the first sentence a colon and the following: "Provided, That the Secretary shall proclaim a national marketing quota for each market-ing year for each kind of tobacco for which a national marketing quota was proclaimed for the immediately preceding marketing year, and shall proclaim a national marketing quota for Virginia sun-cured tobacco for each marketing year for which a quota is proclaimed for fire-cured tobacco, and, beginning on the first day of the marketing year next following and continuing throughsuch year, a national marketing quota shall be in effect for the tobacco marketed during such marketing year."

TITLE IV-MISCELLANEOUS SECTION 32 FUNDS

SEC. 401. Section 32, as amended, of the act entitled "An act to amend the Agricultural Adjustment Act, and for other purposes," approved August 24, 1935 (U. S. C., title 7, sec. 612c), is amended by adding at the end thereof the following: "The sums appropriated under this section shall, notwithstanding the provisions of any other law, continue to remain available for the purposes of this section until expended; but any excess of the amount remaining unexpended at the end of any fiscal year over $300,000,000 shall, in the same manner as $300,000,000 shall, in the same manner as though it had been appropriated for the service of such fiscal year, be subject to the provisions of section 3690 of the Revised Statutes (U. S. C., title 31, sec. 712), and section 5 of the act entitled 'An act making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1875, and for other purpose' (U. S. C., title 31, sec. 713)."

SEC. 402. Section 22 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1933, as added by section 31 of the act of August 24, 1935 (49 Stat. 773), reenacted by the Agricultural Marketing Agreement Act of 1937 (50 Stat. 246), as amended, is hereby amended to read as fol-

"SEC. 22. (a) Whenever the President has reason to believe that any article or articles are being or are practically certain to be im-ported into the United States under such conditions and in such quantities as to render or tend to render ineffective, or materially or tend to render inelective, or materially interfere with, any program or operation undertaken under this title or the Soil Conservation and Domestic Allotment Act, as amended, or section 32, Public Law No. 320, Seventy-fourth Congress, approved August 24, 1935, as amended, or any loan, purchase, or other program or operation undertaken by or other program or operation undertaken by the Department of Agriculture, or any agency operating under its direction, with respect to any agricultural commodity or product thereof, or to reduce substantially the amount of any product processed in the United States from any agricultural com-modity or product thereof with respect to which any such program or operation is being undertaken, he shall cause an immediate investigation to be made by the United States Tariff Commission, which shall give precedence to investigations under this section to determine such facts. Such investigation shall be made after due notice and opportunity for hearing to interested parties, and shall be conducted subject to such regulations as the President shall specify.

"(b) If, on the basis of such investigation and report to him of findings and recommendations made in connection therewith, the President finds the existence of such facts, he shall by proclamation impose such fees not in excess of 50 percent ad valorem or such quantitative limitations on any article or articles which may be entered, or with-drawn from warehouse, for consumption as he finds and declares shown by such investigation to be necessary in order that the entry of such article or articles will not render or tend to render ineffective, or materially interfere with, any program or operation referred to in subsection (a), of this section, or reduce substantially the amount of any product processed in the United States from any such agricultural commodity or product thereof with respect to which any such program or operation is being undertaken: Provided, That no proclamation under this section shall impose any limitation on the total quantity of any article or articles which may be entered, or withdrawn from warehouse, consumption which reduces such permissible total quantity to proportionately less than 50 percent of the total quantity of such article or articles which was entered, or withdrawn from warehouse, for consumption during a representative period as de-termined by the President: And provided further, That in designating any article or articles, the President may describe them by physical qualities, value, use, or upon such other bases as he shall determine.

"(c) The fees and limitations imposed by the President by proclamation under this section and any revocation, suspension, or modification thereof, shall become effective on such date as shall be therein specified, such fees shall be treated for administrative purposes and for the purposes of sectrative purposes and for the purposes of section 32 of Public Law No. 320, Seventy-fourth Congress, approved August 24, 1935, as amended, as duties imposed by the Tariff Act of 1930, but such fees shall not be considered as duties for the purpose of granting any preferential concession under any international obligation of the United States

"(d) After investigation, report, finding, and declaration in the manner provided in the case of a proclamation issued pursuant to subsection (b) of this section, any proclamation or provision of such proclamation may be suspended or terminated by the President whenever he finds and proclaims that the circumstances requiring the proclamation or provision thereof no longer exist or may modified by the President whenever he finds and proclaims that changed circumstances require such modification to carry out the purposes of this section.

"(e) Any decision of the President as to facts under this section shall be final.

"(f) No proclamation under this section shall be enforced in contravention of any treaty or other international agreement to which the United States is or hereafter becomes a party."

PARITY-OTHER STATUTES

SEC. 403. (a) Section 2 (1) of the Agricultural Adjustment Act, as reenacted and amended by the Agricultural Marketing Agreement Act of 1937, is amended to read as follows:

"(1) Through the exercise of the powers conferred upon the Secretary of Agriculture under this title, to establish and maintain such orderly marketing conditions for agrimerce as will establish, as the prices to farmers, parity prices as defined by section 301 (a) (1) of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938."

(b) Section 8c (18) of the Agricultural Adjustment Act, as reenacted and amended by the Agricultural Marketing Agreement Act of 1937, is amended to read as follows:

"(18) The Secretary of Agriculture, prior to prescribing any term in any marketing agreement or order, or amendment thereto, relating to milk or its products, if such term is to fix minimum prices to be paid to producers or associations of producers, or prior to modifying the price fixed in any such term, shall ascertain the parity prices of such com-modities. The prices which it is declared to be the policy of Congress to establish in section 2 of this title shall, for the purposes of such agreement, order, or amendment, be adjusted to reflect the price of feeds, the available supplies of feeds, and other economic conditions which affect market supply and demand for milk or its products in the marketing area to which the contemplated marketing agreement, order, or amendment relates. Whenever the Secretary finds, upon the basis of the evidence adduced at the hearing required by section 8b or 8c, as the case may be, that the parity prices of such commodities are not reasonable in view of the price of feeds, the available supplies of feeds, and other economic conditions which affect market supply and demand for milk and its products in the marketing area to which the contemplated agreement, order, or amendment relates, he shall fix such prices as he finds will reflect such factors, insure a sufficient quantity of pure and wholesome milk, and be in the public interest. Thereafter, as the Secretary finds necessary on ac-count of changed circumstances, he shall, after due notice and opportunity for hearing, make adjustments in such prices."

(c) Section 8c (17) of the Agricultural Adjustment Act, as reenacted and amended by the Agricultural Marketing Agreement Act of 1937, is amended by striking out "and section 8e"

(d) Section 8e of the Agricultural Adjustment Act, as reenacted and amended by the Agricultural Marketing Agreement Act of 1937, is repealed.

(e) Section 6 of the Agricultural Marketing Agreement Act of 1937, as amended, is amended by inserting after the section designation the subsection designation "(a)" and by adding at the end thereof a new subsection to read as follows:

"(b) Any program in effect under the Agricultural Adjustment Act, as reenacted and amended by this act, on the effective date of section 403 of the Agricultural Act of 1948 shall continue in effect without the necessity for any amendatory action relative to such program, but any such program shall be con-tinued in operation by the Secretary of Agri-culture only to establish and maintain such orderly marketing conditions as will tend to effectuate the declared purpose set out in section 2 or 8c (18) of the Agricultural Adjustment Act, as reenacted and amended by this act.

(f) All references in other laws to-(1) parity,

(2) parity prices,

(3) prices comparable to parity prices, or (4) prices to be determined in the same manner as provided by the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938 prior to its amendment by this act for the determination of parity prices, with respect to prices for agricultural commodities and products thereof, shall hereafter be deemed to refer to parity prices as determined in accordance with the provisions of section 301 (a) (1) of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, as amended by this act.

AMENDMENT OF ALIEN REGISTRATION ACT OF 1940 RELATING TO EXECUTION OF EXECUTIVE TRAVEL AGREEMENTS

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to introduce for appropriate reference a bill to amend the Alien Registration Act of 1940 by authorizing the execution of executive travel agreements to expedite international travel, and for other purposes, and I request that a statement explaining the purport of the bill may be printed in the

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the bill will be received and appropriately referred, and the statement presented by the Senator from Maine will be printed in the RECORD.

The bill (S. 2886) to amend the Alien Registration Act of 1940 by authorizing the execution of executive travel agreements to expedite international travel, and for other purposes, introduced by Mr. Brewster, was received, read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The statement presented by Mr. Brew-STER is as follows:

STATEMENT BY SENATOR BREWSTER IN EXPLANATION OF BILL

Mr. President, the bill S. 2886, which I have just introduced, seeks to give the President permissive authority to negotiate Executive travel agreements with friendly foreign governments of nonquota countries to permit travel to and from the respective signatory countries, by native-born nationals and resident nationals for the preceding 18 years, upon presentation of a passport, travel card, or other document showing identity and nationality.

When such agreements have been concluded, the bill provides that such nationals of the countries with whom the agreements have been executed may enter the United States for business or pleasure for a period of 3 months without having to obtain a visa as provided in section 30 of the Alien Registration Act of 1940. One 3-month extension may be granted by the Commissioner of Immigration and Naturalization upon proper

In addition the bill permits the 350 offices of the Immigration and Naturalization Service throughout the United States to accept applications for and issue passports within the United States under regulations prescribed by the Secretary of State.

Mr. President, I want particularly to point out the following points in connection with this bill:

1. The bill relates only to travel for business or pleasure.

2. The waiving of the visa requirements for business or pleasure travel is confined to native-born nationals and resident nationals for the previous 18 years, thus excluding those who may have either recently acquired nationality in a nonquota country or who seek to come to the United States without a visa via a country with whom an agreement is concluded.

3. Such agreements can be negotiated sole-with nonquota countries. That is, countries with respect to which the United States has no immigration quota.

The power to conclude such agreements is permissive.

5. Persons traveling under such agreements are required to return to the country to which they owe allegiance before seeking permanent residence in the country visited.

6. Passports would be available to our citizens with greater dispatch by decentralizing their issuance. Their issuance would continue to be subject to regulations issued by the Secretary of State, but no longer would all applications for passports be forwarded to Washington, as is now the case

The purpose of this bill is to enable the United States to assume its place as a leader in promoting international business and pleasure travel as well as international trade. Trade and travel should be considered to-gether and as necessary supplements to each

The world is looking to us to take constructive steps to bring about a lasting peace through understanding and good will. Dollars loaned or given to foreign countries will not alone, in my opinion, bring about the result we all so earnestly seek. We must take steps, consistent with present-day world con-ditions, to encourage the free movement of proper persons for business and pleasure to and from friendly countries. During the war obviously certain additional security safeguards were necessary for persons entering the United States. Moreover, I realize that, as a practical matter, additional require-ments should be imposed upon quota coun-tries to insure maximum results from our immigration policies.

Department of Commerce estimates indicate that potentially approximately $1,600,000,000 annually may be expected to be spent abroad by United States nationals if our current rate of national income continues over the next 5 to 10 years. The creation of such dollar exchange in customer countries will directly contribute to the maintenance of our trade and prosperity.

Government and business have agreed that if foreign travel of United States nationals is fully developed, approximately fifteen to seventeen billion dollars in exchange could be created in 10 years. In short, nearly as many dollars may be expected to be spent by our tourists abroad during this 10-year period as will be provided under the Mar-shall plan. And these very dollars may be used by these countries to maintain our export trade, thereby assuring not only our own but the world economy. Herein lies the reason why both Government and industry are so anxious to do everything possible to aging our people to travel abroad.

Prosperity depends to a large extent on world trade. An essential prop to world trade is tavel, since travel results in dollars abroad and dollars abroad mean world trade.

The wisdom of promoting and facilitating world travel as a means of promoting a sound world economy has been recognized already by the Congress when they inserted section 117 (b) in the Economic Cooperation Act of 1948, as follows:

"(b) The Administrator, in cooperation with the Secretary of Commerce, shall facilitate and encourage, through private and pub-lic travel, transport, and other agencies, the promotion and development of travel by citizens of the United States to and within participating countries."

As stated, this provision relates solely to our citizens traveling to and within the participating countries. Moreover, all of these participating countries are quota countries and our Government feels that visa restrictions from such countries to the United States should be maintained in order not to undermine our quota system through evasion.

There does exist however, an area in which this country should feel obligated to take constructive action to facilitate travel by eliminating visas and that area relates to the nonquota countries. It is fully appre-ciated that the very mention of abolishing any visa arouses fear and suspicion in the minds of those who think solely in terms of control. Just as our exports and imports must be balanced however, so must the relative merits of control and development. Both aspects must be studied on their merits and reconciled, rather than sole concentra-tion on either. Thus the question is presented just what is a visitors visa supposed to do and does it accomplish what it was designed to accomplish?

Let us examine the effectiveness of the visitors visa regime from the standpoint of protecting the United States from undesirable

(a) It is generally conceded by security officers that any country desiring to send subversive elements into the United States may readily do so. The visa regime is therefore of little protection. This statement is based upon the following:

1. During both wars it was general experience that alien agents came fully docu-mented. Means for producing spurious documents are ready at hand to any such country or person.

2. Any country desiring to introduce such elements may do so by the use of the diplomatic passport and visa.

3. Once an alien is admitted into the United States, he may move freely throughout the country. The visa itself does not aid in tracing his movements or controlling his activities.

It is purely a rubber stamp on the passport, which passport performs the function of identification. The passport not only iden-tifies the individual officially as a national of a particular country but carries with it commitment on the part of that country to receive back that individual.

It is clear that the real security of this country against undesirable aliens lies in the border check itself in the first instance, but secondly, and primarily, in the enforcement force provided to keep track of aliens and eject them at such time as they overstay their welcome or engage in activities inimical to the best interests of the country. Too much emphasis on this point cannot be given. This is the heart of the security problem and not an ineffective, duplicate document that burdens down the Foreign Service. It may well be asked what is needed. It is clear that the individual presenting himself at the border must be identified. The pass-port does this without the visa. It is also clear that there should be some system whereby a follow-up can start on individuals enterthe United States temporarily at or shortly after the time of the end of their legal permission to be in the United States. This permission to be in the United States. This can readily be done by the use of a simple three part entry card filled out at or prior to the time of entry without charge, cost, delay, or red tape, two parts to be retained by the immigration authorities, the third part stamped and returned to the visitor as evidence of his legal entry. This third part evidence of his legal entry. This third part will be surrendered at the time of his exit. Matching these cards in a central office would determine precisely who and how many are overstaying, and affords the enforcement authorities an effective means for follow-up.

In summary, for purpose of enforcement, we will have the identification of the individual through the passport, with a commitment to take him back by the country issuing it; we have an adequate border check; we have increased border facilities; we will have a means for checking out the individual and a means for following up on those individuals who do not check out on time.

As a necessary supplement to the program just described, which my bill contemplates, I feel it most desirable to greatly expedite the issuance of passports to our citizens in the United States. In time of peace, I can see no reason why applications for passports, which can now be filed conveniently by our citizens with the clerks of all courts of record, need then be forwarded to one central office in the State Department in Washington for approval and issuance. This is bureaucracy at its worst. Our citizens are deserving of service by their Government within 24 hours after they apply for a passport.

I believe the over-all control of the issuance of passports should properly remain the function of the Secretary of State but I also feel that use should be made of the 350 field offices of the Immigration and Naturalization Service in order to expedite the issuance of passports in the United States These offices have had the authority and responsibility since 1906 for determining nationality so why should they not also issue the document identifying an American as an American? My bill would make this possible and would thereby reduce the average length of time presently required to issue a passport to a citizen from approximately 2 weeks to the desired time.

It should be clearly understood, that what the proposed legislation contemplates with respect to visas is entirely in accord with what the State Department says is the policy of our Government. In April 1947 at the meeting of experts on passports, visas, and frontier formalities called by the United Nations, which meeting was held in Geneva, the United States delegates proposed that the conference recommend that entrance and transit visas should be abolished by countries having no quantitative immigration restriction.

Ambassador Austin, in March of this year in reply to the Secretary General of the United Nations stated that the Government of the United States supports the view that there should be a distinction made between countries which have, and those which do not have a quota system for immigrants so far as the question of abolishing nonimmigrant visa requirements is concerned. letter specifically states: "The United States has recommended that entrance and transit visas should be abolished by countries having no quantitative immigration restriction.

If this Government recommends to other countries who have no quota system for United States citizens, that they abolish entrance and transit visas, we should do likewise with respect to those countries from which we have no quota restrictions.

The proposed legislation would enable our stated policy to be carried out, on a permissive basis, with respect to nonquota countries. As a result of our announced policy with respect to nonquota countries our State Department should feel obligated to take such action.

If we take the lead in abolishing the requirements of visas by means of bilateral agreements with such non-quota countries, there can be little doubt that other coun-tries, who followed our lead in requiring visas, would again follow our lead and abolish their requirements.

I feel that we should not advise other countries what to do and do nothing ourselves, but should take the lead in removing the visa requirement for persons traveling for business or pleasure between such non-quota countries and our own country, This is the purpose of the bill I have introduced and although I realize this bill is introduced near the close of this Congress I do so in order that reports may be obtained during the recess and I sincerely hope that the Government departments who are called upon to report on the bill will not attempt to cloud the issue by needless discussion of immigration, quota systems, etc., but will comment constructively upon the merits of the bill as an attempt to stimulate travel among friendly nonquota countries by removing what is recognized as a totally unnecessary peacetime requirement.

EXTENSION OF TERMS OF MEMBERS OF ATOMIC ENERGY COMMISSION

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the unanimous-consent agreement previously entered, the Chair now lays before the Senate, Senate bill 2589, Calendar No. 387.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2589) to provide for extension of the terms of office of the present members of the Atomic Energy Commission.

APPROPRIATIONS FOR NATIONAL MILI-TARY ESTABLISHMENT, 1949

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business, which is the bill to provide for extension of the terms of office of the present members of the Atomic Energy Commission, be temporarily laid aside, and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 6771, the National Military Establishment appropriation bill, 1949. It is very necessary that this bill be passed tonight, so that it can go to conference tonight.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Nebraska.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 6771) making appropriations for military functions administered by the National Military Establishment for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1949, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations, with amendments.

Mr. GURNEY. Mr. President, the bill presently before the Senate is the appropriation bill for the Military Establishment—not for the Navy, but for the Ground Forces, the Department of the Army, and the Air Force.

As the bill came from the House of Representatives, it provided appropriations amounting to $6,509,939,000.

The Senate Appropriations Committee recommends additions to the bill in the amount of $329,737,052. Moreover, there will be offered as a committee amendment, although it does not appear on the face of the report, an amendment which requires $76,000,000 in cash and $75,000,-000 in contract authority. This additional cash would make a total increase of $405,737,052 over the amounts carried in the bill as passed by the House.

Mr. President, I now ask that the for-mal reading of the bill be dispensed with, that it be read for amendment, and that the amendments of the committee be first considered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered, and the Clerk will proceed to state the amendments of the committee.

The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations in the subcommittee print was, under the heading "National Security Resources Board," on page 4, line 25, after the word "purchase", to insert "(including one at not to exceed $3,000)"; on page 5, line 3, after "(28 U. S. C. 921)", to insert "a health service program as authorized by law (5 U. S. C. 150)"; and in line 9, after the word "conclusive", to strike out "$3,000,-000" and insert "$3,500,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Department of the Air Force-United States Air Force", on page 6, line 19, after the word "appropriation", to strike out "$884,486,000" and insert "$896,986,000"; in line 25, after the word "exceed", to strike out "$300,000,000" and insert "$312,500,000"; and on page 7, line 8, after the word "storage", to insert a colon and the following additional pro-

Mr. GURNEY. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment which I offer and which I ask to have read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will state the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 34, after line 13, it is proposed to insert the following:

Military construction, Army: For construction, installations and equipment of temporary or permanent public works, military installations and facilities, as authorized by the act of June 12, 1948 (Public Law 626), without regard to sections 1136 and 3734, Revised Statutes, as amended, including hire of passenger motor vehicles; payment of claims under the act of July 3, 1943 (31 U. S. C. 223b), and pursuant to section 403 of the Federal Tort Claims Act of August 2, 1946 (28 U. S. C. 921); $76,000,000, to remain available until expended; and in addition, the Secretary of the Army is authorized to enter into contracts for the purposes of this appropriation in an amount not to exceed $75,000,000: Provided, That this appropriation shall not be used for the construction of family quarters for personnel of the Army at a cost per family unit in excess of $14,040, except that when such units are constructed outside the continental United States the average cost per unit of all such units constructed shall not exceed $20,800.

Mr. GURNEY. Mr. President, this is in accordance with the public-works program contained in a bill passed by the Senate about June 3. It is in accordance with the supplemental estimate sent to the Senate under date of June 3. I ask that the supplemental estimate and the explanation appear in the Record at this point.

There being no objection, the estimate and explanation were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Executive Office of the President,
Bureau of the Budget,
Washington, D. C., June 3, 1948.

The PRESIDENT,
The White House.

SIR: I have the honor to submit herewith for your consideration a supplemental estimate of appropriation in the amount of $121,000,000 and contract authorization in the amount of $60,000,000 for the fiscal year 1949 for the National Military Establishment, Department of the Army—military functions, in the form of an amendment to the budget for the said fiscal year, as follows:

National Military Establishment—Department of the Army—Military functions— Corps of Engineers

Budg- et page	Heading	Origi- nal esti- mate	Change to—	Increase
€76	Military con- struction, Army	c	$121,000,000	$121,000,000

Preceding the head "Acquisition of Land, Act June 26, 1940," insert new language and an estimate of appropriation, as follows:

"Military construction, Army: For construction, installations, and equipment of temporary or permanent public works, military installations and facilities, as authorized by the act of ——, 1948 (Public Law —), without regard to sections 1136 and 3734, Revised Statutes, as amended, including hire of passenger motor vehicles; payment of claims under the act of July 3, 1943 (31 U. S. C. 223b), and pursuant to section 403 of the Federal Tort Claims Act of August 2, 1946 (28 U. S. C. 921); $121,000,000 to remain available until expended; and in addition, the Secretary of the Army is authorized to enter into contracts for the purposes of this appropriation in an amount not to exceed $60,000,000: Provided, That this appropriation shall not be used for the construction of family quarters for personnel of the Army at a cost per family unit in excess of $14,040, except that when such units are constructed outside the continental United States the average cost per unit of all such units constructed shall not exceed $20,800."

GENERAL PROVISIONS

Budget page 707: Delete section 10 and renumber the remaining sections accordingly. The foregoing estimate of appropriation will be necessary to implement the authority will be necessary to implement the authority expected to be provided under the provisions of S. 1676 now in conference, and is transmitted at this time since it is considered essential for the national defense that the projects for which this appropriation is recommended be undertaken at an early date. Section 10 of the general provisions contains dollar limitations on family housing and is no longer required, since these limitations are superseded by space limitations contained in S. 1676 for all housing authorized.

I recommend that the foregoing supplemental estimate be transmitted to the Congress.

Respectfully yours,

FRANK PACE, Jr.,
Acting Director of the Bureau of the Budget.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from South

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator have any further committee amendments?

Mr. GURNEY. There are no further committee amendments.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment, and ask that it be read by the clerk for the information of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will read the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 21, after line 21, it is proposed to strike out the following proviso: "Provided, That none of the money appropriated in this act shall be used for the purchase of oleomargarine or butter substitutes for other than cooking purposes, except to supply an expressed preference therefor or for use where climatic or other conditions render the use of butter impracticable.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Mr. President, the proviso, which is in my opinion a further example of legislation carried in similar appropriation bills since 1931, prohibits the Army from purchasing oleomargarine. I think the least the Senate can do in view of the fact that we are apparently going to be prevented from voting on total repeal of the oleomargarine tax is to remove the restriction.

It is just one of the many restrictions which have been imposed upon this product during the past few years. It is a curious thing.

I do not propose to go into the complete history of the action of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Finance of the Senate, because the Senate is familiar with it, but as a further evidence of the sentiment of the Congress, I may cite a bill, H. R. 6334, to authorize the use of oleomargarine by the armed forces, which the Committee on Armed Services of the House reported June 9, 1948. It is a legislative approach to the abolition of restrictions on the purchase of margarine by the armed forces. I desire to read a few sentences from the report of the Committee on Armed Services of the House, with regard to the restriction on margarine. The purpose was to repeal it by legislative action, whereas here, the Appropriations Committee is seeking to perpetuate it. I think, by means of legislation written into an appropriation bill. I would have made a point of order against the pending measure, except that the proviso was in the bill as it came from the House.

From page 2 of the committee report of June 9, 1948, where the basic issue involved in the proposed legislation are very simple and can be reduced to the following questions-that is, as to repeal of the restrictions-I read the following:

1. Is the nutritive value of oleomargarine equal to or superior to that of butter?

This question was answered by several experts who testified that there is no difference in the nutritive value of these two products with respect to digestibility or other factors, provided that oleomargarine is fortified with vitamin A.

2. The second question is whether oleomargarine is equally acceptable from the psychological standpoint, bearing in mind such factors as the food habits of consumers.

In answer to this question representatives of the services testified that there is no past experience upon which they can base any opinion as to the troop acceptability of oleomargarine, for the simple reason that it could not, heretofore, be substituted for butter. On this point, however, one witness with experience as an officer in World War II testified that in his opinion the personnel under his command would have been equally satisfied with oleomargarine. He pointed out, in this connection, that many men had come from homes where oleomargarine was already being served in lieu of butter.

A very important consideration brought to light during the hearings was the fact that during World War II personnel in many for-ward areas were forced to do without butter because of unavailability due to transportation, storage, and refrigeration problems which either made it impossible to procure butter at all in those areas or which rendered such butter as was received unfit for human consumption because of rancidity and deterioration. In the absence of authority to serve oleomargarine as a substitute, troops were forced to rely upon other less satis-factory table spreads such as marmalade, jams, et cetera. These, while possessing nutritive values of their own, were in no way comparable because they did not furnish fats and other ingredients which are contained in both butter and oleomargarine.

That statement seems to me a complete condemnation of a racket which has been going on for 60 years. In the Senate there are many gentlemen who on every occasion express great concern for the men in the services, and yet the report from which I have read states that because of the restriction the men were deprived of butter, not only because it turned rancid under certain conditions, but, note, because it was illegal to furnish them with margarine. It seems utterly indefensible and ridiculous from every point of view that the men simply had to do without margarine and had to use marmalade or jam or something of the

Mr. GURNEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FULBRIGHT. I yield to the chairman of the committee.

Mr. GURNEY. I was merely about to suggest that the dairy business is possibly not a racket.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. The tax on margarine is a racket. That is what I had reference to. I do not think the Senator misunderstood what I had in mind.

Mr. BALL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FULBRIGHT. I yield.

Mr. BALL. I listened to what the Senator read, but I cannot see in the pending bill anything that prohibits the Army from buying oleomargarine to be furnished the men as a table spread. They can buy it for cooking uses without any restriction. They can buy it for table spread if the men say they want it. They can also buy it whenever climatic or other conditions render the use of butter impractical. I think the Senator has misread the language.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. The Senator knows very well that the report, which, as I said at the beginning, is a report of the Armed Services Committee of the House of Representatives, is not from the Department of Agriculture or from any other agency. It is from the Armed Services Committee. In the Senate, the Armed Services Committee is sponsoring the bill. The Senator knows very well as a practical matter that the Army has bought no margarine, interpreting the provision as a restriction on the purchase of margarine. They have not bought any, and have had none available. In the report of the committee, from which I just read, it is stated as to past experience on this point:

In answer to this question, representatives of the services testified that there is no past experience upon which they can base any opinion as to the troop acceptability of oleomargarine, for the simple reason that it could not heretofore be substituted for butter.

There is no question about that.

I do not think the Senator means to leave the impression that there is any choice in the matter.

Mr. GURNEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FULBRIGHT. I yield to the Sen-

Mr. GURNEY. I should like to say to the Senator, as representing the committee, that I do not have authority to accept the amendment for the committee. As for myself, personally, coming from a dairy section, the State of South Dakota, I could not accept it, anyway, because I helped former Senator La Follette some years ago to retain this provision in the bill. At that time the plea was made, which had general support on the floor of the Senate, that butter was better for the veterans in the hospitals, and over a period of years the amendment has been carried each year in appropriation bills. I know that the Army and Air Force are operating very nicely under the provision in the current year's act, and it has been in the acts during the war years.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Of course, I recognize the fact that the Senator, coming from South Dakota, would have that view. But if this is so acceptable, why does not the majority permit the Senate to decide the real essence of the whole question in connection with the bill now on the calendar? The Senator knows that some are afraid to permit it to come to a vote, because they know positively that the tax will be repealed. This is only one aspect of the many restrictions which have been foisted upon this country during the past 62 years.

Mr. KILGORE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FULBRIGHT. I yield to the Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. KILGORE, In 1942 Congress declined to permit the Army to buy corned beef from Argentina, and, as a result, the Army did not get the corned beef it needed and which it asked for in 1942. Is not that a parallel case?

Mr. FULBRIGHT. I thank the Sen- * ator for that contribution. I think the two cases have similar aspects.

Mr. President, I read further from the report:

A third question considered by the committee, in addition to the factors of comparative nutritional value and psychological acceptability, was whether or not oleomargarine is protected by the same pure-food standards as butter. Testimony was received to the effect that all standards having to do with purity, cleanliness, and sanitation are equally applicable to oleomargarine.

Mr. President, that is the entire statement, certainly as to the restrictions on the packages in which the two articles are sold and as notice of what is used in the two articles. Actually, the restrictions on oleomargarine are much more severe than are those on butter. Butter is one of the very few articles which does not have to carry a label showing it is artificially colored or stating its contents, how many vitamins, and so forth, all of which has to be done in connection with oleomargarine.

This point I want particularly to call the attention of the acting majority leader and some of his colleagues, because this is something which has been so close to their hearts during the past 2 years. This is the fourth point:

4. A final question pertinent to the problem is that of the comparative cost of the two products. Testimony was received to the effect that approximately ten to eleven million dollars per year could be saved by the armed services, assuming the complete substitution of oleomargarine for butter.

After all the talk of economy, particularly by some of the representatives of the butter-producing States, in order to perpetuate this restriction, they are perfectly willing to waste $10,000,000 or $11,000,000 of the taxpayers' money for the purpose of preventing the utilization of a product which the armed services are very anxious to have.

There are only two more paragraphs summing up the matter. I read from page 3 of the report:

In view of the fact that there is no difference in the nutritional value of the two products; in view of the fact that oleomargarine is an equally pure and sanitary product; in view of the fact that substantial savings can be effected through its use; and in view of the fact that there is no evidence from which it can be inferred that it would not be equally acceptable to troops, it is the view of this committee that the services should be permitted to use oleomargarine as they see fit.

I call that last sentence to the attention of the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. Ball] in reply to his implication that there was no restriction.

I read further:

The authority to exercise such discretion will enable the services to furnish an equally nutritious and, to many people, an equally palatable and acceptable product under circumstances where it would be impossible to furnish butter. A great deal of testimony was received bearing on the relative keeping qualities of the two products. While butter on the one hand is subject to rapid deteriora-tion and must be kept under refrigeration at all times, oleomargarine can be preserved for weeks at room temperatures.

I hope that some of the great backers of butter will take that particular statement to heart, since it comes from the committee and is a statement with which they have often taken issue. I read further from the report:

Even if it be assumed, therefore, that troops would prefer butter, if given a choice between the two products, it is equally logical to assume that they will welcome a high-quality substitute, such as oleomargarine, when conditions are such as to preclude the use of butter.

Mr. President, it is inconceivable to me that the Committee on Armed Services of the Senate would lend itself to the perpetuation of this restriction, in view of the action by the committee of the House on House bill 6334. The Senate and the country well know that there is a large majority, more than 2 to 1, in the House of Representatives in favor of the repeal of the tax on oleomargarine. The votes which have been had in this body, one of which was 47 to 30, and later a vote on the motion to consider the bill, which was a vote of 57 to 26, conclusively prove, in my opinion, that a majority of 2 to 1 in the Senate would like to repeal this tax. In spite of that fact, the leadership of the Senate refused, and has refused up to this time, to bring that bill up for a vote. They are perfectly willing to bring up a measure which has no particular background or history, one in which there has not been the interest which has been evidenced in the oleomargarine bill. I had expected that the committee would accept this very mild restriction, in view of the fact that it would deny a vote on the bill which would repeal the tax on oleomargarine.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Vote! Mr. FULBRIGHT, Mr. President, does the acting majority leader wish me to yield to him?

Mr. WHERRY. We have had two votes. If the Senator from Arkansas wants to have another one, the sooner the better.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. I am just about to conclude. I thought the Senator was indicating a desire for me to yield to him.

Mr. WHERRY. No. I am satisfied. Mr. President.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. If the Senator is satisfied, I hoped this amendment would be accepted, but since it has not been accepted, I ask that the Senate accept my amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amend-ment offered by the Senator from Arkansas.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no further amendment to be offered, the question is on the engrossment of the amendments and the third reading of the bill.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill (H. R. 6771) was read the third time and passed.

Mr. GURNEY. Mr. President, I move that the Senate insist on its amendments, ask for a conference with the House thereon, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the President pro tempore appointed Mr. Gurney, Mr. Brooks, Mr. Reed, Mr. Ferguson, Mr. Bridges, Mr. Thomas of Oklahoma, Mr. Hayden, and Mr. Russell conferees on the part of the Senate.

CONSIDERATION OF EXECUTIVE BUSINESS

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate, as in executive session, now proceed to the consideration of matters on the Executive Calendar, and that the nomination of Frieda B. Hennock, of New York, to be a member of the Federal Communications Commission, be passed over without prejudice.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I should like to get some information as to when that nomination may be taken up and considered.

Mr. WHERRY. That depends on when the Executive Calendar is called again. I cannot answer the question directly, but we intend to have other executive sessions. I trust the minority leader will agree to the unanimous-consent request.

Mr. BARKLEY. I am not saying I am not going to agree to it, but under my privilege to reserve the right to object, I wish to say that this nomination is here from the committee on the same basis with other nominations. I do not think this nominee should be discriminated against because she happens to be a woman. The committee considered the nomination carefully and reported it, and I hope it will not go beyond another call of the Executive

Mr. WHERRY. I should like to please the distinguished minority leader. always want to comply with his requests. I cannot answer when the nomination will come up again.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I should also like to add that, presenting this nomination from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, I do hope it may have appropriate consideration. It was ordered reported, as I recall, by a vote of 8 to 0. I will say, in justice to this side of the aisle, that the great majority of those votes were by Republicans. I am happy that the distinguished minority leader joins us in this, and I certainly hope that this nomination may receive the consideration to which it is entitled by its presence here and by its presentation on the calendar by the overwhelming action of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Mr. BARKLEY. I thank the Senator from Maine. I did not know there was any partisanship in the committee in voting to report this nomination. I did not know there was any opposition to it.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I am not saying there is any prejudice. I am merely trying to get the Executive Calendar approved without any difficulty, and I ask unanimous consent that the lady's nomination go over without prejudice until another call of the Executive Calen-

Mr. BARKLEY. There will be another call of the Executive Calendar, will there?

Mr. WHERRY. I hope so. If we get along all right, I do not see why there should not be. We certainly intend there shall be a call of the Executive Calendar. and we intend to have the Legislative Calendar called.

Mr. BARKLEY. I intend to do what I can to see that the Senate gets along all right. [Laughter.]

Mr. WHERRY. I thank the Senator.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. President——
The PRESIDENT pro tempore. To whom does the Senator from Nebraska

Mr. WHERRY. I yield to the Senator from Maine.

Mr. BREWSTER. May I inquire of the distinguished acting majority leader whether or not a motion would be in order at an appropriate time to take the nomination up?

Mr. WHERRY. It certainly would be. Any Senator can make a motion to take up the Executive Calendar. I am asking unanimous consent, however, and if I get unanimous consent, a motion would not be in order.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. President, I did not quite understand what the Senator from Maine said a moment ago about a majority of the members of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce voting to report Miss Hennock's nomination being Republican. I merely desire to keep the record straight and say that there were no Democrats against the confirmation of this very excellent nomination of the President.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Nebraska yield?

Mr. WHERRY. I yield.

Mr. BREWSTER. I made no such statement. I said that the overwhelming majority of the votes in favor of reporting the nomination were by Republicans, calling attention to the fact that there were only two Democrats present. This is not to reflect on the Democrats at all, but I did want it to be clear that the Republican members of the committee had shown at least as great an interest, and I wanted to have the record clear to show that there was no partisanship or prejudice in the consideration of the nomination.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Will the Senator from Nebraska yield?

Mr. WHERRY. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I merely wanted to have the record straight that there was no opposition on the part of the Democratic members of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce to this nomination.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Nebraska yield?

Mr. WHERRY. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. In view of the fact that there was no opposition to the appointee by Republicans and no opposition by Democrats, who is opposed to the nomination?

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I think we are making a mountain out of a mole hill. I went to the minority leader, if the Senator wishes to know the facts, and talked to Senators on the other side and asked if they would agree to have the Executive Calendar called provided this nomination would go over without prejudice. No one is indicating any prejudice against the consideration of this nomination, but in order to expedite matters I should like to have the unanimousconsent request granted. I did not want to put any obstruction in front of the nomination. If I cannot get unanimous consent, I should like to have the Senate

Mr. IVES. Mr. President, will the Senator from Nebraska yield to me?
Mr. WHERRY. I yield to the Senator from New York.

Mr. IVES. This lady whose nomination is being discussed comes from the State of New York, and I wish to have it definitely understood that there is no objection on the part of New York.

Mr. CAPEHART. I make a motion that the Senate take a recess.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I want it made clear, if the Senator from Nebraska will yield-

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield?

Mr. WHERRY. I do not yield for the purpose of a motion to recess or adjourn. I shall be glad to yield to the minority leader.

Mr. BARKLEY. I have not objected. and I do not intend to object, to the Senator's request, and I hope it will not be objected to, but I thought it was fair to get some sort of indication as to what we might expect with reference to this nomination.

Mr. WHERRY. Of course, the minority leader knows the reply to the question better than I do.

Mr. BARKLEY. If I knew the reply better than the Senator, I would not be asking him.

Mr. WHERRY. The Senator has had more experience here than any man in the Senate, and he knows what the Senate will do. I cannot guarantee what it will do.

Mr. BARKLEY. I do say that whoever objects to this nomination—and it is not on the part of the Senator from Nebraska, as I understand-if there is any Senator in this body who objects to considering the nomination, it should be revealed who he is; let him stand up and

Mr. WHERRY. If I may make an observation, I hope Senators will not get irritated tonight. Senators have all been so wonderfully cooperative.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. I think that if Senators would all sit down and there were a little order, it might be helpful. The Senator will suspend until the Senate is in order. This is not a riot. The Senator from Nebraska will proceed.

Mr. WHERRY. I thank the President pro tempore, who is so ably directing the Senate. I wish to comply with the rules.

I hope Senators will give unanimous consent, without any further ado about this matter, and let us soon take a recess and get a good night's sleep, and when we return we probably will not have any argument over this nomination.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Let the Chair inquire whether the unanimous-consent request would permit the consideration of the two routine treaties, which are simply double taxation treaties.

Mr. WHERRY. Certainly. The only thing I asked to go over was this one nomination, without prejudice.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. there objection to the request of the Senator from Nebraska? The Chears none, and the order is made. The Chair

Mr. WHERRY. I thank all Senators.

Mr. HAWKES subsequently said: Mr. President, with reference to the nomination of Frieda B. Hennock, of New York, to be a member of the Federal Communications Commission, I wish to associate myself with what was said by the Senator from Maine [Mr. BREWSTER] with regard to the nomination, and also by the minority leader [Mr. BARKLEY].

The nomination has the approval of the distinguished Senator from New York [Mr. Ives]. It has the approval of many prominent Republicans in New York State. It has the approval of some of the most distinguished members of the bar who have been friends of mine for many years.

I did not take this nomination lightly. I called on the telephone and talked with those prominent gentlemen. They all give this lady a clean bill of health, and recommend her very highy. The Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce voted 8 to 0 in favor of her confirmation. It is my earnest hope that, regardless of the party with which she is associated, her nomination may have the approval of the Senate at a subsequent executive session.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I express my appreciation to the Senator from New Jersey for his very fair attitude in regard to this matter.

Mr. HAWKES. I thank the Senator.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

As in executive session,

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations, which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(For nominations this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will proceed to call the Executive Calendar. The first treaty will be passed over. The clerk will state the second order of business.

CONVENTION WITH DENMARK RELATING TO DOUBLE TAXATION

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the convention, Executive H (80th Cong., 2d sess.), a convention between the United States of America and Denmark, signed at Washington on May 6, 1948, for the avoidance of double taxation and the prevention of fiscal evasion with respect to taxes on income, which had been reported from the Committee on Foreign Relations with a reservation. The convention was read the second time, as

CONVENTION BETWEEN THE UNITED STATES AND DENMARK RELATING TO TAXES ON INCOME

The President of the United States of America and His Majesty the King of Denmark, desiring to conclude a convention for the avoidance of double taxation and the prevention of fiscal evasion with respect to taxes on income, have appointed for that purpose as their respective Plenipotentiaries:

The President of the United States of America: Mr. George C. Marshall, Secretary of State of the United States of America, and

His Majesty the King of Denmark: Mr. Henrik Kauffmann, Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary of Denmark to the United States of America. who, having communicated to one another their full powers, found in good and due form, have agreed upon the following Articles:

ARTICLE I

(1) The taxes referred to in this Convention are:

(a) In the case of the United States of

The Federal income tax, including surtaxes.

(b) In the case of Denmark:

The national income tax, including the war profits tax.

The intercommunial income tax.

The communal income tax.

(2) The present Convention shall also apply to any other taxes of a substantially similar character imposed by either contracting State subsequently to the date of signature of the present Convention.

ARTICLE II

(1) As used in this Convention:

(a) The term "United States" means the United States of America, and when used in a geographical sense includes only the States, the Territories of Alaska and Hawaii, and the District of Columbia.

(b) The term "Denmark" means the Kingdom of Denmark; the provisions of the Convention shall not, however, extend to the Faroe Islands; nor do they apply to Green-

- (c) The term "permanent establishment" means a branch office, factory, warehouse or other fixed place of business, but does not include the casual and temporary use of merely storage facilities, nor does it include an agency unless the agent has and exercises a general authority to negotiate and conclude contracts on behalf of an enterprise or has a stock of merchandise from which he regularly fills orders on its behalf. An enterprise of one of the contracting States shall not be deemed to have a permanent establishment in the other State merely because it carries on business dealings in such other State through a bona fide commission agent, broker, or custodian acting in the ordinary course of his business as such. The fact that an enterprise of one of the contracting States maintains in the other State a fixed place of business exclusively for the purchase of goods or merchandise shall not of itself constitute such fixed place of busi-ness a permanent establishment of such enterprise. The fact that a corporation of one contracting State has a subsidiary corporation which is a corporation of the other State or which is engaged in trade or business in the other State shall not of itself constitute that subsidiary corporation a permanent establishment of its parent corporation.
- (d) The term "enterprise of one of the contracting States" means, as the case may be, "United States enterprise" or "Danish enterprise".

(e) The term "enterprise" includes every form of undertaking whether carried on by an individual, partnership, corporation, or

- any other entity.

  (f) The term "United States enterprise" means an enterprise carried on in the United States of America by a resident of the United States of America or by a United States corporation or other entity; the term "United States corporation or other entity" means a partnership, corporation or other entity created or organized in the United States of America or under the law of the United States of America or of any State or Terri- tory of the United States of America.

  (g) The term "Danish enterprise" means an enterprise carried on in Denmark by a resident of Denmark or by a Danish corporation or other entity; the term "Danish cor-poration or other entity" means a partnership, corporation or other entity created or organized in Denmark or under Danish laws.

(h) The term "competent authorities" means, in the case of the United States the Commissioner of Internal Revenue or his authorized representative; and in the case of Denmark, the Chief of the Taxation De-partment of the Ministry of Finance (Generaldirektøren for Skattevaesenet) or his authorized representative.

(2) In the application of the provisions the present Convention by one of the contracting States any term not otherwise defined shall, unless the context otherwise requires, have the meaning which such term has under its own tax laws.

ARTICLE III

- (1) An enterprise of one of the contracting States shall not be subject to taxation in the other contracting State in respect of its industrial and commercial profits unless it is engaged in trade or business in such other State through a permanent establishment situated therein. If it is so engaged such other State may impose its tax upon the entire income of such enterprise from sources within such other State.
- (2) In determining the industrial or commercial profits from sources within the territory of one of the contracting States of an enterprise of the other contracting State, no profits shall be deemed to arise from the mere purchase of goods or merchandise with-in the territory of the former contracting State by such enterprise.
- (3) Where an enterprise of one of the contracting States is engaged in trade or business in the territory of the other con-tracting State through a permanent estab-lishment situated therein, there shall be attributed to such permanent establishment the industrial or commercial profits which it might be expected to derive if it were an independent enterprise engaged in the same or similar activities under the same or similar conditions and dealing at arm's length with the enterprise of which it is a permanent establishment and the profits so attributed shall, subject to the law of such other contracting State, be deemed to be income from sources within the territory of such other contracting State.

ARTICLE IV

Where an enterprise of one of the contracting States, by reason of its participation in the management or the financial structure of an enterprise of the other contracting State, makes with or imposes on the latter, in their commercial or financial relations, conditions different from those which would be made with an independent enterprise, any profits which would normally have accrued to one of the enterprises but by reason of those conditions have not so accrued, may be included in the profits of that enterprise and taxed accordingly.

ARTICLE V

(1) Income which an enterprise of one of the contracting States derives from the operation of ships or aircraft registered in that State shall be exempt from taxation in the other contracting State.

(2) The present Convention shall not be deemed to affect the arrangement between the United States and Denmark providing for relief from double income taxation on shipping profits, effected by exchanges of notes dated May 22, August 9 and 18, October 24, 25, and 28, and December 5 and 6, in the year 1922.

ARTICLE VI

(1) Dividends shall be taxable only in the contracting State in which the shareholder is resident or, if the shareholder is a corporation or other entity, in the contracting State in which such corporation or other entity is incorporated or organized.

(2) Each of the contracting States reserves, however, the right to collect and re-tain the tax which, under its revenue laws, is deductible at the source with respect to such dividends, but the tax shall not exceed 15 percent of the amount of dividends derived from sources within such State by a resident, corporation or other entity of the other State, if the recipient has no permanent establishment in the contracting State from which the dividends are derived.

(3) It is agreed, however, that the rate of dividend tax at the source shall not exceed five percent if the shareholder is a corporation controlling, directly or indirectly, at least 95 percent of the entire voting power in the corporation paying the dividend, and if not more than 25 percent of the gross income of such paying corporation is derived from interest and dividends, other than interest and dividends received from its own subsidiary corporations. Such reduction of the to five percent shall not apply if the relationship of the two corporations has been arranged or is maintained primarily with the intention of securing such reduced rate.

Interest on bonds, securities, notes, debentures, or on any other form of indebtedness derived from sources within one of the contracting States by a resident or corporation or other entity of the other contracting State not having a permanent establishment in the former State shall be exempt from tax by such former State.

ARTICLE VIII

Royalties and other amounts derived as consideration for the right to use copyrights, patents, designs, secret processes and formulas, trade-marks and other like property (including rentals and like payments in respect of motion picture films) derived from sources within one of the contracting States by a resident or corporation or other entity of the other contracting State not having a permanent establishment in the former State shall be exempt from taxation in such former State.

ARTICLE IX

- (1) Income from real property (not including interest derived from mortgages and bonds secured by real property) and royalties in respect of the operation of mines, quarries, or other natural resources, shall be taxable only in the contracting State in which such property, mines, quarries, or other natural resources are situated.
- (2) A resident or corporation of one of the contracting States deriving any such income from sources within the other contracting State may, for any taxable year, elect to be subject to the tax of such other contracting State, on a net basis, as if such resident or corporation were engaged in trade or business within such other contracting State through a permanent establishment therein during such taxable year.

ARTICLE X

- (1) Wages, salaries, and similar compensation and pensions paid by one of the contracting States or by any other public au-thority within that State to individuals re-siding in the other State shall be taxable only in the former State.
- (2) Private pensions and life annuities derived from within one of the contracting States and paid to individuals residing in the other contracting State shall be exempt from taxation in the former State.
- (3) The term "life annuities" herein means a stated sum payable periodically at stated times during life, or during a specified number of years, under an obligation to make the payments in consideration of a gross sum paid for such obligation.

ARTICLE XI

(1) Compensation for labor or personal services, including the practice of the liberal professions, shall be taxable only in the contracting State in which such services are rendered.

(2) The provisions of paragraph (1) are, however, subject to the following exceptions:
(a) A resident of Denmark shall be exempt from United States tax upon compensation for labor or personal services if he is tem-porarily present in the United States for a period or periods not exceeding a total of ninety days during the taxable year and the compensation received for such services does not exceed $3,000 in the aggregate. If, how-ever, his compensation is received for labor or personal services performed as an employee of, or under contract with, a resident or corporation or other entity of Denmark, he will be exempt from United States tax if his stay in the United States does not exceed a total of 180 days during the taxable year.

(b) The provisions of paragraph (2) (a) of this Article shall apply, mutatis mutandis, to a resident of the United States with respect to compensation for personal services otherwise subject to income tax in Denmark.

(3) The provisions of this Article shall have no application to the income to which Article X (1) relates.

ARTICLE XII

Gains derived in one of the contracting States from the sale or exchange of capital assets by a resident or corporation or other entity of the other contracting State shall be exempt from taxation in the former State if such resident or corporation or other entity is not engaged in trade or business in such former State.

ARTICLE XIII

Students or apprentices, citizens of one of the contracting States, residing in the other contracting State exclusively for purposes of study or for acquiring business experience, shall not be taxable in the latter State in respect of remittances (other than their own income) received by them from abroad for the purposes of their maintenance or studies.

ARTICLE XIV

A professor or teacher, a resident of one of the contracting States, who temporarily visits the territory of the other contracting State for the purpose of teaching for a period not exceeding two years at a university, college, school or other educational institution in the other contracting State, shall be exempted in such other contracting State from tax on his remuneration for such teaching for such

ARTICLE XV

It is agreed that double taxation shall be avoided in the following manner:

(a) The United States in determining the income taxes, including surtaxes, of its citizens, residents, or corporations may, regardless of any other provisions of this Convention, include in the basis upon which such taxes are imposed all items of income taxable under the revenue laws of the United States as if this Convention had not come into effect. The United States shall, however, subject to the provisions of section 131, Internal Revenue Code, deduct from its taxes the amount of Danish taxes specified in Article I of this Convention.

(b) Dennark, in determining its taxes specified in Article I of this Convention, may, regardless of any other provision of this Convention, include in the basis upon which such taxes are imposed all items of income subject to such taxes under the taxation laws of Denmark. Denmark shall, however, deduct from the taxes so calculated the United States tax on income coming within the provisions of Articles III, IX, X (1), XIII and XIV of this Convention and on earned income earned within the United States, but in an amount not exceeding that proportion of the Danish taxes which such income bears to the entire income subject to tax by Denmark. Denmark will also allow as a deduc-tion from its taxes an amount equal to 15 percent (five percent in the case of divi-dends covered by Article VI (3)) of the gross amount of dividends (reduced by the United States tax applicable to such dividends) from sources within the United States.

ARTICLE XVI

(1) The citizens of one of the contracting States shall not, while resident in the other contracting State, be subjected therein to other or more burdensome taxes than are the citizens of such other contracting State residing in its territory. As used in this paragraph,

(a) the term "citizens" includes all legal persons, partnerships, and associations created or organized under the laws in the respective contracting States, and

(b) the term "taxes" means taxes of every kind or description whether national, Federal, State, provincial or municipal.

(2) It is agreed that section 25, paragraph 5, of the Danish law No. 391 of July 12, 1946, prescribing an addition of 50 percent of the capital increment tax on corporations in cases where more than 50 percent of the entire stock capital is owned by a single shareholder residing outside Denmark, shall not be applicable when the shareholder in ques-tion is a resident of the United States or a United States corporation or other entity.

ARTICLE XVII

The competent authorities of the contracting States shall exchange such information (being information available under the respective taxation laws of the contracting States) as is necessary for carrying out the provisions of the present Convention or for the prevention of fraud or the administration of statutory provisions against tax avoidance in relation to the taxes which are the subject of the present Convention. Any information so exchanged shall be treated as secret and shall not be disclosed to any person other than those concerned with the ssment and collection of the taxes which are the subject of the present Convention. No information shall be exchanged which would disclose any trade secret or trade process.

ARTICLE XVIII

(1) The contracting States undertake to lend assistance and support to each other in the collection of the taxes which are the subject of the present Convention, together with interests, costs, and additional to the taxes

(2) In the case of applications for enforcement of taxes, revenue claims of each of the contracting States which have been finally determined may be accepted for enforcement by the other contracting State and may be collected in that State in accordance with the laws applicable to the enforcement and collection of its own taxes

(3) Any application shall include a certification that under the laws of the State making the application the taxes have been finally determined.

(4) The assistance provided for in this Article shall not be accorded with respect to the citizens, corporations, or other entities of the State to which application is made, except as is necessary to insure that the ex-emption or reduced rate of tax granted under the present Convention to such citizens, cor-porations, or other entities shall not be en-joyed by persons not entitled to such benefits.

ARTICLE XIX

The State to which application is made for information or assistance shall comply as soon as possible with the request addressed to it except that such State may refuse to comply with the request for reasons of public policy or if compliance would in-volve violation of a trade, business, industrial or professional secret or trade process.

ARTICLE XX

Where a taxpayer shows proof that the action of the revenue authorities of the contracting States has resulted in double taxation in his case in respect of any of the taxes to which the present Convention re-lates, he shall be entitled to lodge a claim with the State of which he is a citizen or, if he is not a citizen of either of the contracting States, with the State of which he is a resident, or, if the taxpayer is a corpora-tion or other entity, with the State in which it is created or organized. Should the claim be upheld, the competent authority of such State may come to an agreement with the competent authority of the other State with a view to equitable avoidance of the double taxation in question.

ARTICLE XXI

The provisions of this Convention shall not be construed to deny or affect in any manner the right of diplomatic and consular officers to other or additional exemptions now enjoyed or which may hereafter be granted to such officers.

(2) The provisions of the present Convention shall not be construed to restrict in any manner any exemption, deduction, credit or other allowance accorded by the laws of one of the contracting States in the determination of the tax imposed by such State.

(3) Should any difficult or doubt arise as to the interpretation or application of the present Convention, or its relationship to Conventions between one of the contracting States and any other State, the competent authorities of the contracting States may settle the question by mutual agreement.

ARTICLE XXII

The competent authorities of the two contracting States may prescribe regulations necessary to interpret and carry out the provisions of this Convention. With respect to the provisions of this Convention relat-With respect ing to exchange of information and mutual assistance in the collection of taxes, such authorities may, by common agreement, prescribe rules concerning matters of procedure, forms of application and replies thereto, conversion of currency, disposition of amounts collected, minimum amounts subject to collection and related matters.

- (1) The present Convention shall be ratified and the instruments of ratification shall be exchanged at Washington as soon as pos-
- (2) Upon the exchange of instruments of ratification, the present Convention shall have effect
- (a) in the case of United States tax, for the taxable years beginning on or after the first day of January of the year in which such exchange takes place;

(b) in the case of Danish tax, for the taxable years beginning on or after the first day of April of the year in which such exchange takes place.

(3) The present Convention shall continue effective for a period of five years and in-definitely after that period, but may be terminated by either of the contracting States at the end of the five-year period or at any time thereafter, privided that at least six months' prior notice of termination has been given and, in such event, the present Convention shall cease to be effective.

(a) as respects United States tax, for the taxable years beginning on or after the first day of January next following the expiration of the six-month period;

(b) as respects Danish tax, for the taxable years beginning on or after the first day of April next following the expiration of the six-month period.

Done at Washington, in duplicate, in the English and Danish languages, the two texts having equal authenticity, this 6th day of May, 1948.

For the President of the United States of America:

[SEAL] G C MARSHALL
For his Majesty the King of Denmark:
[SEAL] HENRIK KAUFFMANN

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If the Chair may be permitted to make a brief statement, both the treaties, Executive H and Executive I, are routine treaties to protect against double taxation. They follow the form which has been established in connection with treaties with other countries on the same subject.

The text of the treaty as originally submitted did include other matters which proved to be controversial, and the other matters have been eliminated by reservation. Both treaties were in charge of the able junior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH], and the Chair will recognize the Senator from New Jersey if he feels that there is anything that should be said on the subject.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, there is very little that need be said. The controversy over these treaties was taken care of under the French treaty which was ratified at the last executive session, as I recall. We provided the same protection to our interests we voted into the French treaty. There were one or two controversial paragraphs in the treaties, and because it was important that the treaties should be reported and ratified at this session, we eliminated the controversial features and put them to one side, and we are submitting the treaties with the controversial features omitted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The convention is open to amendment. If there be no amendment to be proposed, the convention will be reported to the Senate.

The convention was reported to the Senate without amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution of ratification, with the reservation, will be read.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

Resolved (two-thirds of the Senators present concurring therein), That the Senate advise and consent to the ratification of Executive H, Eightleth Congress, second session, the convention between the United States of America and Denmark, signed at Washington on May 6, 1948, for the avoidance of double taxation and the prevention of fiscal evasion with respect to taxes on income subject to the following reservation:

The Government of the United States of America does not accept article XII of the convention relating to gains derived from the sale or exchange of capital assets.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the reservation to the resolution of ratification.

The reservation was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution of ratification with the reservation. IPutting the question. I Two-thirds of the Senators present concurring therein, the resolution of ratification, with the reservation, is agreed to, and the convention is ratified.

CONVENTION WITH THE KINGDOM OF THE NETHERLANDS RELATING TO AVOIDANCE OF DOUBLE TAXATION

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the Convention, Executive I (80th Cong., 2d sess.), a convention between the United States of America and the Kingdom of the Netherlands for the avoidance of double taxation and the prevention of fiscal evasion with respect to taxes on income and certain other taxes, signed at Washington on April 29, 1948, which had been reported from the Committee on Foreign Relations with reservations. The convention was read the second time, as follows:

CONVENTION BETWEEN THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA AND THE KINGDOM OF THE NETH-ERLANDS WITH RESPECT TO TAXES ON INCOME AND CERTAIN OTHER TAXES

The Government of the United States of America and the Government of the Kingdom of the Netherlands, desiring to conclude a convention for the avoidance of double taxation and the prevention of fiscal evasion with respect to taxes on income and certain other taxes, have appointed for that purpose as their respective Plenipotentiaries:

The Government of the United States of Mr. George C. Marshall, Secretary of State, and

The Government of the Kingdom of the Netherlands:

Mr. E. N. van Kleffens, Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary of the Kingdom of the Netherlands, who, having communicated to each other their full powers, found in good and due form, have agreed upon the following Arti-

ARTICLE I

- (1) The taxes which are the subject of the present Convention are:
- (a) In the case of the United States: the Federal income taxes.
  - (b) In the case of the Netherlands:
- (i) for the application of the provisions of the Convention other than Article XX, the income tax and the Netherlands taxes credited against it, the corporation tax and the Netherlands taxes credited against it, the property tax, and the tax on fees of directors and managers of corporations; and

(ii) for the application of Articles XX to XXVIII inclusive (except Articles XXIV and XXVII), the capital accretions tax and the extraordinary capital tax.

(2) The present Convention shall apply also to any other taxes of a substantially similar character imposed by either Contracting State subsequently to the date of signature of the present Convention, or, by the government of any overseas part of the Kingdom (in the case of the Netherlands) or overseas territory (in the case of the United States) to which the present Convention is extended under Article XXVII, subsequently to the date of the notification of extension.

(3) In the event of appreciable changes in the fiscal laws of either of the Contracting States the competent authorities of the Contracting States will consult together.

ARTICLE II

- (1) In the present Convention, unless the context otherwise requires:(a) The term "United States" means the
- (a) The term "United States" means the United States of America, and when used in a geographical sense means the States, the Territories of Alaska and of Hawaii, and the District of Columbia.
- (b) The term "Netherlands" means only the Kingdom of the Netherlands in Europe.

- (c) The term "United States corporation" means a corporation, association or other organization or juridical entity created in the United States or under the laws of the United States or of any State or territory of the United States.
- (d) The term "Netherlands corporation" means a corporation, association or other organization or juridical entity created in the Netherlands or under the laws of the Netherlands.
- (e) The terms "corporation of one Contracting State" and "corporation of the other Contracting State" means a United States corporation or a Netherlands corporation, as the context requires.

(f) The term "United States enterprise" means an industrial or commercial enterprise or undertaking carried on in the United States by a citizen or resident of the United States or by a United States corporation.

(g) The term "Netherlands enterprise" means an industrial or commercial enterprise or undertaking carried on in the Netherlands by a citizen or resident of the Netherlands or by a Netherlands corporation.

(h) The terms "enterprise of one of the Contracting States" and "enterprise of the other Contracting States" means a United States enterprise or a Netherlands enterprise, as the context requires.

- The term "permanent establishment", when used with respect to an enterprise of one of the Contracting States, means a branch, factory, or other fixed place of business, but does not include an agency unless the agent has, and habitually exercises, a general authority to negotiate and conclude contracts on behalf of such enterprise or has a stock of merchandise from which he regularly fills orders on behalf of such enterprise. An enterprise of one of the Contracting States shall not be deemed to have a permanent establishment in the other Contracting State merely because it carries on business dealings in such other Contracting State through a bona fide commission agent, broker or custodian acting in the ordinary course of his business as such. The fact that an enterprise of one of the Contracting States maintains in the other Contracting State a fixed place of business exclusively for the purchase of goods or merchandise shall not of itself constitute such fixed place of business a permanent establishment of such enterprise. When a corporation of one Contracting State has a subsidiary corporation which is a corporation of the other Contracting State or which is engaged in trade or business in such other Contracting State, such subsidiary corporation shall not, merely because of that fact, be deemed to be a permanent establishment of its parent corporation.
- (j) The term "competent authority" or "competent authorities" means, in the case of the United States, the Commissioner of Internal Revenue or his duly authorized representative; in the case of the Netherlands, the Directeur-Generaal der Belastingen or his duly authorized representative; and, in the case of any part or territory to which provisions of the present Convention are extended under Article XXVII, the competent authority for the administration in such part or territory of the taxes to which such provisions apply.
- (2) In the application of the provisions of the present Convention by either of the Contracting States, any term which is not defined in the present Convention shall, unless the context otherwise requires, have the meaning which that term has under the laws of such Contracting State relating to the taxes which are the subject of the present Convention.

ARTICLE III

(1) An enterprise of one of the Contracting States shall not be subject to taxation by the other Contracting State in respect of its industrial or commercial profits unless it is engaged in trade or business in the other Contracting State through a permanent establishment situated therein. If it is so engaged the other Contracting State may impose the tax only upon the income of such enterprise from sources within such other State.

(2) Where an enterprise of one of the Contracting States is engaged in trade or business in the other Contracting State through a permanent establishment situated therein, there shall be attributed to such permanent establishment the industrial or commercial profits which it might be expected to derive if it were an independent enterprise engaged in the same or similar activities under the same or similar conditions and dealing at arm's length with the enterprise of which it is a permanent establishment, and the profits so attributed shall, subject to the law of such other Contracting State, be deemed to be income from sources within such other Contracting State.

(3) In determining the industrial or commercial profits from sources within one of the Contracting States of an enterprise of the other Contracting State, no profits shall be deemed to arise from the mere purchase of goods or merchandise within the former Contracting State by such enterprise.

(4) The competent authorities of the Contracting States may lay down rules by agreement for the apportionment of industrial or commercial profits.

ARTICLE IV

Where an enterprise of one of the Contracting States, by reason of its participation in the management, control or capital of an enterprise of the other Contracting States, makes with or imposes on the latter enterprise, in their commercial or financial relations, conditions different from those which would be made with an independent enterprise, any profits which would, but for those conditions, have accrued to one of the enterprises, may be included in the taxable profits of that enterprise.

ARTICLE V

Income of whatever nature derived from real property and interest from mortgages secured by real property shall be taxable only in the Contracting State in which the real property is situated.

ARTICLE VI

(1) Income which an enterprise of one of the Contracting States derives from the operation of ships or aircraft registered in that State shall be taxable only in the State in which such ships or aircraft are registered. Income derived by such an enterprise from the operation of ships or aircraft not so registered shall be subject to the provisions of Article III.

(2) The present Convention shall be deemed to suspend, for the duration of the Convention as between the parties to which this Article applies, the provisions of the arrangement effected by exchange of notes between the United States and the Netherlands, dated September 13, October 19, and November 27, 1926, providing for relief from double income taxation on shipping profits.

(3) In the event that the application of this Article is extended to the Netherland Indies in accordance with Article XXVII, the exchange of notes between the United States and the Netherlands, dated March 8, May 23, and November 8, 1939, relating to the applications to the Netherland Indies of the arrangement referred to in paragraph (2) of this Article, shall be deemed to be suspended for so long as this Article continues to be applicable with respect to the Netherland

ARTICLE VII

(1) The rate of United States tax on dividends derived from a United States corporation by a resident or corporation of Netherlands not engaged in trade or business in the United States through a permanent establishment shall not exceed 15 percent: Provided. That such rate of tax shall not exceed 5 percent if such Netherlands corporation controls, directly or indirectly, at least 95 percent of the entire voting power in the corporation paying the dividend, and not more than 25 percent of the gross income of such paying corporation is derived from interest and dividends, other than interest and dividends from its own subsidiary corporation. Such reduction of the rate to 5 percent shall not apply if the relationship of the two corporations has been arranged or is maintained primarily with the intention of securing such reduced rate.

(2) Dividends derived from sources within the Netherlands by a resident or corporation of the United States not engaged in trade or business in the Netherlands through a permanent establishment shall be exempt from Netherlands tax.

(3) Either of the Contracting States may terminate this Article, by giving written notice of termination to the other Contracting State through diplomatic channels, on or before the thirtieth day of June in any year after the first year for which the present Convention becomes effective. In such event this Article shall cease to be effective on and after the first day of January in the year next following that in which such notice is given.

ARTICLE VIII

(1) Interest (on bonds, securities, notes, debentures, or on any other form of indebtedness), other than interest referred to in Article V of the present Convention, derived from sources within the United States by a resident or corporation of the Netherlands not engaged in trade or business in the United States through a permanent establishment, shall be exempt from United States tax; but such exemption shall not apply to such interest paid by a United States corporation to a Netherlands corporation controlling, directly or indirectly, more than 50 percent of the entire voting power in the paying corporation.

(2) Interest (on bonds, securities, notes, debentures, or on any other form of indebtedness), other than interest referred to in Article V of the present Convention, derived from sources within the Netherlands by a resident or corporation of the United States not engaged in trade or business in the Netherlands through a permanent establishment, shall be exempt from Netherlands tax; but such exemption shall not apply to such interest paid by a Netherlands corporation to a United States corporation controlling, directly or indirectly, more than 50 percent of the entire voting power in the paying corporation.

ARTICLE IX

Royalties for the right to use copyrights, patents, designs, secret processes and formulae, trade marks, and other analogous property, and royalties, including rentals, in respect of motion-picture films or for the use of industrial, commercial, or scientific equipment, derived from sources within one of the Contracting States by a resident or corporation of the other Contracting State not engaged in trade or business in the former State through a permanent establishment, shall be exempt from tax imposed by the former State.

ARTICLE X

A resident or corporation of one of the Contracting States, deriving from sources within the other Contracting State royalties in respect of the operation of mines, quarries, or natural resources, or rentals from real property, may elect for any taxable year to be subject to the tax of such other Contracting State, on a net basis, as if such resident or corporation were engaged in trade or business within such other Contracting State through a permanent establishment therein during such taxable year.

ARTICLE XI

A resident or corporation of one of the Contracting States not engaged in trade or business in the other Contracting State shall be exempt from tax in such other State on gains from the sale or exchange of capital assets.

ARTICLE XII

Dividends and interest paid by a Netherlands corporation shall be exempt from United States tax except where the recipient is a citizen, resident, or corporation of the United States.

ARTICLE XIII

A Netherlands corporation shall be exempt from United States tax on its accumulated or undistributed earnings, profits, income or surplus if it can prove to the satisfaction of the competent authorities of the United States that individuals who are residents of the Netherlands (other than citizens of the United States) control, directly or indirectly, throughout the last half of the taxable year, more than 50 percent of the entire voting power in such corporation.

ARTICLE XIV

(1) The United States income tax liability for any taxable year beginning prior to January 1, 1936, of any individual (other than a citizen of the United States) resident in the Netherlands, or of any Netherlands corporation, remaining unpaid on the effective date of the present Convention, may be adjusted on a basis satisfactory to the United States Commissioner of Internal Revenue: Provided, That the amount to be paid in settlement of such liability shall not exceed the amount of the liability which would have been determined if

(a) The United States Revenue Act of 1936 (except in the case of a Netherlands corporation in which more than 50 percent of the entire voting power was controlled, directly or indirectly, throughout the latter half of the taxable year, by citizens or residents of the United States), and (b) Articles XII and XIII of the present

(b) Articles XII and XIII of the present Convention, had been in effect for such year, If the taxpayer was not, within the meaning of such Revenue Act, engaged in trade or business in the United States and had no office or place of business therein during the taxable year, the amount of interest and penalties shall not exceed 50 percent of the amount of the tax with respect to which such interest and penalties have been computed.

(2) The United States income tax unpaid on the effective date of the present Convention for any taxable year beginning after December 31, 1935, and prior to the effective date of the present Convention in the case of an individual (other than a citizen of the United States) resident of the Netherlands, or in the case of any Netherlands corporation, shall be determined as if the provisions of Article XII and XIII of the present Convention had been in effect for such taxable year.

(3) The provisions of paragraph (1) of this Article shall not apply

(a) unless the taxpayer files with the Commissioner of Internal Revenue within a period of 2 years following the effective date of the present Convention a request that such tax liability be so adjusted and furnishes such information as the Commissioner may require; or (b) in any case in which the Commissioner is satisfied that any deficiency in tax is due to fraud with intent to evade the tax.

ARTICLE XV

(1) Wages, salaries, and similar compensation, and pensions and life annuities, paid either directly by, or from funds created by, one of the Contracting States or the political subdivisions or territories thereof to individuals in the other Contracting State shall be exempt from taxation in the latter State.

(2) Private pensions and life annuities derived from within one of the Contracting States and paid to individuals in the other Contracting State shall be exempt from taxation in the former State.

(3) The term "pensions" as used in this Article means periodic payments made in consideration for services rendered or by way of compensation for injuries received.
(4) The term "life annuities" as used in

(4) The term "life annuities" as used in this Article means a stated sum payable periodically at stated times during life, or during a specified number of years, under an obligation to make the payments in return for adequate and full consideration in money or money's worth.

ARTICLE XVI

(1) A resident of the Netherlands shall be exempt from United States tax upon compensation for labor or personal services performed within the United States if he is temporarily present within the United States for a period or periods not exceeding a total of 183 days during the taxable year and his compensation is received for labor or personal services performed as a worker or employee of, or under contract with, a resident of the Netherlands, or a Netherlands corporation, carrying the actual burden of the remuneration.

(2) The provisions of paragraph (1) of this Article shall apply, mutatis mutandis, to a resident of the United States deriving compensation for labor or personal services performed within the Netherlands.

ARTICLE XVII

Professors or teachers, residents of one of the Contracting States, who, in accordance with agreements between the Contracting States or between teaching establishments in the Contracting States for the exchange of professors and teachers, visit the other Contracting State to teach, for a maximum period of two years, in a university, college or other teaching establishment in such other Contracting State, shall not be taxed by such other State with respect to the remuneration which they receive for such teaching.

ARTICLE XVIII

Students or business apprentices of one Contracting State residing in the other Contracting State exclusively for purposes of study or for acquiring business experience shall not be taxable by the latter State in respect of remittances received by them from abroad for the purpose of their maintenance or studies.

ARTICLE XIX

(1) Notwithstanding any provisions of the present Convention (other than paragraph (1) of Article XV when applicable in the case of an individual who is deemed by each Contracting State to be a citizen thereof), each of the two Contracting States, in determining the taxes, including all surtaxes, of its citizens or residents or corporations, may include in the basis upon which such taxes are imposed all items of income taxable under its own revenue laws as though this Convention had not come into effect.

(2) As far as may be in accordance with the provisions of the United States Internal Revenue Code, the United States agrees to allow as a deduction from the income taxes imposed by the United States the appropriate amount of taxes paid to the Netherlands, whether paid directly by the taxpayer or by withholding at the source.

(3) As far as may be in accordance with the provisions of Netherlands law, the Netherlands agrees to allow a deduction from Netherlands tax with respect to income from sources within the United States, in order to take into account the Federal income taxes paid to the United States, whether paid directly by the taxpayer or by withholding at the source.

ARTICLE XX

(1) All persons who left the Netherlands between April 30, 1939, and December 31, 1945, inclusive (other than persons who were citizens of the United States at the time of leaving the Netherlands or Netherlands subject who by reason of their function as governmental officials in established service reside abroad and the members of their family living with them), and who are deemed to be taxpayers under the provisions of Nether-lands law relating to the capital accretions tax or the extraordinary capital tax, and who became residents of the United States (according to the income tax law of the United States) during that period, and who did not return to the Netherlands on or before December 31, 1945, to resume residence in the Netherlands (according to the income tax law of the Netherlands), shall be taxable by the Netherlands:

(a) Under the law relating to the capital accretions tax, only in respect of accretions arising from their property situated in the Netherlands (as defined in that law in the case of nonresidents) and from their activities in the Netherlands;

(b) Under the law relating to the extraordinary capital tax, only in respect of their property situated in the Netherlands (as defined in that law in the case of nonresidents)

(2) All persons who left the Netherlands between April 30, 1939, and December 31, 1945, inclusive, and who were citizens of the United States at the time of leaving the Netherlands, and who are deemed to be tax-payers under the provisions of Netherlands law relating to the capital accretions tax or the extraordinary capital tax, and who became residents of the United States (according to the income tax law of the United States) on or before December 31, 1945, shall be taxable by the Netherlands:

(a) under the law relating to the capital accretions tax, only in respect of accretions arising from their property situated in the Netherlands (as defined in that law in the case of nonresidents) and from their activities in the Netherlands;

(b) under the law relating to the extraordinary capital tax, only in respect of their property situated in the Netherlands (as defined in that law in the case of nonresidents).

(3) The provisions of this Article shall be deemed to be effective as though the present Convention had entered into force on the effective date of the Netherlands law relating to the capital accretions tax or the extraordinary capital tax, as the case may be.

ARTICLE XXI

The competent authorities of the Contracting States shall exchange such information (being information which such authorities have in proper order at their disposal) as is necessary for carrying out the provisions of the present Convention or for the prevention of fraud or the administration of statutory provisions against legal avoidance in relation to the taxes which are the subject of the present Convention. Any information so exchanged shall be treated as secret and shall not be disclosed to any person other than those concerned with the assessment and collection of the taxes which are the subject of the present Convention. No information as aforesaid shall be exchanged which would disclose any trade, business, industrial or professional secret or trade process.

- ARTICLE XXII

(1) The Contracting States undertake to lend assistance and support to each other in the collection of the taxes which are the subject of the present Convention, together with interest, costs, and additions to the taxes and fines not being of a penal character.

character.

(2) In the case of applications for enforcement of taxes, revenue claims of each of the Contracting States which have been finally determined may be acceptd for enforcement by the other Contracting State and collected in that State in accordance with the laws applicable to the enforcement and collection of its own taxes. The State to which application is made shall not be required to enforce executory measures for which there is no provision in the law of the State making the application.

the State making the application.
(3) Any application shall be accompanied by documents establishing that under the laws of the State making the application the taxes have been finally determined.

(4) The assistance provided for in this Article shall not be accorded with respect to the citizens, corporations, or other entities of the State to which application is made, except as is necessary to insure that the exemption or reduced rate of tax granted under the convention to such citizens, corporations or other entities shall not be enjoyed by persons not entitled to such benefits.

ARTICLE XXIII

(1) In no case shall the provisions of Articles XXI and XXII be construed so as to impose upon either of the Contracting States the obligation

(a) to carry out administrative measures at variance with the regulations and practice of either Contracting State, or

(b) to supply particulars which are not procurable under its own legislation or that of the State making application.

of the State making application.

(2) The State to which application is made for information or assistance shall comply as soon as possible with the request addressed to it. Nevertheless, such State may refuse to comply with the request for reasons of public policy or if compliance would involve violation of a trade, business, industrial or professional secret or trade process. In such case it shall inform, as soon as possible, the State making the application.

ARTICLE XXIV

Where the action of the revenue authorities of the Contracting States has resulted or will result in double taxation contrary to the provisions of the present Convention, the taxpayer shall be entitled to lodge a claim with the State of which he is a citizen or subject or, if he is not a citizen or subject of either of the Contracting States, with the State of which he is a resident, or, if the taxpayer is a corporation, with the State in which it is created or organized. Should the claim be upheld, the competent authority of such State shall undertake to come to an agreement with the competent authority of the other State with a view to equitable avoidance of the double taxation in question.

ARTICLE XXV

(1) The provisions of the present Convention shall not be construed to restrict in any manner any exemption, deduction, credit or other allowance accorded by the laws of one of the Contracting States in the determination of the tax imposed by such State.

(2) Should any difficulty or doubt arise as to the interpretation or application of the present Convention, the competent authorities of the Contracting States shall undertake to settle the question by mutual agreement.

(3) The citizens or subjects of one of the Contracting States shall not, while resident in the other Contracting State, be subjected therein to other or more burdensome taxes than are the citizens or subjects of such other Contracting State residing in its territory. The term "citizens" or "subjects" as used in this Article includes all legal persons, partnerships and associations deriving their status from, or created or organized under the laws in force in, the respective Contracting States. In this Article the word "taxes" means taxes of every kind or description whether national, federal, state, provincial or municipal.

ARTICLE XXVI

(1) The authorities of each of the Contracting States, in accordance with the practices of that State, may prescribe regulations necessary to carry out the provisions of the present Convention.

(2) With respect to the provisions of the present Convention relating to exchange of information and mutual assistance in the collection of taxes, the competent authorities may, by common agreement, prescribe rules concerning matters of procedure, forms of application and replies thereto, conversion of currency, disposition of amounts collected, minimum amounts subject to collection, and related matters.

ARTICLE XXVII

(1) Either of the Contracting States may, at the time of exchange of instruments of ratification or thereafter while the present Convention continues in force, by a written notification of extension given to the other Contracting State through diplomatic channels, declare the desire of the government of any overseas part of the Kingdom (in the case of the Netherlands) or overseas territory (in the case of the United States), which imposes taxes substantially similar in character to those which are the subject of the present Convention, that the operation of the present Convention, either in whole or as to such provisions thereof as may be deemed to have special application, shall extend to such part or territory.

(2) In the event that a notification is given by one of the Contracting States in accordance with paragraph (1) of this Article, the present Convention, or such provisions thereof as may be specified in the notification, shall apply to any part or territory named in such notification on and after the first day of January following the date of a written communication through diplomatic channels addressed to such Contracting State by the other Contracting State, after such action by the latter States as may be necessary in accordance with its own procedures, stating that such notification is accepted in respect of such part or territory. In the absence of such acceptance, none of the provisions of the present Convention shall apply

(3) At any time after the expiration of one year from the effective date of an extension made by virtue of paragraphs (1) and (2) of this Article, either of the Contracting States may, by a written notice of termination given to the other Contracting State through diplomatic channels, terminate the application of the present Convention, or any part or territory to which the convention, or any of its provisions, has been extended. In that case, the present Convention or the provisions thereof specified in the notice of termination, shall cease to be applicable to the part or territory named in such notice of termination on and after the first day of January following the expiration of a period of 6 months after the date of such notice; provided, however, that this shall not affect the continued ap-the expiration of a period of 6 months after the date of such notice; provided, however, that this shall not affect the continued application of the Convention, or any of the provisions thereof, to the United States, to the Netherlands, or to any part or territory (not named in the notice of termination) to which the Convention, or such provision thereof, applies. (4) For the application of the present Convention in relation to any part or territory to which it is extended by notification given by the United States or the Netherlands, references to "the United States" or to "the Netherlands" or to one or the other Contracting State, as the case may be, shall be construed to refer to such part or territory.

ARTICLE XXVIII

- The present Convention shall be ratified and the instruments of ratification shall be exchanged at Washington as soon as possible.
- (2) The present Convention shall become effective on the first day of January in the year last preceding the year in which the exchange of instruments of ratification takes place. It shall continue effective for a period of 5 years beginning with that date and indefinitely after that period, but may be terminated by either of the Contracting States at the end of the 5-year period or at any time thereafter, provided that at least 6 months' prior notice of termination has been given, the termination to become effective on the first day of January following the expiration of the 6-month period.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The convention is open to amendment. If there be no amendment to be proposed, the convention will be reported to the Senate.

The convention was reported to the Senate without amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution of ratification, with the reservations, will be read.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

Resolved (two-thirds of the Senators present concurring therein). That the Senate advise and consent to the ratification of Executive I, Eightieth Congress, second session, the convention between the United States of America and the Kingdom of the Netherlands for the avoidance of double taxation and the prevention of fiscal evasion with respect to taxes on income and certain other taxes, signed at Washington on April 29, 1948, subject to the following reservations:

(1) The Government of the United States

(1) The Government of the United States of America does not accept article XI of the convention relating to gains from the sale or exchange of capital assets or exchange of capital assets.

(2) The Government of the United States of America does not accept article XIII of the convention relating to United States taxation of the undistributed earnings, profits, income or surplus of a Netherlands corpora-

(3) The Government of the United States of America does not accept article XIV of the convention relating to settlement of unpaid United States income tax liability unless there be eliminated therefrom, (a) references now appearing therein to article XIII and (b) any language which might prevent the taxation by the United States of capital gains, if any, taxable under the revenue laws of the United States for the respective years in which such gains were realized.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the reservations to the resolution of ratification.

The reservations were agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution of ratification with the reservations.

[Putting the question.] Two-thirds of the Senators present concurring therein, the resolution of ratification, with the reservations, is agreed to, and the convention is ratified.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will state the nominations on the calendar.

UNITED NATIONS

The legislative clerk read the nomination of J. Klahr Huddle, of Ohio, now Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary to Burma, to serve concurrently and without additional compensation as the representative of the United States of America on the Kashmir Commission of the Security Council of the United Nations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Claude G. Bowers, of New York, now Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary to Chile, to serve concurrently and without additional compensation as the representative of the United States of America in the Economic Commission for Latin America established by the Economic and Social Council of the United Nations, February 25, 1948.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

DIPLOMATIC AND FOREIGN SERVICE

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations in the Diplomatic and Foreign Service.

Mr. WHERRY. I ask that the nominations in the Diplomatic and Foreign Service be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the nominations are confirmed en bloc.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, at the top of page 3, under Diplomatic and Foreign Service, appears the name Edward T. Barnard, and the next name is that of Jules E. Bernard. I wonder if there is a misprint; whether the second name should be Bernard or Barnard?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair does not have any knowledge of that. The Chair doubts, however, whether there is a misprint.

UNITED STATES COAST GUARD

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations in the United States Coast Guard.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the nominations in the Coast Guard are confirmed en bloc.

COAST AND GEODETIC SURVEY

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations in the Coast and Geodetic Survey.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the nominations in the Coast and Geodetic Survey are confirmed en bloc.

NOMINATIONS IN THE ARMY, NAVY, AND MARINE CORPS

Mr. GURNEY. Mr. President, I report favorably from the Committee on Armed Services certain junior nominations in the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps, 700 in number, and ask for their immediate consideration without their going to the calendar. The nominations are routine. I make this request in order to save printing the names in the calendar. Such a request has been customarily made in order to save the expense of printing.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from South Dakota? The Chair hears none, and the nominations will be received.

Without objection, the nominations will be confirmed, and the President will be notified.

Mr. GURNEY. I failed to say that the nominations have all been approved unanimously by the Senate Committee on Armed Services.

ILLINOIS POSTMASTERS

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I should like to ask a question respecting a number of postmaster nominations, in view of the fact that many postmasters have been confirmed tonight. It is my understanding that some 38 or 40 postmaster nominations in Illinois have been approved by the Civil Service Committee, and I wonder if the chairman of the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service is present and can tell me why those postmasters do not appear on the calendar.

Mr. WHERRY. The Senator from North Dakota is not present.

Mr. LUCAS. It is my understanding that my colleague from Illinois has objected to these postmasters, and he is present. I should like to know whether that is true or not.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. President, I may say to my colleague that I know nothing about the nominations of postmasters that are not on the calendar. I was asked if I approved them and I said I did not know who they were. I do not know who they are and to that extent I have not approved them.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I want to submit resolutions respecting each and every one of these postmasters. The purpose of the resolution is to discharge the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service from further consideration of the nominations of the postmasters to whom I refer. The first one is Monroe A. Lawson, of Clay City, Ill. Mr. Lawson is a disabled marine veteran of World War II, having been wounded on Saipan.

He was the only applicant for the office and the only eligible certified by the Civil Service Commission from an open competitive examination.

He has served as acting postmaster since October 1946, and is unanimously endorsed by the Clay City Chamber of Commerce, and was recommended by the Republican Congressman from that district

Personally, the Senator from Illinois does not know whether this gentleman is a Democrat or a Republican, and it would not make any difference, because he is a veteran, and is No. 1 on the eligible list, and the only one on the list.

Mr. President, why that individual cannot be confirmed by the Senate of the United States at this session will be a little difficult for me to understand, and it will be a little difficult for many people in Illinois to understand—people who will know more about it as time goes by.

I submit the resolution, and ask that it lie over for the day.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be filed and will lie over for the day.

Mr. LUCAS. The second nomination is that of Charles H. McGough, to be postmaster at Secor, Ill. Mr. McGough was the first man on the eligible register established by the Civil Service Commission as the result of an open competitive examination.

He is a disabled veteran of World War II, and is not serving as acting post-master.

Some other individual is serving as acting postmaster while this disabled veteran of World War II, who was the first man on the eligible list, waits for his commission because of someone here in the United States Senate who refuses to approve him or who refuses to report out his nomination.

Mr. President, to me this is indefensible and it is unbelievable that an Illinois boy who went out to fight for his country, and is disabled, and is No. 1 on the list, should not be confirmed. There is nothing that anyone can do about it under the law. He must be ultimately accepted whether anyone likes it or not, because under the law no one can be chosen over him. I do not know what his politics is, but I know that he is a disabled veteran, and I know that he is waiting for this job, and that he cannot get it.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator a question. I have the floor.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No; the Senator from Illinois has the floor. Mr. WHERRY. I beg the Chair's pardon.

Mr. LUCAS. I shall be glad to yield if the Senator from Nebraska wants to ask me a question.

Mr. WHERRY. How does the Senator know that the nomination in question will not be reported from the committee?

Mr. LUCAS. I hope it will. Mr. WHERRY. Is not the Senator really begging the question?

Mr. LUCAS. I am not begging the question very much because unless the nomination is reported from the committee within 48 hours he will not be confirmed. There would not be any action in this matter if it were not for the fact that the Senator from Illinois has taken the floor and proceeded to take the action he is now taking.

Mr. WHERRY. The chairman of the committee is not present.

Mr. LUCAS. I have asked the chairman about this.

Mr. WHERRY. The chairman has done quite well in the matter of reporting nominations, and the Senate has confirmed every nomination which has been placed on the Executive Calendar, with the exception of one, during the executive session today.

Mr. LUCAS. I appreciate that.

Mr. WHERRY. I think that is something of a record. Only one nomination on the calendar has been put over today. I have taken the position that when the Senate acted on the Executive Calendar all nominations on the calendar should be confirmed.

Mr. LUCAS. I have tried to get these nominations on the Executive Calendar. Obviously they cannot be confirmed until that is done.

Mr. WHERRY. I am satisfied that if the chairman of the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service were present he could give the Senator satisfactory answers respecting these postmasters.

Mr. LUCAS. He cannot give me satisfactory answers respecting the individuals I have mentioned, because there is nothing that can be done about these postmasters except confirm them or turn them down.

Mr. BUCK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield. Mr. BUCK. I cannot answer the Senator respecting the postmasters in question, but I will say there is a meeting of the committee scheduled for tomorrow morning, when nominations for postmasters will be considered, and I hope these nominations may be reported then.

Mr. LUCAS. Recently I called the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSTON], a member of the committee, on the phone and he told me that some 33 nominations for postmasters had been reported favorably by the committee, that there was no objection to them, and since that time nominations from one State after another have been placed on the Executive Calendar, but the Illinois postmasters are not on the calendar, and time is running out in this Congress. Action must be taken quickly if the nominations are to be confirmed before the session is ended.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. There are three nominations of postmasters from Illinois on the calendar.

Mr. LUCAS. Yes; there are three from Illinois. This is somewhat of an anomaly. I went before the committee and appealed to the committee to have the three postmasters from Illinois placed on the calendar, and the committee voted practically unanimously to place them on the calendar while I was there; and, lo and behold, they are now on the Executive Calendar. The reason I appeared was because some slight objection had been raised to these three. Lo and behold, they are on the calendar. But these other postmasters, to whom there is no objection, have not been placed on the calendar.

Mr. WHERRY. Perhaps if the Senator went before the committee again he would succeed in having them placed on the calendar.

Mr. LUCAS. I thought they would be placed on the calendar in view of the favorable report by the Committee on Civil Service. I had every reason to believe they would be on the Executive Calendar as a result of favorable action by that committee. I relied upon my good friend from South Carolina. He told me what had been done. He was very joyful about it. He thought all the postmaster nominations had been reported.

Next is the nomination of Glen W. Seaton, of Glen Carbon. Mr. Seaton is a disabled veteran of World War II. He was first on the eligible register set up by the Civil Service Commission from an examination. He is now serving as acting postmaster and is married.

Next is the nomination of Frank C. Spengler, to be postmaster at Shannon, Ill. Mr. Spengler was No. 1 on the register established by the Civil Service Commission from an open competitve examination. He is a disabled veteran of World War II, and has been serving as acting postmaster at Shannon since December 1946.

The next is the nomination of Mr. Russell E. Snyder, to be postmaster at Hull, Ill. Mr. Snyder was No. 1 on the eligible register established by the Civil Service Commission. He has been acting postmaster at Hull since June 1946. and is a disabled veteran of World War II. He ought to have a little opportunity to get a job as postmaster at Hull, Ill. It is not a very big job, but it is worth while to him.

The next nomination is that of William K. Armstrong, to be postmaster at Chandlerville. Mr. Armstrong is now serving as acting postmaster. He is a veteran of World War II, having enlisted in January 1942. Served overseas for more than 2 years. He was a classifled postal employee who was promoted through noncompetitive examination. Served as clerk in the Chandlerville office from 1941 to 1942, when he enlisted in the Army. Went back to his job in the post office in 1946 when he was discharged. His services have been entirely satisfactory.

This is stack No. 3, consisting of veterans and veterans' widows who were first on the eligible register, or the only eligibles. I do not wish to read all of these. I call attention particularly to Daniel J. Boyd, who is nominated to be postmaster at Blue Island, Ill. Mr. Boyd was the only eligible certified by the Civil Service Commission as the result of an open competitive examination. He is a veteran of World War II and is serving as acting postmaster. His services in this capacity have been highly satisfactory

Most of these are World War II veterans. Two are widows. One of these is the nomination of Harry A. Osman, to be postmaster at Cypress, Ill. Another is the nomination of Fred H. Popp, Jr., to be postmaster at Dundee, Ill.; another, the nomination of Lester A. Binder, to be postmaster at Hinckley. Ill.

Another is the nomination of C. Lincoln Guernsey, to be postmaster at Mechanicsburg, Ill. He is another veteran. These are all veterans.

Mrs. Helen F. Gleich is the widow of a veteran of World War I.

Next is stack No. 4, consisting of veterans who were second or third on the register. I will not take the time of the Senate to read the list.

Mr. WHERRY. Why does not the Senator file them en bloc?

Mr. LUCAS. I wish to file them by Stack No. 5 consists of nonveterans who were classified postal employees promoted to the postmastership.

Stack No. 6 consists of nonveterans who were either first on the eligible register or the only eligibles. There are quite a few of those.

Stack No. 7 consists of veterans who were second or third on the eligible reg-

In conclusion, I hope that my able friend the acting majority leader will try to prevail upon the committee to report these nominations. In all serious-ness, these are some of the most meritorious cases I have ever considered since I have been considering postmasters in all the years I have been in Congress. I sincerely hope that this Congress will not adjourn without the Senate confirming these nominations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolutions to discharge the committee will lie on the table.

THE HOUSING PROGRAM-IMPORT DUTIES ON PLYWOOD

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I wish to make brief comment on two matters which I seek to have inserted in the RECORD.

I have been advised that the so-called housing bill which is under consideration in the House has had added to it today an amendment which seeks to eliminate import duties on plywood.

Mr. President, that amendment would play havoc with the plywood industry in the Pacific Northwest. In my opinion that amendment is just another reason why it would be much better to have no housing bill at all than the monstrosity which apparently is coming out of the House of Representatives.

I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the body of the RECORD at this point as a part of my remarks a statement which I have prepared in regard to the effect of such an amendment on the plywood industry of the Pacific North-

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The Douglas fir plywood industry employs in direct production of plywood approxi-mately 10,000 workmen in the States of Washington, Oregon, and California. There are 35 complete fir plywood plants and 5 green fir veneer plants now in production. There are 7 fir plywood plants under construction which will be in operation by the end of 1948. There are 7 plywood plants projected. All of these plants should be in production in 1949 so that during 1949 there will be a total of 49 plywood plants in operation. It is expected that by the end of 1948 there will be 50 fir plywood plants and by the end of 1949 there will be 60.

In 1947 the fir plywood industry produced at the rate of 29,000,000 square feet a week. The present production is 36,000,000 square feet per week. New plants coming into production within the next 4 months will increase the production to 40,000,000 square feet per week by this fall. New plants coming into production during 1949 will bring in an additional 4,000,000 square feet per week so that production in 1949 will be 44,-000,000 square feet per week, or an increase of 65 percent over 1947.

The Douglas fir plywood industry pays an average wage straight time of $1.62½ an hour. The Canadian plywood industry pays an average wage straight time of $0.92½ an hour. There is approximately the same dif-ferential between the cost of Canadian peeler logs and domestic peeler logs.

Log cost and labor represent 52 percent of the American mill price of softwood plywood. Therefore, assuming that the other costs of the Canadian manufacturers are equal percentagewise to the American man-ufacturers, which is certainly not the case, the Canadian manufacturer by his lower wage and lumber costs can produce plywood for 45 cents on a dollar less than the American producer.

HARDWOOD PLYWOOD

The production of hardwood plywood in the United States is approximate the coop, one square feet surface measure. The coop, one square feet surface measure. The the United States is approximately 1,000,plywood is produced in the Lake and Northeastern States, gum in the Southeastern The principal import from Canada is birch plywood on which there is a 25 per-At the present time there is sufficent duty. cient United States production of hardwood plywood to meet all requirements. Hardwood plywood is not construction material. Canadian birch plywood is presently selling in the United States at less than it costs the United States mills to produce it. The average wage in the United States Plywood Corp.'s plant in Wisconsin is $1.10 an hour straight time, in its Canadian plant at Woodstock, Ontario, it is 83 cents an hour. Birch logs cost $140 in the United States per thousand and in Canada $130 per thousand. Therefore there is an advantage to the Canadian producer of 24 percent in labor costs and 9 percent in log costs or a total in these two items of 33 percent.

TEACHERS' SALARIES

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, the last item on which I want to comment is an editorial published in this morning's Washington Post, entitled "Teachers' I make this comment not only as a Member of the Senate, but as president of the Home and School Association of the Alice Deal School in Washington, D. C. In the capacity of president of that association, I have worked this year with parent groups in this city in regard to the plight in which the school teachers find themselves in the District of Columbia.

I not only heartily endorse every word of the editorial on teachers' pay in this morning's Washington Post, but I wish to say that in my opinion the Congress of the United States should set an example for school districts throughout the Nation in regard to teachers' pay. We are not giving to the teachers in the District of Columbia the economic support which I think is justified by the great trust which they have thrust upon them. namely, the training of future citizens of this country. This is a sad reflection on the Congress of the United States. I do not believe that we should adjourn this session without increasing the pay of the teachers in the District of Columbia a minimum of $500 per teacher. I do not know how the taxpayers' money could be better spent so far as a sound return to the Nation is concerned, than by way of an increase in teachers' pay.

I ask unanimous consent to have the editorial referred to printed in the RECORD at this point as a part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD. as follows:

TEACHERS' PAY

The praise due Representative GEORGE BATES for initiating congressional action toward a pay increase for District teachers must be qualified on account of the niggardliness of the increase which he has suggested and which the House has approved. A raise of $200 for the year—not quite $4 a week—is certainly, as Dr. Regis Boyle put it, "withering, so far as morale is concerned." It would do almost nothing to enable teachers to cope with the increased cost of living, to restore the dignity of their profession, or to arrest the dangerous drift away from the schools into more remunerative callings.

Among the 20 largest cities in the United States, Washington, according to Superintendent of Schools Hobart Corning, ranks fifteenth on the basis of the average salary paid to teachers in its public-school system. The average teacher salary here is $3,398—in a city where, according to the Bureau of Labor Statistics, costs are higher than in any other major city in the country. Washing-tonians will never secure adequate schooling for their children by a pauperization of the teachers in their schools.

The District's teachers deserve at the very least a pay increase equal to that granted Federal workers. If the pending Federal pay legislation is enacted, some of the janitors in school buildings may be getting more pay than the classroom teachers. Parsimony could be given no more uneconomic form than to exclude teachers from equal benefits. We hope that Congress will act, before its adjournment, to give teachers a pay increase commensurate with their desperate need and with the vital importance of the duties they perform.

EXTENSION OF TERMS OF MEMBERS OF ATOMIC ENERGY COMMISSION

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate the unfinished business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which is Senate bill 2589.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 2589) to provide for extension of the terms of office of the present members of the Atomic Energy Commis-

ORDER OF BUSINESS TOMORROW

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Chair state the unanimous-consent agreement relative to the calling of the calendar tomorrow morning?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. When the Senate meets tomorrow it will meet under a unanimous-consent agreement to proceed with the call of the calendar of bills and other measures to which there is no objection, beginning with Calendar No. 1504, where the previous call of the calendar concluded.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. At the conclusion of the call of the calendar tomorrow, will the Senate then proceed immediately to the consideration of Senate bill 2589, providing for extension of the terms of office of the present members of the Atomic Energy Commission?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is the understanding of the Chair.

RECESS

Mr. WHERRY. I move that the Senate take a recess until tomorrow at 11 o'clock a. m.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 11 o'clock and 31 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until tomorrow, Friday, June 18, 1948, at 11 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

THURSDAY, JUNE 17, 1948

The House met at 10 o'clock a. m. Rev. Francis Finnegan, O. P., St. Dominic's Catholic Church, Washington, D. C., offered the following prayer:

Most just and merciful God, look down with favor upon these Thy lawmakers. Enlighten their minds and strengthen their wills, that they may, in all times and places, do good and avoid evil, that they may always be in conformity with Thine adorable will. Through Christ our Lord Amen

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Frazier, its legislative clerk, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the amendments of the House to bills of the Senate of the following titles:

S. 158. An act for the relief of certain Basque aliens;

S. 765. An act for the relief of Santiago Solabarrieta: and

S. 2225. An act to transfer administration of the Federal Credit Union Act to the Federal Security Agency.

The message also announced that the President pro tempore has appointed Mr. LANGER and Mr. McKellar members of the joint select committee on the part of the Senate, as provided for in the act of August 5, 1939, entitled "An act to provide for the disposition of certain records of the United States Government," for the disposition of executive papers in the following departments and agencies:

Department of Agriculture. Department of Commerce. Department of Justice.

Department of the Treasury.

National Archives.

Federal Security Agency.

Interstate Commerce Commission.

Veterans' Administration.

The message also announced that the Senate disagrees to the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 2821) entitled "An act to provide increases of compensation for certain veterans with serviceconnected disabilities who have dependents," requests a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. MILLIKIN, Mr. TAFT, Mr. BUTLER, Mr. BARKLEY, and Mr. CONNALLY to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate disagrees to the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 2825) entitled "An act to increase the compensation payable to the surviving children of certain deceased veterans whose death was wartime service-connected," requests a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. MILLIKIN, Mr. TAFT, Mr. BUTLER, Mr. BARKLEY, and Mr. CONNALLY to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The Chair wishes to announce that he will receive requests for extension of remarks only. 1-minute speeches.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. McCORMACK asked and was granted permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an editorial.

Mr. ELLIS asked and was granted permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD in two instances and include newspaper items.

Mr. BENNETT of Missouri asked and was granted permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD in three instances.

SPECIAL ORDER GRANTED

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may address the House today for 10 minutes, after any other special orders which may have been entered.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

CALL OF THE HOUSE

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER. Obviously a quorum is not present.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

AMENDING THE TRANSPORTATION ACT

The SPEAKER. The unfinished business is the consideration of the veto message on the bill S. 110.

The question is, Will the House on reconsideration agree to pass the bill, the objections of the President to the contrary notwithstanding?

The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr.

WOLVERTON] is recognized.

Mr. WOLVERTON. Mr. Speaker, this matter has been debated on several occasions in the House. It is an issue with which everyone is familiar. I do not think any good purpose would be served by having extended debate on the matter.

Preliminary to that, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have permission to extend their remarks in the RECORD at this point.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object—
The SPEAKER. The Chair will put that request later.

Mr. VORYS. Mr. Speaker, I object. I demand the regular order.

Mr. WOLVERTON. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the consent request.

MAKING IN ORDER CERTAIN MOTIONS

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that during the remainder of this week it shall be in order for the Speaker at any time to entertain motions to suspend the rules, notwithstanding the provisions of clause 1, rule XXVII; that it shall also be in order at any time during the balance of this week for the majority leader or the chairman of the Committee on Rules to move that the House take a recess; and that it shall also be in order at any time during the balance of this week to consider reports from the Committee on Rules as provided in clause (2) (b), rule XI, except that the provision requiring a two-thirds vote to consider said reports is hereby suspended during the balance of the week.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HALLECK]?

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, the gentleman from Indiana was good enough this morning to state to me generally, and I think rather fully, the bills that the Speaker would in all probability recognize for suspension. They are all agreeable to me except one. Since the action of the Committee on Banking and Currency this morning, and the high-handed manner in which that committee acted in not allowing a Member of the minority, as I understand, to even make a motion or say anything, I could not agree to this request, if it involves a bill of the far-reaching significance as the so-called housing bill.

If that is to come in the list I shall be constrained to object, and if I did not there would be another who would.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, there is, of course, a resolution, as the gentleman knows, which can be called up; and I propose to call it up if this request is objected to. If that course becomes necessary, then of necessity we will say something about the adoption of the resolution; but I would like to suggest to the gentleman from Texas that in 1938 when he was then the majority leader, occupying the position I now hold, an identical resolution was presented. The question arose as to what legislation might be brought out. At that time the so-called reorganization bill was under consideration and there was a question as to whether or not that kind of measure should be considered under suspension. In response to a request from the then minority leader, the now eminent Speaker, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Martin], as to what the program might be, the gentleman from Texas, being then the majority leader, replied:

I am not ready to answer right now as to the full program for the remainder of the session, I may say very candidly to the gen-

Mr. RAYBURN. That was a very frank statement, the kind the gentleman from Texas always makes, and I am certain that if I had named in the list as highly controversial a matter as the socalled housing bill, that the then minority leader, now Speaker, would have pursued the course I am pursuing at this time.

Mr. HALLECK. I do not know about that, but I am sure the gentleman from Texas knows that there are outstanding now 10 to 12 rules, most of them on very important questions that we are trying to clear by Saturday night. Obviously, resort to suspension must be had.

Mr. RAYBURN. I think the gentleman is correct about that, and I wish to say to him also that it is my desire very much for a sine die adjournment on Saturday or earlier because I always go on the theory that it is a good thing for the country to adjourn a Republican Congress at any time.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, object.

SUSPENSIONS AND RECESSES MADE IN ORDER FOR WEEK

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I call up House Resolution 685 making in order motions to suspend the rules, motions for a recess, and the consideration of reports from the Committee on Rules, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That during the remainder of this week it shall be in order for the Speaker at any time to entertain motions to suspend the rules, notwithstanding the provisions of clause 1, rule XXVII; it shall also be in order at any time during the balance of this week for the majority leader or the chairman of the Committee on Rules to move that the House take a recess, and said motion is hereby made of the highest privi-lege; and it shall also be in order at any time during the balance of this week to consider reports from the Committee on Rules as provided in clause (2) (b), rule XI, except that the provision requiring a two-thirds vote to consider said reports is hereby suspended during the balance of this week

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 seconds to the gentleman from New York to submit a request.

FOREIGN AID APPROPRIATION BILL SENT TO CONFERENCE

TABER. Mr. Speaker, I ask Mr. unanimous consent that the conferees on the bill (H. R. 6801) making appropriations for foreign aid for the period beginning April 3, 1948, and ending June 30, 1949, and for other purposes, may have until midnight tonight to file a conference report.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield to the gentleman from Mississippi for a parliamentary inquiry? Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. I yield.

Mr. RANKIN. Does it require a twothirds vote to pass this resolution?
The SPEAKER. No; a majority vote is all that is required.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I vield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. JENSEN].

Mr. JENSEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have until midnight tonight to file a conference report and statement on the bill H. R. 6705, the Department of the Interior appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

There was no objection. Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Dondero].

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the conferees on the bills H. R. 5888 and S. 418 may have until midnight tonight to file conference reports.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HALLECK].

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, I had hoped that this matter might have been disposed of by unanimous consent. However, I cannot quarrel with the attitude of the gentleman from Texas in his objection to the unanimous-consent request. Since that objection has been made, there is no alternative except to proceed with debate on this resolution.

The gentleman from Texas spoke of one piece of legislation. I may suggest to the House that there are a number of rules pending from the Rules Committee dealing with matters of considerable importance, such as the fuel-policy matter from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, a rule to amend the rules of the House in regard to striking out remarks from the RECORD, the Virgin Islands Corporation bill, revision of the Internal Revenue Code, the matter relating to motor carriers' claims, the matter of the extension of the terms of the Atomic Energy Commission, the bill pertaining to extension of the Commodity Credit Corporation, the matter of pay raise for postal employees and postage rate increases, and a bill to increase Federal salaries generally, and the air parcel-post bill.

There are also many other matters of considerable consequence on which rules have not been granted that many Members have urged upon me as important that action be taken on them as expeditiously as possible.

There are some bills from the Veterans' Affairs Committee which fall in that category, and there are some bills from the Foreign Affairs Committee that also come within that category. There are a number of bills from the Armed Services Committee, one of them having to do with the allowance and longevity pay for service in the academies, and another having to do with a revolving fund for the purchase of cotton and wool fibers for export to Japan, about which many Members have spoken to me.

Mr. SHORT. I hope the distinguished leader will not overlook the Russell bill that would give us some lead, zinc, and manganese. That is most essential.

Mr. HALLECK. That is another matter in which many Members are inter-

Mr. Speaker, I think we all understand that every effort is being made to adjourn the Congress by Saturday night or earlier. I cannot quite agree with the reasons expressed by the gentleman from Texas for that adjournment, because this has been a very, very good Congress. When we get through with the program, as we expect to complete it this week, I am sure the people generally throughout the country will applaud us for what we have accomplished.

Under the rules of the House, if an adjournment resolution were passed now providing for adjournment on Saturday, suspensions would be in order for the rest of the week. I do not know how many of these matters may be called under rules or may be called under suspension of the rules. But, as to that, certainly at the moment no one could expect me to make a definite determination. The whole effort here is to expedite the business of the House on a fair basis.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HALLECK. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. RANKIN. As I understand, the rule only provides for this week.

Mr. HALLECK. That is right. Mr. RANKIN. If Congress should go over another week, then it would not apply to next week.

Mr. HALLECK. That is right. I might say to the gentleman from Mississippi that that is a restriction that has not heretofore been found in similar resolutions that you people on that side of the aisle used when you were in the majority and had the primary responsibility for the program.

I think probably the best argument that could be made for this resolution was made in 1938 when a similar resolution was offered and presented by the then chairman of the Committee on Rules, the gentleman from New York, Mr. O'Connor. In that presentation, Mr. O'Connor said:

Mr. Speaker, this is the usual resolution brought in toward the close of a session of

Its purpose is to expedite the business of the House. It provides that suspensions shall be in order on any day instead of on the first and third Mondays or during the last 6 days of the session. It has been impossible for some years to fix those last 6 days of a session, because the adjournment resolution usually comes in an hour or two before the actual adjournment.

The resolution also provides for recesses of the House rather than adjournment. chief purpose this serves is to save, in the morning, the reading of a long Journal of the previous day's proceedings. Unfortunately, it also dispenses with the morning prayer.

The third purpose the resolution serves is to permit rules to be brought up on the same day they are reported rather than lying over

These provisions are all directed toward expediting the business of the Congress so we may reach that greatest of national holidays, the day Congress adjourns.

The present Speaker of the House was the minority leader, and he was trying to be fair about it, as we always were in those days and as you gentlemen are now. The gentleman from Massachusetts IMr. MARTIN] said:

This resolution is generally reported when we are about to adjourn. The House, I am sure, would like to have some assurance upon the point before we grant this additional power to the Speaker and to the leadership. Can the gentleman from New York tell us whether we are going to adjourn this week, or next week, a month from now, or 2 months from now?

In substance the answer of the gentleman from New York, Mr. O'Connor, was that he could not tell them very much about it.

Then the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN] raised the question as to whether or not they might be given a little information as to what major legislation was to be considered before adjournment, and the answer of the gentleman from New York was:

I think the gentleman knows that, if he reads the daily press.

I have endeavored to be a little more helpful than that. Yesterday and today I outlined a number of possible suspensions that might be called. Of course, I do not know exactly why the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN], being a newspaper man himself, said this, but he said:

We do not believe all we read in the newspapers.

Then I think the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCormack] got into the discussion, too. But the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Mar-TIN1 yielded himself 5 minutes, and he said this:

Mr. Speaker, I regret very much the gentleman from New York does not seem to have very much information as to the future legislative situation. I had hoped we might get some information, because we ought to have it before adopting this important resolution. I am going to pause to see if the majority leader might not want to take the House into his confidence as to what we might expect.

The gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAY-BURN] then replied:

I will after tomorrow.

Then the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN] said:

Why not now?

And the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN] said:

I am not ready to answer right now as to full program during the remainder of the session, I may say very candidly to the gentleman.

Of course, that was a candid statement. I think that could not be misunderstood.

Then the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Martin], recognizing the position in which he found himself, said:

I am sorry Members of the House cannot get information before we read it in the newspapers and before passing a resolution which is going to give tremendous power to the House administration; but, of course, you on that side have merely a 4-to-1 majority and can do what you wish. In all fairness, though, the House should have this information before a resolution of this sort is called Whereupon, after a rather perfunctory debate, the question was put, and on a division, which did not even go to a roll call, the resolution was adopted.

All I am pointing out is that there is nothing new in this procedure. It is well established. By this resolution we seek only to expedite the consideration of business before us. There are a number of measures here in which every Member has a great interest. The whole country has an interest in them. We can move forward to the accomplishment of the program if we follow the practice that has heretofore been followed and adopt this resolution.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCormack].

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, the real issue here is the housing bill. there be no deception about that fact. The real issue involved in the consideration of this resolution today is whether or not Congress is going to pass the housing bill, because if this resolution is adopted there will be no housing legislation, and I make that prediction. If the House leadership wanted to and if they stated they would do so, they could bring up the bill reported out of the committee, which is the Taft-Ellender-Wagner bill, under a suspension. They could have done that last Monday, the last suspension day, and they could do it now if they wanted to. But we know that this resolution is designed to bring up the meaningless Wolcott bill, the purpose of which is to prevent the passage of decent housing legislation by Congress before adjournment. The intention is to pass the bill under suspension, if they can, and send it over to the other House, with that bill over there and with the Senate bill over here. I predict that they will not even move or take steps to strike out all after the enacting clause of the Senate bill and insert this bill, and then send it to conference.

The resolution under consideration today is entirely different from the resolutions in the past. We never were in this predicament where there were so many big or major measures pending. The ordinary resolution permitting the Speaker to recognize for suspensions is entirely different from the present situation. There are from 8 to 12 major pieces of legislation now pending, according to the statement of the majority leader. The intention is to bring them up under suspension of the rules, denying the oppor-tunity of amendment in any one of those cases of major legislation, and taking away from the minority even its inherent right to a motion to recommit.

The gentleman from Indiana proceeded upon the theory that what was done in 1938 was wrong. Certainly our beloved Speaker now at that time as minority leader took the position that it was wrong. Because it was wrong then it is claimed that it is all right for the Republican leadership to do something wrong now. I never knew that two wrongs made one right, assuming that the contention of the gentleman from Indiana that it was wrong in 1938 is correct. But the situation in 1938 was entirely different from what it is today. There were not a dozen pieces of major legislation waiting to be acted upon under suspension of the rules.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for an observation?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield.

Mr. REED of New York. Of course we have had the resistance of the Executive, and we have had all of these vetoes which have delayed the work of the Congress. The legislation that this Congress has passed has been so meritorious that you voted to override the veto of a President who is the leader of your own political party.

Mr. McCORMACK. If you had not put up bum legislation to the President, you would not have had these vetoes.

Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Indiana says that this is a very good Congress. That is a matter of judgment. I respect my friend's right to think so. We have a perfect right to our own opinion. There has been a 40-percent increase in the cost of living to the people of America during the past 2 years, and nothing has been done by the Congress and nothing is going to be done. Still he says that it is a very good Congress. There are lobbies of all kinds operating here, not only through the corridors, but actually in committee rooms. A record that supports everything that President Truman has been saying has been made, not only during the Congress, but during the present week by the Republican Party in control of this body. Only yesterday a very distinguished Republican outside of this body criticized the very action that was taken on the housing bill. What is the housing situation? has happened? The other body passed a bill. It went to the Committee on Banking and Currency of the House. Against the efforts of the Republican leadership, a bill was reported out substantially the same as the bill passed by the other body. Then it went to the Committee on Rules. We know what happened. It comes back this morning after being introduced yesterday in committee stripped of any important features. They met, and at 2 minutes past 10 the bill was reported out. The chairman said, "Put down on the record that it was at 9:59." Not a Democrat was permitted to offer a motion to amend the bill. That is what happened only this morning. This resolution is designed primarily to consider the housing bill under suspension of the rules so that amendments will not be permitted and a motion to recommit cannot be made.

Mr. MONRONEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield.

Mr. MONRONEY. Will this procedure under suspension of the rules also make in order matters which would normally be subject to the jurisdiction of the Committee on Ways and Means-in other words, you have no way of challenging a point of order against the housing bill which incorporates a great tax advantage for the rich?

Mr. McCORMACK. That is absolutely correct. Nothing can be done under the procedure on suspension of the rules. Yet the gentleman from Indiana says that this is a very, very good Congress.

President Truman had a little something to say about that the other day at Los Angeles; and he made a fair statement. I quote:

I made this trip to tell you the facts. am wrong, you have a chance to attend to me later on. If I am not wrong, you ought to attend to somebody else.

That is fair. That "somebody else" is the Republican Party.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield.

Mr. HALLECK. Well, he challenged the passage of the so-called Taft-Hartley labor bill, for which 108 Democrats voted and against which 67 Democrats voted. I wonder if he was slapping some of the Members on your side of the aisle.

Mr. McCORMACK. So the gentleman is relying on that as justification for the Republican vote, is he? Well, the gentleman cannot get away with that.

How many Republicans voted for the Taft-Hartley bill? Mr. HALLECK.

All but 11.

Mr. McCORMACK. Yes. All but 11. So the gentleman proceeds upon the theory that because a number of Democrats voted for it he is going to absolve the Republicans from their wrongdoing in voting for legislation that is repressive of and punitive to labor.

Now, we have the issue presented here, the issue that the people of the country will know that dictatorial exercise of the rules is being made in order to prevent Members of Congress from having an opportunity to pass upon one of the most important bills that has come before any Congress, and to pass upon it under the rules of the House. If you brought in a closed rule, giving us a motion to recommit, at least you would be preserving the right of the minority to make its record. That is the purpose of a motion to recommit, to enable the minority to make its record before the country, under its right to make a motion to recommit.

So this resolution in relation to the housing bill presents to the people of the country, more pointedly than anything could do, the situation that exists and that this Republican-controlled Congress has been nothing but an against-the-people Congress.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Mc-CORMACK] has expired.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Georgia

[Mr. Cox].

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I am unwilling to make a matter of party politics out of this resolution.

On yesterday, the resolution came before the Rules Committee on application for a rule and the committee very promptly granted it. It did so because it recognized that the resolution would expedite the consideration of pending mat-There is nothing new in it. It is ters. what has been done in Congresses heretofore.

The point has been made that the purpose of the resolution is to avoid a record vote on the so-called Taft-Ellender-Wagner bill. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCormack] who just yielded the floor, probably expresses the views of most Members on this side of the aisle but not for all. That entire question was submitted to the Rules Committee on yesterday and the day before and it was made perfectly clear and perfectly plain that the adoption of that bill would commit this country to socialized housing forevermore.

The Wolcott bill, which has been referred to and which it is said will be called up in the event the pending resolution is adopted, is the old bill stripped of the public-housing features in the original Taft bill and I am assured that it does more for veterans than the Taft-Ellender-Wagner bill, which puts emphasis on public housing rather than housing for veterans.

As far as I am concerned, my sense of obligation to myself and to my country compels me to make clear the position that I take on that proposed legislation. I am opposed to committing this country to socialized housing, and that is what you do if you take that bill.

Let me make this statement: If the pending resolution is voted down, the advocates of the Wolcott bill, the new bill to which reference was made, can still bring that question before the House, because they can go to the Rules Committee now and get a rule and the bill could be called up tomorrow under the

It is true that with a procedure of that kind a record might not be obtained as to how Members of this House stand on the question of socialized housing, but so far I have no hesitation in making clear my position and I hope all Members on this side who have appealed to me as a member of the Rules Committe to hold that bill in the committee would feel the same way about it, and if presented with the issue they will be courageous enough to declare their position on this question.

Mr. COMBS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COX. I yield. Mr. COMBS. Is it not also that stricken out of that bill is the rediscount feature on GI loans and also aid for the building of farm homes?

Mr. COX. I just have this to say on the question of housing: I am interested in providing housing for veterans. There is pending in the House the Rogers bill. the veterans' homestead bill, which bill would be acceptable to me and which I would like to see adopted. I will go as far as any others in doing something for the veterans. They have an especial claim upon the country to the satisfying of which we should give our attention. Certainly providing housing for them, to which nobody objects, should not be conditioned upon doing something that is opposed by a majority of the membership of this House at the same time. The two questions should be divided.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Georgia has expired.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. Boggs].

Mr. BOGGS of Louisiana. Mr. Speak-I dislike very sincerely to agree with my good friend and colleague the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Cox], who has just discussed in some detail the socalled Taft-Ellender-Wagner bill. That bill has been the subject of discussion in the press, on the radio, and elsewhere for many years, and I think the House of Representatives should know just exactly what is transpiring in the Committee on Banking and Currency, insofar as any effort is being made in that committee to solve the most pressing social problem which is facing this Nation today from the standpoint of the veterans and from the standpoint of our civilian population. The House shall know how inadequately we have faced that issue.

The bill that was reported out by the House committee this morning after the House was in session strips the proposed legislation not only of public housing but strips it of every provision for doing a single solitary thing about the slums in the cities. It strips the bill of every provision to aid the veterans, to aid the farmer, and to aid the low-income groups. We had a veterans' homestead provision incorporating the principles of the Veterans' Homestead Act written into this legislation. That is stricken.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOGGS of Louisiana. I am sorry. have but a few minutes.

Not even sections dealing with certain matters that should be noncontroversial such as housing research are left in the bill. Can anyone tell me why any reasonable man who knows that there are 3,000,000 veterans living doubled upthat there are 2,000,000 others living in single rooms and rooming housesshould object to a research program on the technique of housing construction so that we can improve our methods?

Mr. COLE of Kansas. Mr. Speaker.

will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOGGS of Louisiana. I refuse to vield.

It has been argued that this is socialism. Mr. Speaker, I say that if this is socialism, then the Socialists have made some of the most amazing converts of any party in the history of this Nation. Let me name some of them: Senator Taft, of Ohio; Senator Vandenberg, of Michigan; Governor Dewey, of New York; Governor Warren, of California. Are they Socialists? They favor the T-E-W bill. They are the principal Republican candidates for President.

Let me name a few others: The American Bar Association. Is that a Socialist organization? The organs that speak for the Protestant Churches in America, all divisions of the Protestant Church. Are the Protestant Churches embracing secialism? The organs which speak for the Catholic Church in America. Is the Catholic Church embracing socialism? The governors of this country almost unanimously have endorsed the general housing bill, and practically every mayor of every major city in the United States has endorsed it. So I say that if that be socialism, make the best of it. Of course it is not socialism. It is an honest attempt to solve a pressing problem.

And I may add that every major veterans' organization in America are proponents of the legislation: The AMVETS. the Disabled American Veterans, the Veterans of Foreign Wars, the American Legion, and the other agencies who speak for the men who fought to preserve this country have not, I am sure, adopted socialism, but they are for the T-E-W bill. And why are they for it? Because 15,000,000 young Americans went out to make it possible for you to sit here and debate in the American democratic tradition today.

Mr. DINGELL. One hundred and forty-nine Members signed a petition.

Mr. BOGGS of Louisiana. One-hundred-forty-some-odd Members of this Congress have signed a discharge petition for this legislation. Have they embraced socialism? Mr. Speaker, I say to you with the greatest feeling of sincerity with which I have ever spoken on the floor of this House, that there has never been a measure that has more bipartisan support than the Taft-Ellender-Wagner

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Louisiana has expired.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman three additional minutes.

Mr. BOGGS of Louisiana. Mr. Speaker, why does this legislation have this universal support? Because all over America, in the cities and in the rural areas, people who think about housing know that the major problem facing any family, aside from food and clothing, is a place in which to live. I say to you that the sorriest thing this Eightieth Congress is doing is playing politics with the veterans, with the people who are living in the slums of this country, sending out the message all over America that as this Congress closes its doors on Saturday night, while we have made a show, while we have tried to convince someone we have done something, and while we have brought up the bugaboo and the red herring of socialism, we have done nothing to solve the major social and economic problem facing this Nation.

I venture to say it will be a campaign issue and I hope it will be and I for one as a Democrat shall attempt to make it everywhere on every stump because it is the most important issue facing America. You can yell socialism from now until the time the sun sets next week but it will not alter one iota the fact that this Congress is doing nothing for housing except to satisfy the most greedy, the most selfish, lobby that we have ever seen operating in this body.

Mr. O'TOOLE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOGGS of Louisiana. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. O'TOOLE. Does not the gentleman believe the shortage of housing has done more to increase the rate of divorce and juvenile delinquency, and is today the greatest moral issue in this country?

Mr. BOGGS of Louisiana. I think the fact that all the religious institutions and organizations in America have endorsed this bill is evidence enough that slums and the housing shortage have contributed to the divorce rate, to juvenile delinquency and crime, and to the other evils our body politic is suffering from.

I wish there were some way we could bring before this House the measure the committee voted out 14 to 13, with every Democrat voting for it, and when you talk about socialism that means every Democrat and three members of the Republican Party have voted for socialism. I shall, therefore, vote against the pending resolution.

In conclusion I include an editorial from the New York Times of this morning:

HOUSING: A PARTY TEST

There is no more desperate and basic need in this country than that for housing. This need has been estimated by backers of the Taft-Ellender-Wagner housing bill, which passed the Senate by voice vote on April 22, at 1,500,000 dwelling units a year for the next 10 years. We owe these homes particularly to our veterans and to young people just coming of marriageable age. If we believe in the American home we have to believe in the living space that makes it possible.

The T-E-W bill tackled this problem from all sides, putting its major emphasis on encouragement to private industry, with lowinterest loans and low-cost insurance. But Senator TAFT and his colleagues, who are certainly no Socialists, included a provision for the construction, during the next 5 years, of 500,000 low-rent public housing units. The whole cost of the program to the Federal taxpayer would be about $150,000,000 a year. If we don't owe our veterans and other young people this much help, what do our fine words about youth mean?

In the lower House it has begun to seem that they do not mean much to some Members. By a parliamentary technicality, the main T-E-W provisions were tacked to a bill by Representative Wolcott, of Michigan, who is no friend of public housing. Over Mr. Wolcott's stormy protests the Committee on Banking and Currency, of which he is chairman, reported the amended bill out by a vote of 14 to 13 a week ago. It then went to that cemetery of so many good bills, the Rules Committee.

Yesterday that committee, with its Republican chairman and majority, voted to table by 6 to 2. Thus, by its power to suppress the measure, it is in effect legislating, for the Banking Committee is now compelled to amend, wreck, or forget the housing bill. This abuse of power does not seem to us fair to our young married people or to the democratic system. We believe it is time the House Republican leaders, who soon will be asking for votes, saw the light. The Republicans will hardly dare go before the country without at least a pretense of housing legislation; many of them, like Senator Taft and the present Senate majority, are willing to do all they can to meet the crisis.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Louisiana has again expired.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Comes].

(Mr. COMBS asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. COMBS. Mr. Speaker and fellow Members, I want to preface what I am going to say by saying that I would not intentionally injure the personal feelings of any Member of this House. I prize the friendships that I have on the other side of the aisle, as well as on this side, and appreciate the fine character of the men and women who compose the memberchip of this House. It seems to me that in recent days we have gotten into a sort of hysteria in which we forget some fundamentals. In our haste to adjourn we have invoked procedures and permitted ourselves to submit to procedures that could not be justified in any representative legislative body. It has been suggested that the limitation of time makes it necessary to consider bills under suspension of the rules, which, of course, will allow only 40 minutes of debate at most and permit of no amendments whatever. There is no reasonable excuse for this situation. In the first place, we have been in session for many months, during which time full consideration could have been given to such important legislation as housing, Federal employees' pay legislation, selective service, long-range farm legislation, and many others. In the second place, more than 6 months remain of the Eightieth Congress. Like the balance of you, I would like to go home-I have been there only once, and that for a period of 4 or 5 days, since January. But our duty is to consider and pass needed legislation and we should do that even though it requires us to remain here all summer and all the fall.

Now, with regard to the alleged housing bill reported out by the majority of the Committee on Banking and Currency this morning in lieu of the bill passed out by the same committee previously, but upon which the Rules Committee refused a rule. Let me say, in all kindness with reference to this new bill, that to call it a housing bill is a misnomer. It is nothing of the kind. The bill for which it is to be offered as a substitute contains provisions providing for the building of Federal housing, for slum clearance in our great cities and centers of congested population. That provision has been stricken out. It would not have meant so much down where I live in the wide open spaces but it would have meant a lot to the people of our great cities where vast areas of slums exist and to the people of low income who are forced to live two, three, and four families in miserable shacks. Many of those who live in them are exservicemen, their wives and children, who have no other place to go. new bill condemns them to remain where they are. Oh yes, it holds out an offer of housing for them, but how? Free enterprise will come in in the form of some fellow or a syndicate with plenty of cash and build tenement houses. All semblance of rent controls will shortly expire. And for a period of 5 years, under the provisions of this bill, the owner of such tenements not only will be permitted to charge all the traffic will bear but it actually gives a tax rebate of 10 percent per year, over and above the tax bill already passed, on the profits derived. Yes, they will build their big housing projects which the ex-servicemen and others must occupy in this time of housing shortage, and then get a tax rebate over a period of 5 years in order that they may put more of the income extracted from the misery of these people into their pockets.

In the bill for which this was substituted are provisions to give the farm people of our country the benefit of FHA loans to build homes and improve their That is stricken out by this bill. The Rules Committee refused to grant a rule because it is said such provisions are socialistic. Yet the bill merely would have extended to 7,000,000 farm people the same privileges of Government loans in building homes that city dwellers have enjoyed under FHA for 14 or 15 years. Incidentally, the House bill omitted, and I think properly, the provision for a grant of funds to certain persons of low income and merely extended loan privileges to farm people. The bill we are to consider under suspension of the rules denies the rural people of America these privileges.

Talk about farm people being socialistic. I learned as a boy on the farm and as county agricultural agent in the years gone by that farmers are the most independent-minded and individualistic of any group. The very fact that they are self-employed and control their own farm operations, live at home and board at the same place, is conducive to the spirit of liberty and independence. The simple truth is that the farmers of America constitute one of the greatest bulwarks of free, independent Americanism in this country today. Yet you would brand them as socialist-minded because they want the provisions of the bill that have been scuttled. And by this bill you will refuse them a dime of help, in the form of a loan, to improve their own living conditions.

But the new bill not only does thatit also strikes out those provisions of the first bill which gave to the GI's the benefit of a secondary market through RFC for GI loans. Without such provision of a secondary market the farm GI's can get no benefit from the loan provisions of the GI bill. Why, the farm boys, ex-servicemen, who live in the region I represent have not been able to borrow a dime under the provisions of the GI bill to purchase land, build a home, or improve a farm. It was intended when the GI bill was passed that all ex-servicemen would share equally the benefits, but such has not been the case. Some of us have made repeated efforts in this House during the present Congress to have the rediscount provision for farm GI's restored. During consideration of an amendment, which I offered a few weeks ago to the RFC extension bill, which would have restored the rediscount privileges it was promised by the chairman of the committee in opposing my amendment that this would be taken care of in the bill which has now been scuttled. omitted completely from the new bill and a phony provision inserted which provides only for certain secondary mortgage privileges which, in fact, mean nothing in actual practice.

Do you want to support such a bill? Listen. I could not support a bill which does such rank injustice to people who are forced to live in slums, to the farm people, and to the ex-servicemen of our Nation.

But in addition to that, I will not support it because of the means that have been used to scuttle a real housing bill and bring this thing before us as a substitute. I may say in this connection that the way the housing bill has been scuttled is but the climax of a series of behind-the-scenes maneuvers by which one important committee after another of the House has been completely ignored by the refusing of rules on important bills or bypassed through the usurpation of their prerogatives by the Appropriations Committee. In some instances, as in the case of the housing bill, some bills meeting the wishes of the controlling group have been forced out of committee under what amounted to an ultimatum that it was this or noth-The other day when an article appeared in the newspapers indicating that three Members of the majority party had had the courage to defy the ultimatum and vote their convictions I think it sent a thrill throughout America. It was a sort of reassurance to millions of our people that the Congress, and particularly the House of Representatives, would reassert the independence of its Members and their right to consider, debate, and pass upon legislation vital to our people. What a shock those same people must have gotten this morning.

Let me tell you there is something more at stake here today than a housing bill. The faith and confidence of the American people in the ability and courage of their Representatives in this House is at stake. I have sat here many times while some excited Member ex-pressed fear that some "ism" would take over this country and change the form of our Government and thus destroy our freedom. I reflected then that our real security rests upon the solid foundation of the common sense and patriotism of the American people and their attachment to the Constitution and the form of government under which we live. However, our liberties will be in danger when, and only when, our people lose their faith in the institutions of government. It will be only when they lose faith in their elected Representatives and in the system of representative government, our ability and willingness in the Congress to face forthrightly and to solve the great problems of government that seriously affect them.

They have not lost such faith. They still have the ballot and the opportunity to choose Representatives who will face issues with courage.

I would vote against this rule and against the bill it is intended to force through this House if for no other reason than to express my protest against a system and a procedure that will deny to 435 Members of this House the right to consider, deliberate, and debate so important a measure.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN].

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I deeply regretted having to object to the request of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Halleck]. My objection could have been removed by his just saying one word, and that was "housing."

I have been here a good while, and I have seen cooperation by the minority with the majority and I have seen it when it was otherwise. If the gentleman from Indiana does not think I have cooperated with the majority pretty well, I might some of these days give him a real demonstration of how to lock the wheels of progress in the House of Representatives. I can do it for 3 hours any day that I choose, and that is at the beginning of the session.

I do not think there has been a time when we have ever passed a rule like this or gotten unanimous consent that the Speaker might recognize to suspend, when anybody raised the question of a bill of as major importance as the housing bill. If the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Allen] will say to me now, or the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Halleck] will say to me now that they will not move to suspend the rules on the housing bill but will bring in a rule, closed or otherwise, even giving us the paltry privilege of offering one motion to recommit, there will be no vote against this resolution on my side of the House.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. I will say the housing bill is not before the Committee on Rules.

Mr. McCORMACK. That does not

Mr. RAYBURN. It could get there pretty fast, and the gentleman knows it. But I do think we are stretching the thing a long way when we are willing to agree that other bills of importance, but not controversial, that would take a great deal of time, can come up under suspension of the rules. I do think you are denying to the American people through their Representatives the right to pass the housing bill that will get houses built.

As to this talk about its being socialistic, where is Clarence Brown, Mr. Taft's manager. Mr. Taft happened to father a bill known as the Taft-Ellender-Wagner bill. It is my understanding that my good friend from Michigan [Mr. Wolcott] yesterday before the Committee on Rules for the second time denounced, the Taft-Ellender-Wagner bill as socialistic. I really believe that is the first time I ever heard that great conservative Senator accused of fathering socialistic legislation.

You are going to do this, and in doing it you will in all probability adjourn this Congress without passing any housing bill at all. If you as a party can take that, we will and can make it an issue between now and November.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, having deprived myself of time by mistake, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the Record.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, it is almost unbelievable to what extent the Republicans will go to defeat construction of housing and price control, enlarged social security, Federal aid to education. and other legislation which they solemnly promised in the 1946 campaign would be enacted into law. The resolution before us to provide a rule for a so-called housing bill is an illustration of the outrageous collusion on the part of the Republican leadership and its betrayal of promises to enact legislation to provide low-cost homes and homes at reasonable rentals to the American war veterans and to citizens of low and moderate income.

It is deplorable that the avaricious combination of contractors, real-estate operators. and banking-investment brokers, operating through one of the shrewdest and most heavily financed lobbies ever to infest this Capitol, should control the action of the Republican majority of this Congress. This lobby, with the help of the National Association of Manufacturers, has expended, as reported, over $5,000,000 in its campaign to defeat a real housing bill, a bill which has been endorsed by every church and farm organization, by the American Legion, and all other veterans' organizations. This resolution makes it possible to bring in a fraudulent housing bill which is not in the interest, or for the benefit, of millions of home-seeking veterans and other citizens.

The rule was not even considered or acted upon under the regular procedure and in a meeting of the Committee on Rules. I charge a most outrageous scheme and collusive action has made it possible to consider the rule and makeshift housing bill. On a few minutes' notice at a night session of the House the committee reported the worst gag rule in the history of the Congress. The rule permitted the bill to be considered under a so-called suspension of the rules that provides only 20 minutes to each side to discuss the bill and no amendments may be offered. It is unthinkable that the Republican leadership should have invoked this drastic procedure to consider subject matter of legislation of such vital importance, which has been batted around and upon which the Committee on Banking and Currency has procrastinated and withheld action for nearly 2 years. It is one of the most shameful legislative actions that has ever been perpetrated, with a total disregard of the rights of the membership, in my many years of service in the House.

Mr. Speaker, it will be interesting for the country to know that more than 2 years ago the Joint Housing Committee of the Congress conducted hearings in all the large cities throughout the United States; spent $100,000 in its investigations; obtained testimony from 32 governors, from nearly all the mayors of the large cities, and from hundreds of representatives of civic, religious, educational, veterans', labor, welfare, and other organizations, including local housing authorities, in every section of the country. With this mass of testimony, covering every phase of the existing shortages and need of housing in all sections of the United States, the joint committee, after months of deliberate and careful consideration, recommended the passage of the generally known Taft-Ellender-Wagner housing bill. Although the Senate passed this bill in 1946 and again in 1947, this reactionary House kept the bill in the House Banking and Currency Committee until a few days ago. During the nearly 2 years that the Republican majority of that committee kept the bill bottled up, the Democratic members made many efforts to have the bill reported, but it was not until a few days ago, as I have stated, that they succeeded. This was only possible by unanimous vote of all the Democrats and two Republican members of the committee who, under terrific pressure from constituents at home, finally voted with the Democrats. By a vote of 14 to 13 the chairman of the committee was directed to request the Committee on Rules to grant a rule for consideration of the bill. The chairman, contrary to the instructions of a majority of his committee, instead of urging that a rule be granted on the Taft-Ellender-Wagner bill, actually opposed the granting of such a rule. The Rules Committee, with the unanimous vote of its Republican members, voted against the reporting of a rule for the consideration of the Taft-Ellender-Wagner housing bill. That is the story as to how the Republicans killed this meritorious housing bill

It was interesting to note that while the Committee on Rules was still holding hearings for a rule on the Taft-Ellender-Wagner bill, the chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency, Mr. Wolcott, hurriedly introduced in the House this makeshift bill which was, and is, to all intents and purposes, entirely devoid of provisions to provide lowcost housing and rental homes for our veterans and low-paid workers, for housing research, for slum clearance, for rural housing rehabilitation, and for public housing. One can come to no other conclusion than that the introduction of this new bill by Chairman Wolcott was for no other purpose or reason than to attempt to "pull the wool" over the eyes of the American people and lead them to believe that the Republican Congress was passing a real housing bill. In fact, the only provision left in the new Wolcott bill was that which provided for secondary mortgages, which the mortgage investment bankers gave advance notice they would not handle unless they were guaranteed against loss in such transactions. And the main provision in the Wolcott bill was such a guarantee.

Mr. Speaker, I cannot see how you Republicans will have the temerity or nerve to face your constituents when you return to your respective districts. How can you explain your failure to the exservicemen and their families who, for years, have been unsuccessfully seeking decent places in which to live, in refusing to pass a bill to provide them with low-cost or reasonable rental homes within their financial reach.

Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCormack]; the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. Boggs]; the gentleman from Texas, the former Speaker of the House [Mr. Rayburn], have most impressively and convincingly proven beyond any question of doubt the need for the Taft-Ellender-Wagner housing bill, and have revealed the unfair tactics of the Republican majority in stifling the consideration of the most important provision in the bill that would afford decent housing for our veterans and other citizens.

The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Cox1 charged that the bill is socialistic and stated that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCormack] and other gentlemen on the Democratic side did not express the views of the Democrats. I am constrained to say to the gentleman from Georgia that if the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Mc-CORMACK! does not express the views of all the Democrats, surely the gentleman from Georgia does not. This is something the gentleman from Georgia can-With particular reference to not refute. his opposition to the Taft-Ellender-Wagner bill, it is difficult for me to understand his position because only a few days ago, according to an article appearing in the Albany (Ga.) Herald he sent a telegram to Mr. Hudson Malone, executive director of the Albany Housing Authority, part of which I quote;

You may assure all interested that I will do everything in my power to see that a rule is granted promptly for House consideration.

The House's version of the Taft-Ellender-Wagner housing bill now in the Rules Committee will have my strongest support with the hope that it will be passed before adjournment.

In view of this telegram I cannot understand why the gentleman from Georgia should charge that this bill is socialistic in character.

Mr. Speaker, I have explained the antagonistic Republican record on housing and now I shall call attention to its record on other legislation.

THE DEPLORABLE—YES, MISERABLE REPUBLICAN
RECORD

The Republican majority leader, Mr. Halleck, in answer to President Truman's statement that this last Congress was the worst in history, replied that this is and has been a good Congress. Yes, it has been a good Congress for the special and vested interests and for the privileged and wealthy, but a most miserable and regrettable one for the common people.

Now, Mr. Speaker, let us look at the record of this Congress:

First. You Republicans passed the drastic and infamous Taft-Hartley Act to enslave labor by even reviving the use of injunction, and followed with the passage by the House of the Mundt-Nixon bill, designed to further restrict, yes, to actually destroy organized labor.

Second. You wiped out all price controls and gave big business the right to voluntarily—among themselves—fix prices on all necessities of life and, taking advantage of this unprecedented privilege, instead of reducing prices and the high cost of living in accordance with your and their promise to the people in 1946, the cost of living has increased by 40 percent since you came into power.

Third. You gave railroads the right to fix and increase rates in violation of the Sherman Antitrust Act and to the detriment of the American shippers and consumers, notwithstanding that during the war they overcharged the Government nearly $2,000,000,000 in freight rates.

Fourth. You passed three so-called tax-reduction bills in the interest of war profiteers, black and gray marketeers, and profit-gouging big business, giving billions of dollars in hand-outs to the wealthy corporation executives for whom Congress has already repealed excess-profits taxes, while giving penny tax reductions to the majority of low and middle income-tax payers. Yes, you Republicans can take full credit for passing a tax-reduction bill for the greedy, not for the needy.

Fifth. You extended but emasculated the Rent Control Act by permitting an increase of 15 percent in rents.

Sixth. You voted away our oil reserves valued at billions of dollars to the big oil producers, who overcharged the Government $2,000,000,000 for oil supplies during the war and robbed the American consumer of millions by unjustifiably increasing the prices of their products.

Seventh. You appropriated sixty millions for the eradication of hoof-andmouth disease in cattle in Mexico, but failed to appropriate 1 cent for a healthinsurance program for the American people and reduced the appropriations for school lunches for our needy children.

Eighth. You passed a sugar bill, not in the interest of the American consumer, but in the interest of the Sugar Trust.

Ninth. You passed a wool-support price bill to enable the Wool Trust to import foreign wool at low prices and at the same time permitted manufacturers to charge the consumer higher prices for all manufactured woolen products.

Tenth. You passed a Government warhousing disposal bill that enabled realestate operators to make millions, but which forced thousands of veterans and other worthy tenants to either pay higher rentals or vacate their homes.

Eleventh. You passed an Employers' Liability Act to limit the venue in certain cases that will operate in the interest and to the benefit of employers and deny fair rights to employees.

Twelfth. You passed a Credit Controls Act encouraging installment buying, which is adding to the present juicy profits of business that operates against the people with low incomes, who, due to the increasingly high prices in the last 18 months, have been obliged to with-draw $4,000,000,000 from their saving accounts, sell 25 percent of their Government bonds, and give up 23 percent of their life-insurance policies.

Thirteenth. You passed a bill to exempt the packers who have been gouging the American people from paying for inspection of their meat products, which adds an additional eleven million in taxes on the backs of the taxpayers.

Fourteenth. You passed an act to extend old-age and survivors' social security, but instead of broadening the act to provide such benefits for twelve to fifteen million more citizens, you have actually deprived 750,000 people of benefits determined by the Supreme Court; and instead of increasing these social-security benefits by $25 a month, you increased them by a measly $5.

THE "PUBLIC BE DAMNED" RECORD OF THE REPUBLICAN CONGRESS

Mr. Speaker, what a sorry "public be damned" record is that of the Eightieth Republican Congress. I have called attention to some of the legislation you Republicans have enacted, not in the interest of but against the interest of the average people, and now I wish to direct attention to your failure to enact legislation to relieve the distressed middle class, the white-collar workers, the pensioners, and low-paid wage earners. You took no action to curb high prices and stop the inflationary spiral.

As I have frequently stated on the floor of the House, in 1946 you Republicans solemnly promised that prices would be reduced and the then existing shortages eliminated if the OPA were repealed. You promised that your so-called free enterprise would reduce the already high prices

To force the repeal of the OPA, the packers went on strike and refused to slaughter, which created a shortage of meat and meat products and skyrocketed the prices, notwithstanding that there were plenty of cattle and hogs in the pens ready for slaughter. Unfortunately. with the repeal of the OPA, the misled American people failed to realize that the packers and industrialists were preparing to still further increase the cost of living-as they are today doing with a vengeance.

Nevertheless, you did destroy the OPA, as well as eliminate the priorities on material for home construction, and after 18 months prices not only have not been reduced but have risen, and are still going outrageously higher and higher. You have disregarded the increasing danger of inflation, as did the hoarders, profiteers, speculators, and industrialists in 21, and to a still greater degree in 1928-29, when, under Mr. Hoover, the Wall Street speculators unloaded stocks and bonds amounting up to $50,000,000,-000 and withdrew the money from the country banks on various pretenses, even using the small bankers in the cities as their agents to dispose of most of the worthless securities.

In 1929, after these speculators unloaded all their worthless securities and withdrew all the money possible from legitimate channels, they pulled the chain that brought about the greatest economic crash in the history of the world. Today you are again emulating this damnable practice of 1928-29 and I fear within 3 or 4 years-if this devastating inflation is not arrested and you should come into full power-the inflated balloon will explode and another financial crash and panic will engulf us.

The Republican Congress ignored its mandate from the people and listened only to the avaricious big business combines to help them grab up foreign holdings, prepare for war, curb labor, sup-press civil liberty, shamefully manipulate and continue to further increase the already high prices, and to further increase the greatest profits in history at the distressed people's expense.

The Republicans refused to consider legislation which would have raised the minimum wage to 75 cents an hour, although the present 40-cent wage minimum is today worth about 23 cents in purchasing power. According to a report issued by the Federal Reserve Board in June of this year, corporation profits in 1948 are "likely to be larger" than in 1947, when they broke all previous records and reached $17,000,000,000 after all taxation and other deductions for reconversion and expansion. In the last 4 years wages of the average American wage earners rose 26 percent, but the cost of living in that period has tripled the increase in wages, or reached 68 percent. Since 1944 corporation profits have increased 116 percent-from an annual rate of $10,000,000,000 to $21,600,-000,000. These figures prove that the industrial royalists. whose interest you serve, are exploiting the people, are reaping huge profits, and are responsible for the continuous increase of the cost of living.

The Republican Congress, despite its 1944 platform, failed to pass any civil rights legislation. Bills to outlaw lynching, end the poll tax, and set up a permanent fair employment practices commission were buried by the Eightieth Congress

In 1944 the Republican platform further pledged support to "extension of the existing old-age insurance and unemployment insurance to all employees not already covered," strengthening of Federal-State health programs, "and the stimulation by Federal aid of State plans to make medical and hospital treatment available to those in need." And what is your record of the Republican Congress on such legislation? Bills to extend social security coverage and benefits, as recommended, died in the congressional committees, although the cost of living has risen 70 percent since present social security rates were set and the average old-age pension today is $25 a month. The Republican Congress did, however, as I have mentioned, pass a bill removing 750,000 workers from social-security coverage. Yes, the Republican Congress followed the orders of the National Association of Manufacturers and big business to make certain that the social-security pay-roll deductions that were to help these deserving workers be not increased progressively according to law, but be added to corporations' already fat profits.

The national health insurance bill was buried deep in congressional committees and the bill for Federal aid to education never saw the light of day in the House Committee on Education and Labor; likewise a bill to improve unemployment insurance also died in commit-

The failure of the Republicans to consider these bills in the interest and welfare of the people can only be construed as a flagrant disregard of their platform pledges and evidence that the Republican Party, as ever, serves only the special and vested interests.

Notably among your failures to legislate in the interest of the people was your action in filibustering to death the bill to repeal the oleomargarine tax demanded by the housewives; the emasculation of the Foreign Trade Agreements Act which has contributed so greatly to the increase of our exports, which took the tariff out of politics, but which now endangers our world-wide foreign trade structure; instead of passing a bill as you promised to reduce the cost of maintaining the displaced-persons camps in the American zone of occupation, to permit the entry of 400,000 unfortunate displaced persons that could be absorbed into the families of their relatives, and some of whom could even be employed to relieve the house servant shortage, you passed a bill which reduces the number to 212,000 and which shamefully discriminates against and limits the entry of displaced Catholics and Jews.

THE COUNTRY MUST AVOID ANOTHER REPUBLICAN CRASH

Mr. Speaker, the Republicans in years gone by have succeeded in misleading the people by untrue statements regarding panics, but these are the actual facts:

The first panic in our memory originated in 1892-93 during the administration of Republican President Benjamin Harrison. Then followed the panic of 1907, under the administration of President Theodore Roosevelt, when the banks issued only script instead of money to their depositors, and the depression of 1920 during Warren G. Harding's Teapot Dome administration. From 1929 to 1933, under the administration of President Herbert Hoover, the Nation struggled through the greatest financial crash and panic in history. During this period banks failed on every corner; factories and plants were closed; people were obliged to live in dugouts and shacks; 18,000,000 jobless people walked the streets and highways, hungry, disillusioned, embittered, except for the few that were employed for $1 a day; home owners and farmers were losing their homes. After these Republican-made panics it remained for Democratic Presidents Woodrow Wilson and Franklin D. Roosevelt to effect the rehabilitation of the havoc and destruction wrought by the preceding Republican administrations, put the people back to work, and restore the country's financial structure and confidence.

History repeats the Republican method of deception in misleading the American people. In 1920, with no issue to go before the people, the strategists of the Republican Party, under the leadership of Republican Senator Henry Cabot Lodge and with the cooperation of their big interest sponsors, made the League of Nations the issue in the Presidential campaign, which resulted in the unwarranted defeat of the first world-organized plan to create and promote peace and understanding among the nations of the world, and ultimately led to the rebuilding of a militaristic Germany and was directly responsible for the Second World War. And whom did we find behind the scenes in the nomination and election of President Harding but Senator Boise Penrose and the Pennsylvania gang, ably supported by Pennsylvania's Joe Grundy and his National Association of Manufacturers, defeating former Illinois Governor, Frank Lowden, and Gen. Leonard Wood

In 1928 another Pennsylvania leader, Senator William Vare—successor to Boise Penrose—joined hands with Mr. Joe Grundy, the high-tariff advocate and NAM representative, who finally occupied a seat in the Senate, and nominated and elected the British purchasing agent, Herbert Hoover.

Today we find the special-interest forces, headed by Pennsylvania's Joe Grundy, the Pews, and others of their hue, working with the tariff barons and the National Association of Manufacturers, the banking clique of J. P. Morgan, Rockefeller, du Pont, Dillon, Read, and other Wall Street bankers, ready to nominate a man on the Republican ticket who will be subservient to their dictates. These special-interest forces are vitally interested in rebuilding Germany because of their vast holdings in the I. G. Farben cartels and other German combinations and, as reports indicate, they are preparing for world war III in the same manner they prepared for the Second World War.

All through the years the Pennsylvania crowd, under the banners of Mark Hanna, Foraker, Dalzell, Penrose, Vare, and Grundy, has a black record of corruption, and even today the disclosures in Philadelphia show that the Republicans continue, as they have for years, in corruptive control of that city. But Philadelphia is not alone dominated by such Republican forces. Other cities and States as well feel the corruption hand of Republican bosses.

In that connection, unfortunately, my own State of Illinois, under a Republican administration, has been deprived of millions of dollars through failure of proper sales-tax collection returns to the State, which, together with hundreds of thousands of dollars illegally collected as political tribute from State employees, have been shamefully diverted for political campaign purposes.

Mr. Speaker, I cannot refrain from again referring to the high cost of living that is today plaguing our country and give below a comparison of prewar and present-day prices:

District the state of	Prewar prices	Present prices
HomesAutomobiles Men's clothing	$5,000 500 18-25	$10, 500-$15, 000 1, 700-2, 500 50-75
Men's, women's, and children's shoes	2-6	4-15-18
pliances, and furnish-	POSITI IN	(1)

1150 percent higher.

Mr. Speaker, notwithstanding all these exorbitant prices on commodities, the greatest necessity of life—food—has led the field in price rises. Here is a tabulation on a few food items of prewar prices as compared to present-day prices:

with larve of business at the	Prewa		Present prices
Steak Bacon Chuck roast Smoked ham Leg of lamb.* Lamb chops Lamb breast Veal cutlets Pork chops Cheese Butter Quart of grade A milk Eggs Bread Coffe Canned fruits and vegetables	10.10-	. 40 . 35 . 23 . 28 . 32 . 42 . 11 . 44 . 30 . 15 . 42 . 13 . 28 . 08 . 22 . 15	1 $1, 10-$1, 19 -73 -71 -74 -76 -78 -1.08 -1.08 -1.08 -1.09 -1

Per pound.

Mr. Speaker, when will there be an end to these continuously rising prices? We all know an end to price rises will come in due time, but will it be soon enough to save the low-wage earners, the whitecollar workers living on fixed small incomes, and the people living on meager pensions, who are the ones that are suffering the most as a result of these unwarranted price wars.

THE PEOPLE HAVE HAD ENOUGH OF THE REPUBLICANS

Mr. Speaker, as I have said, the Republican leaders seem to feel they can fool and mislead the people in 1948 as they did in the 1946 campaign, when they feed them with reckless promises, distorted propaganda, half-truths, and untruths. But in this campaign the people will have before them the actual performance record of the Eightieth Republican Con-The memory of the people will not be so short-lived as to forget your 1946 promises and to realize the stark truth that you have betrayed them. Do not think they have forgotten when President Roosevelt was elected banks were failing on every corner; factories and plants were closed; nearly 18,000,000 jobless people walked the streets and the highways; that farm mortgages were being foreclosed and home owners were losing their homes. They will not forget the famous "hundred days" following Roosevelt's election when new legislation flowed out of a Democratic Congress to meet the dire emergency. Banks reopened. Factories flung wide their doors and started their motors humming. The working people gradually went back to work.

Now, 15 years later—despite your criticism of the New Deal—we have 62,000,000 people at work. Business is booming, and the country is enjoying the greatest prosperity in history. Today our national income is $210,000,000,000, as compared to the thirty-eight to forty-two billion in 1932 and 1933. Measured by every index, our prosperity is so great that our only just cause for anxiety is the danger of a run-away inflation and the high cost of living. And what does the record show since you Republicans took control of both the House of Representatives and the Senate of the United States? shows that you have done everything possible to encourage inflation in the name of so-called free enterprise, which, however, is not free, because it is controlled by your trusts and combines whom you are serving.

You like the idea of a big boom that is bound to go bust.

There are always some smart operators ready to make a killing out of human misery, unemployment, deflation, depression; and you have made yourselves the errand boys for those cruel profiteers, your friends, the Wall Street manipulators, the National Association of Manufacturers, and the special and vested interests who, through the greatest horde of lobbyists ever to infest the Capitol, have forced you to do their bidding.

Notwithstanding all the insincere promises, the misrepresentations, the scare campaigns, and the ballyhoo of the Republican 1946 campaign, the fact remains that the Republican Party has miserably failed the people and the Nation. They have failed to adopt any constructive plan or policy or to adopt positive legislation to meet real needs. However. the nearest approach to combat the high cost of living was the advice of one of the Republican Presidential candidates that the people should produce more and eat

Everything the Republicans have done has been repressive and negative. They have been busy in this Congress in turning the clock back-in repealing the OPA and weakening many of the beneficial laws in the interest of labor. The Republicans were able to do nothing but disparage what the Democrats have done. and although you control 90 percent of the press, magazines, and a majority of the radio stations, the American voters will not be lulled to sleep or misled as they were in 1946 when only 33 percent of them voted. They now realize they owe it to themselves and to their country to vote and register their protest and resentment against the Republican betrayal and record.

The Democrats have really made a splendid, most constructive record. I repeat: They can point with pride to the highest employment in all history, to the largest national income, and the greatest prosperity.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have five legislative days in which to extend their remarks on this resolution.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HALLECK].

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, I had not intended to say anything further about this matter, but in view of some of the arguments that we have heard here, I would just like to reiterate that, after all, this is a procedural matter. It is identical with the practice that has been followed all through the years. In 1938 the Republicans were concerned about the so-called reorganization bill. Many Democrats were concerned about it. There was a question at that time with respect to the calling up of that bill when a similar resolution to that now before us was presented.

As I pointed out in my opening statement, there are rules outstanding on this that may be called up or the bills may be considered under suspension of the rules. I do not know what additional rules may be granted. Undoubtedly, there will be suspension of the rule before the week is out on many matters that involve considerable controversy. The opportunity, of course, is always present to vote on that controversy. However, this is not the time to debate any of these measures. We might, in debating many measures in which a great many Members are interested, and in which a great many people in the country are interested, have very considerable differences of opinion on both sides of the aisle. But let us stick to the original fundamental proposition. By adopting this resolution we are doing what pre-vious Congresses have done all through the years. We are simply doing what the rules of the House contemplate, and we are doing what the rules provide. It is designed to expedite the business of the That is the only issue here. There is no other issue to be debated.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker. I move the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The question is on ordering the previous question.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I de-mand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered. The question was taken; and there were—yeas 240, nays 160, not voting 30, as follows:

NAVY DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATION BILL, 1949

Mr. PLUMLEY. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (H. R. 6772) making appropriations for the Department of the Navy and the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1949, and for other purposes, and ask unanimous consent that the statement of the managers on the part of the House be read in lieu of the report.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Vermont?

There was no objection.
The Clerk read the statement.
The conference report and statement follow:

CONFERENCE REPORT

AMENDMENTS IN DISAGREEMENT

Amendment No. 16 authorizes the use of the appropriation, Maintenance, Bureau of Yards and Docks, for expenses incident to transferring offices of the Navy Department between buildings as the seat of government. The managers on the part of the House will move to recede and concur.

Amendment No. 23 authorizes the balances of the appropriation Increase and Replacement of Naval Vessels to be used for the employment of personnel in the Bureau of Ships and the Bureau of Ordnance during the fiscal year 1949 in such sums as the Secretary may determine. The managers on the part of the House will move to recede and concur.

Amendment No. 40 relates to the use of funds for making time-measuring studies. payments of premiums and rewards, and work done in naval establishments. The managers on the part of the House will move to recede and concur with an amendment.

CHARLES A. PLUMLEY, NOBLE J. JOHNSON, WALTER C. PLOESER, ERRETT P. SCRIVNER, ALBERT J. ENGEL, HARRY R. SHEPPARD, ALBERT THOMAS, JOE HENDRICKS.

GEORGE ANDREWS, Managers on the Part of the House.

Mr. PLUMLEY (interrupting the reading of the statement). Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a very brief statement, and perhaps we can save a great deal of time. I would like to ask the ranking minority member of this subcommittee if this report is not unanimous and if we have not agreed on every single item in it. I would like to further ask him if he knows of any objections to be made by anyone on his side. I know of none to be made on my side.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. Speaker, in response to the gentleman's inquiry, there was no objection expressed to me in the conference. There was harmonious agreement on the part of all parties concerned

Mr. PLUMLEY. That being so, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the further reading of the statement be dispensed with.

There was no objection.

Mr. PLUMLEY. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the conference report.

The previous question was ordered. The conference report was agreed to. The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the first amendment in disagreement. The Clerk read as follows:

Senate amendment No. 16: Page 17, line 14, insert ": Provided further, That this appropriation shall be available for any expenses incident to transferring offices of the Navy Department between buildings at the seat of government."

Mr. PLUMLEY. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion which is at the Clerk's desk. The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. PLUMLEY moves that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 16, and concur therein.

The motion was agreed to.
The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate amendment No. 23: Page 24, line 2, insert ": Provided, That of the balances re-maining of appropriations under this head, there shall be available during the fiscal year 1949 such sums as the Secretary may from time to time determine to be necessary for the employment of personnel in the Bureau of Ships and the Bureau of Ordnance in connection with the construction of vessels which have been heretofore authorized under this head."

Mr. PLUMLEY. Mr. Speaker, I off a motion which is the the Clerk's desk. Mr. Speaker, I offer The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. PLUMLEY moves that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 23, and concur therein.

The motion was agreed to. The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

"SEC. 112. No part of the appropriations made in this act shall be available for contracts with any person, firm, or corporation to make or cause to be made with a stop watch or other time-measuring device a time study of any job of any employee; no part of the appropriations made in this act shall be available for the salary or pay of any officer, manager, superintendent, foreman, or other person or persons having charge of the work of any employee of the United States Government while making or causing to be made with a stop watch or other time-measuring device a time study of any job of any such employee between the starting and completion thereof, or of the movements of any such employee while engaged upon such work; nor shall any part of the appropriations made in this act be available to pay any premiums or bonus or cash reward to any employee in addition to his regular wages, except for suggestions resulting in improvements or economy in the operation of any Government plant; and no moneys herein appropriated for the Naval Establishment or made available therefor shall be used or expended under contracts hereafter made for the repair, purchase, or acquirement, by or from any private contractor, of any naval vessel, machinery, article, or articles that at the time of the proposed repair, purchase, or acquirement can be repaired, manufactured, or produced in cach or any of the Government naval shipyards or arsenals of the United States, when time and facilities permit, and when in the judgment of the Secactary, such repair, purchase, acquirement, production would not involve an appreciable increase in cost to the Government, except when the repair, purchase, or acquirement, by or from any private contractor, would, in the opinion of the Secretary be advantageous to the national defense.

Mr. PLUMLEY. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion which is at the Clerk's desk. The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. Plumler moves that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 40, and concur therein with amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by said amendment, insert the following:

"Sec. 112. No part of the appropriations made in this act shall be available for contracts with any person, firm, or corporation to make or cause to be made with a stop watch or other time-measuring device a time study of any job of any employee within the Navy; nor shall any part of the appropria-tions made in this act be available to pay any premiums or bonus or cash reward to any employee in addition to his regular wages, except for suggestions resulting in improve-ments or economy in the operation of any Government plant; and no moneys herein appropriated for the Naval Establishment or made available therefor shall be used or expended under contracts hereafter made for the repair, purchase, or acquirement, by or from any private contractor, of any naval vessel, machinery, article, or articles that at the time of the proposed repair, purchase, or acquirement can be repaired, manufactured, or produced in each or any of the Government naval shipyards or arsenals of the United States, when time and facilities permit, and when in the judgment of the Secretary, such repair, purchase, acquirement, or production would not involve an appreciable increase in cost to the Government, except when the repair, purchase, or acquirement, by or from any private contractor, would, in the opinion of the Secretary, be advantageous to the national defense.

The motion was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider the votes by which action was taken on the several motions was laid on the table.

Mr. PLUMLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and include therein a table.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Vermont?

There was no objection.

Mr. PLUMLEY. Mr. Speaker, I include a table showing the House and Senate action and the conferees' agreement on the naval appropriation bill for the fiscal year 1949. I feel that the conferees have arrived at a very fair figure. It is, in terms of dollars, almost an even compromise between the House and Senate figures. The bill carries a grand total in continuing and annual appropriations of $3,749,059,250 which is $63,111,000 below the amount of the Senate bill and $62,326,000 above the amount passed by the House. The final action is a reduction below the total budget estimates of $187,679,450.

The following is an explanation of each of the Senate amendments, some of which cover minor amendments:

AMENDMENT NO. 1, WINYAH BAY, S. C.

Item adopts new project as follows: Plan of recommended improvement: Modification of the existing project by a cut-off 27 feet deep and not less than 400 feet wide across the base of the point to the present turning basin in Sampit River and a branch channel 27 feet deep and not less than 200 feet wide from the upstream end of the cut-off downstream to existing and prospective terminals on the sharp bend at Georgetown in lieu of the intercepted reach of the authorized channel that follows the river along the Georgetown City water front, and maintenance of the intercepted reach of the river to a depth of 18 feet and width of 400

Estimated cost to United States for construction: Construction of the proposed plan will present a saving to the United States of $137,000 over that of the existing authorized project.

House conferees concur.

AMENDMENT NO. 2, GULFPORT HARBOR, MISS.

Item adopts new project, as follows: Plan of recommended improvement: Modification of the existing project for Gulfport Harbor, Miss., to provide for a depth of 30 feet in the anchorage basin, a channel 30 feet deep and 220 feet wide from the basin across Mississippi Sound to Ship Island bar, and a channel 32 feet deep and 300 feet wide across Ship Island bar to deep water in the Gulf of Mexico, generally in accordance with the plan of the district engineer.

Estimated cost to the United States for construction: $496.900.

House conferees concur.

AMENDMENT NO. 3, HARRISON COUNTY, MISS., SHORE PROTECTION

Item adopts new project as follows:

Plan of recommended improvement: Adoption of a project by the United States authorizing Federal participation toward the structural repair of the Harrison County sea wall and its protection by the construction of a beach, 300 feet wide, from Biloxi lighthouse to Henderson Point, a distance of about 24 miles. In addition, local interests will accomplish reconstruction of drainage facilities and comply with the following: (1) Adopt the afore-mentioned plan of improvement including repairs and alterations; (2) submit for approval by the Chief of Engineers detailed plans and specifications and arrangements for prosecuting the entire improve-ment prior to the commencement of such work; (3) provide all necessary lands, easements, and rights-of-way for accomplishment of the work; and agree to (a) maintain the sea wall and drainage facilities, and the beach by artificial replenishment, during the useful life of these works as may be required to serve their intended purpose; (b) hold and save the United States free from all claims for damages that may arise either before, during or after prosecution of work; (c) remedy water pollution that would en-danger public health; and (d) assure perpetual public ownership of the beach and its administration for public use only.

Federal participation in first cost for construction: $1,133,000

Total estimated first cost for construction: $2,368,000.

Annual maintenance charges to the United States: None; all to be assumed by local interests.

House conferees concur with an amendment to insert the document number.

AMENDMENT NO. 4, MISSISSIPPI RIVER AT FORT MADISON, IOWA

Item adopts new project, as follows:

Plan of recommended improvement: Modification of the existing project for the Mississippi River between the Missouri River and Minneapolis, Minn., to provide for (1) a small-boat basin and harbor of refuge at Fort Madison, Iowa, to be secured by constructing a breakwater and dredging the protected area and entrance channel to a project depth of 5 feet and (2) a dredged approach channel 9 feet deep to a site for a river-borne freight terminal at Fort Madison; both improvements to be accomplished in general accordance with the plans of the district engineer.

Estimated cost to United States for new work: $41,200 for the small-boat harbor, and $15,000 for the commercial harbor.

House conferees concur.

AMENDMENT NO. 5, PORT WING HARBOR, WIS.

Item adopts new project, as follows:

Plan of recommended improvement: That the existing project be modified to provide for abandonment of the extension of the return pile revetment at the inner end of the east pier, the construction of the revet-ment on the east bank facing the entrance, and the inner channel with a depth of 15 feet. It is also recommended that it be further modified to provide for two inner channels 8 feet deep, extending easterly and southerly 1,170 and 340 feet, respectively, from an irregular-shaped turning basin 15 feet deep at the inner end of the piers.

Estimated cost to United States: $17,000. House conferees concur with an amend-ment inserting "668" in lieu of "568" as the document number.

AMENDMENT NO. 6, OSWEGO HARBOR, N. Y.

Item adopts new project, as follows:

Plan of recommended modification of exrian of recommended moduleation of ex-isting project: (1) A breakwater approxi-mately parallel to shore extending easterly from the existing east arrowhead breakwater, 10 feet above low-water datum for 2,300 feet and to 12 feet above low-water datum for 2,600 feet; (2) removal of approximately 1,020 feet of the inner end of the existing east arrowhead breakwater; and (3) a channel 250 feet wide extending easterly and ter-minating in an irregularly shaped basin at the easterly end of the harbor, all to a project depth of 18 feet in earth and 19 in rock; all generally in accordance with the plans of the district engineer and with such modifications as in the discretion of the Secretary of the Army and the Chief of Engineers may be deemed advisable.

Estimated cost to United States for new work: $7,838,000.

House conferees concur.

AMENDMENT NO. 7, INTRACOASTAL WATERWAY FROM THE CALOOSAHATCHEE RIVER TO THE ANCLOTE RIVER, FLA.

The item adopts a new section which modifies the existing project to the extent that the Secretary of the Army is authorized to utilize, at and in the vicinity of Venice, any of four routes described in the Act, the existing route being included in the list. The item provides that the cost to the United States shall not exceed the cost of the original route.

House conferees concur.

AMENDMENT NO. 8

Change in section number. House conferees concur.

AMENDMENT NO. 9, BAYOU CARLIN, LA.

This item authorizes the Chief of Engineers, in the prosecution of the existing project, to protect the piers of the railway bridge crossing at Delcambre, La. Estimated cost, $15,000.

House conferees concur.

AMENDMENT NO. 10

Provides for the printing of river and harbor laws relating to rivers and harbors passed since June 25, 1938, for the use of the De-partment of the Army.

House conferees concur.

AMENDMENT NO. 11

Item provides that not to exceed $5,000 annually of the funds appropriated for rivers and harbors shall be available for the support and maintenance of the Permanent In-ternational Commission of the Congresses of Navigation and for the payment in amounts approved by the Chief of Engineers of the expenses of the properly accredited delegates of the United States to the meetings of the Congresses and of the Commission. This provides an increase of $2,000 over the amount provided under existing law.

House conferees concur.

AMENDMENT NO. 12

Item provides that the dam site known as Foster Creek Dam on the Columbia River, Wash., shall hereafter be known as the Chief Joseph Dam.

House conferees concur.

AMENDMENT NO. 13

Provides for change in section number. House conferees concur.

AMENDMENT NO. 14

Item provides for a preliminary examina-tion and survey of Quilcene Bay Harbor, Wash.

House conferees concur.

AMENDMENT NO. 15

Provides for a change in section number. House conferees concur,

AMENDMENT NO. 16, LACKAWAXEN RIVER, DELAWARE RIVER BASIN, PA.

Item adopts new project, as follows:

Plan of recommended improvement: Provides for construction of an earth-fill dam 94 feet high on Dyberry Creek 2.7 miles above the mouth to control a drainage area of 65 square miles and provide a reservoir with a capacity of 20,800 acre-feet; construction of an earth-fill dam 102 feet high on the Lackawaxen River, just above Prompton which would create a reservoir with a capacity of 19,200 acre-feet; and the removal of the three small dams at Honesdale. (Removal of these dams has been accomplished by local interests.)

Estimated cost to United States for construction: $12,150,000.

The sum of $6,150,000 is authorized to be appropriated for partial accomplishment of this project.

House conferees concur.

AMENDMENT NO. 17, WILKES-BARRE AND HAN-OVER TOWNSHIP, PA., SUSQUEHANNA RIVER BASIN

Item adopts new project as follows:

Plan of recommended improvement: Raising a low portion of the embankment at Wilkes-Barre an additional 2 feet by embankment or low concrete wall for a distance of 7,400 feet between Old River Road and Union Estimated cost to United States for con-struction: The project has been completed at a cost of $3,538,000. The cost of the additional work proposed is $250,000.

House conferees concur.

AMENDMENT NO. 18, JAMES RIVER BASIN, VA.

Item provides that preparation of plans or construction shall not be undertaken on the Gathright Reservoir and the Falling Springs reregulating dam on Jackson River, Va., heretofore authorized, until completion of review of the project to determine the desirability of its construction at the present time, and a finding of the proper local contribution on the basis of benefits to be derived for water supply, pollution abatement, and other conservation purposes.

AMENDMENT NO. 19, CENTRAL AND SOUTHERN FLORIDA

Item adopts new project, as follows:

Plan of recommended improvement: Provides for levees, channel works, and control structures at lake outlets in the St. Johns and Kissimmee areas; for increased levee protection around Lake Okeechobee and enlargement of its outlets, the Caloosahatchee and St. Lucie waterways; for enlargement of existing drainage canals, and the construc-tion of new canals and levees and pumping plants, for control of water in the Everglades area; and levees and channel work for protection of the area along the east coast.

Estimated cost to United States for construction: $171,041,000.

Amount authorized to be appropriated for partial accomplishment of said plan by this amendment, $16,300,000.

House conferees concur with an amendment inserting the document number.

AMENDMENT NO. 20, ARKANSAS RIVER BASIN

This item provides that the second paragraph under the heading "Arkansas River Basin" in the Flood Control Act of 1946 is hereby amended to read as follows:

"The Chief of Engineers is authorized to provide in the Canton Reservoir on the North Canadian River one hundred and seven thousand acre-feet of irrigation and water supply storage (including approximately sixty-nine thousand acre-feet for irrigation and thirtyeight thousand acre-feet for municipal water supply for Enid, Oklahoma, to be utilized in accordance with section 8 and section 6, respectively, of the Flood Control Act of December 22, 1944 (Public, 534, Seventyeighth Congress)), upon the condition that when siltation of the reservoir shall encroach upon the flood control authorized by the River and Harbor Act approved July 24, 1946, and the authorization for appropriation for the Arkansas River Basin is hereby increased accordingly."

AMENDMENT NO. 21, APPROACHES TO CERTAIN BRIDGES ON ARKANSAS RIVER

The bill as passed by the House contains a modification of existing projects for flood protection on the Arkansas River which were authorized by section 10 of the Flood Control Act approved December 22, 1944. That mod-ification is intended to reestablish the general distribution of Federal and local participation in the first cost of alterations to highway bridges and approaches at Morril-ton and at Van Buren-Fort Smith, as set forth in House Document No. 447, Seventyeighth Congress. The present estimated cost of these alterations is $571,000. United States Highways 64 and 71 are strategic highways and State Highway No. 9 is a secondary Federal-aid road. Due to changes in design of the structures, channel changes caused by floods, and the emergency nature of accomplishing these alterations in a satisfactory manner at an early date, the committee believes that a Federal contribution to the modifications on a basis of approximately 50 percent is desirable and, therefor, recommends that the figure in the House bill be raised from $200,000 to $300,000.

House conferees concur.

AMENDMENT NO. 22, BRADENS BEND, ARKANSAS RIVER

Item adopts as an emergency measure, a plan for bank protection and control works at Bradens Bend, Okla., at an estimated cost of $1,000,000. The right bank of the Arkansas River has been actively sloughing into the stream since 1900. Active bank caving is now taking place downstream from the existing riprap. The branch line of the Kansas City Southern Railroad has been abandoned because of the bank caving, and United States Highway No. 271 relocated out of the area since it was severed. There now remains about 3,500 feet between the pres-ent bank line of the Arkansas River and the Poteau River. An existing draw between the Poteau and Arkansas Rivers would pro-vide a pilot channel for the Arkansas River to change its course into the Poteau River, forming a double channel and isolating up-ward of 7,300 acres of high quality culti-vated farm land comprising 45 farm units. This would have a detrimental effect on construction of the authorized navigation project at a later date.

House conferees concur.

AMENDMENT NO. 23, RED RIVER OF THE NORTH DRAINAGE BASIN, MINN, AND N. DAK.

Item adopts new project, as follows: Plan of recommended improvement: Provides for channel clearing, enlargement and realinement and construction of levees and flood walls along certain sectors of the main stem and of its major tributaries in Minnesota and North Dakota and construction of a multiple-purpose reservoir with the dam at mile 38.6 on the Otter Tail River, Minn. Estimated cost to United States for construction: $9,928,000.

House conferees concur.

The sum of $2,000,000 is authorized to be appropriated for partial accomplishment of AMENDMENT NO. 24, MISSOURI RIVER IN VICINITY OF MINERS BEND, NEER. AND S. DAK.

Item adopts as an emergency measure the following project:

Plan of recommended improvement: The proposed project consists of a system of dikes and revetments to control erosion and prevent loss of farm lands from caving banks in Ponca and Miners Bends on the Missouri River over a distance of about 9 miles. Construction of about 6 miles of revetment and 5,000 linear feet of dikes is contemplated. The project ties into the bluff line in Ponca Bend well above the critical area.

Estimated cost to the United States for construction: $3,000,000.

House conferees concur.

AMENDMENT NO. 25, SOUTH PLATTE RIVER AND TRIBUTARIES, COLO., WYO., AND NEBR.

Item adopts new project as follows: Plan of recommended improvement: Pro-vides for the construction of the following works of improvement: (a) Reservoir at the Chatfield Dam site, (b) Continuous levee sys-tem along the South Platte River, between the Chatfield Dam site and St. Vrain Creek, (c) Channel improvements along South Platte River below St. Vrain Creek, (d) Chan-nel improvement and related works at Boulder, Colo., and (e) Levee and appurtenant works at Erie, Colo.

Estimated cost to the United States for construction: $49,432,000.

Senate recedes.

AMENDMENT NO. 26, DETROIT RESERVOIR, ON NORTH SANTIAM RIVER, WILLAMETTE RIVER

Item provides for the installation of generating facilities at the Detroit Dam and the construction of a reregulating reservoir. The Detroit Reservoir is one of the elements of the system of flood control and multipurpose reservoirs in the Willamette River Basin. It is advantageously located with respect to a power market area, and a major transmission network exists in that vicinity. The needed additional power-generating capacity in the Pacific Northwest is critical and will become more acute in the next few years. The proposed power installation would generate 443,100,000 kilowatt-hours annually which 443,100,000 kilowatt-hours annually which would have a value of $1,657,000. The ratio of benefits to costs is 1.57 to 1.0.

The total estimated Federal cost for the installation of power facilities including a reregulating dam at Detroit Reservoir is $19,030,000. Additional monetary authoritation for this work need not necessarily be zation for this work need not necessarily be included in the bill since the available monetary authorization for the comprehensive plan for the Willamette River Basin, for which appropriations have not yet been made, is sufficient to cover the initial items of work on the installation of power facilities which might be undertaken in the near future. Approval of the inclusion of power, however, is urgently needed to permit this work to go ahead

House conferees concur.

AMENDMENTS NOS. 27, 28, AND 29

These amendments rearrange the House language on the project for the West Tennessee tributaries under Lower Mississippi River by inserting a subsection, (a), and the following: "and the authorization for the Lower Mississippi River project is increased accordingly".

House conferees concur.

AMENDMENT NO. 30, DEVILS SWAMP PROJECT AT BATON ROUGE, LA.

House conferees concur with an amendment, as follows: At the end of the item in-sert the following: "and the authorization for the Lower Mississippi River project is increased accordingly".

AMENDMENT NO. 31, L'ANGUILLE RIVER, MO. AND

Item adopts new project, as follows:

Plan of recommended improvement: The plan of improvement provides for clearing, enlargement, and realignment as required of L'Anguille River below mile 108, Brushy Creek below mile 6, and First Creek below mile 8, to convey flood flows at stages sufficiently low to facilitate drainage of areas outside the first bottoms of the flood plain above the limit of Mississippi and St. Francis Rivers backwater.

Estimated cost to the United States for construction: $5,100,000.

House conferees concur.

AMENDMENT NO. 32, RIO GRANDE BASIN

Item adopts project covering the construction of reservoirs, floodways, rehabilitation and miscellaneous work, as follows:

Project 1	Federal	Non- Federal	Tota
Chamita Reservoir	$30, 833, 000 7, 201, 000 11, 526, 000 200, 000 18, 233, 000 1, 525, 000	$181, 000 2 75, 200	$30, 833, 000 7, 201, 000 11, 707, 000 275, 200 18, 233, 000 1, 525, 000
Total	69, 518, 000	256, 200	70, 328, 849

 Based on December 1947 prices.
 $75,000 is a cash contribution and $200 is lands and damages.

Local cooperation: Local interests are required to give the customary assurances in connection with flood-control projects covering lands, damages, and highway and highway-bridge alterations for channel and levees in addition to maintaining and operating all levees in the Bluewater floodway. They must also contribute in cash $75,000 to the cost of constructing a culvert which is part of the Bluewater floodway project. estimated non-Federal cost is $256,200.

The plan will provide for the development of the water resources of the Rio Grande Basin and the flood-control phase of the plan covered in this report will provide improvements essential to the economic welfare of the inhabitants of the basin. The ratio of average annual benefits to average annual costs is 1.2 to 1.

The plan has been coordinated among the Federal and State agencies concerned and all are in agreement. Construction of the entire plan would be a joint undertaking of the Department of the Army and the Department of the Interior. The committee is of the opinion that flood and sediment control in the Rio Grande Basin is essential for protection of the valley lands. Sedimentation of the stream bed has raised ground-water levels in the valley and caused abandonment of large agricultural areas and increased damages from floods. The comprehensive plan worked out by State, Federal, and local officials would reduce flood damages and permit continued use of a large area for agricultural and other purposes. Approval of the plan with small authorization to construct emergency features and prosecute plans for cer-tain remaining items is believed desirable and the committee so recommends.

The sum of $3,500,000 is authorized to be appropriated to be expended by the Depart-ment of the Army for partial accomplishment of this plan.

House conferees concur, with an amendment in lines 19 and 20, page 23, striking out the words: "at prices, on terms, and with titles satisfactory to him."

AMENDMENTS NOS. 33 TO 38, INCLUSIVE

These items provide for the making of preliminary examinations and surveys at the following localities:

Two Mile Creek, Oregon. Aroostook River and tributaries, Maine. Beaver Creek, Lincoln County, Oregon. Skinner Creek, at and in the vicinity of Mannsville, New York.

Steinhatchee and Fenholloway Rivers, Florida.

River Rouge and tributaries, Michigan.

AMENDMENT NO. 39

This amendment increases the amount authorized in the House bill for carrying out improvements authorized under title II of the bill from $25,000,000 to $65,000,000.

House conferees concur with an amendment striking out "$65,000,000", and inserting in lieu thereof "$62,000,000."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to. A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

INTERNATIONAL LABOR ORGANIZATION

Mr. JACKSON of California. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the resolution (S. J. Res. 117) providing for acceptance by the United States of America of the constitution of the International Labor Organization In-strument of Amendment, and further authorizing an appropriation for payment of the United States share of the expenses of membership and for expenses of participation by the United States, and ask unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report.

The Clerk read the title of the resolution.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California [Mr. Jackson]?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the statement.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 117) providing for acceptance by the United States of America of the Constitution of the International Labor Organization Instrument of Amendment, and further authorizing an appropriation for pay-ment of the United States share of the expenses of membership and for expenses of participation by the United States, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the House amendment insert the following:

"SEC. 2. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated annually to the Department

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 117) providing for acceptance by the United States of America of the Constitution of the International Labor Organization Instrument of Amendment, and further authorizing an appropriation for payment of the United States share of the expenses of membership and for expenses of participation by the United States, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conferees and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

The Senate joint resolution authorized the appropriation annually of such sums as may be necessary for the payment by the United States of its share of the expenses of members and for participation by it in the In-ternational Labor Organization. The House amendment authorized to be appropriated annually such sums, not to exceed $550,000 for the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1947, as may be necessary for payment by the United States of its share of the expenses and further provided that "the annual United States quota of contribution to the total budget of the Organization shall not be greater in proportion than the United States quota of contribution to the total budget of the United Nations." The House amendment further authorized the annual appropriation of such additional sums, not to exceed $95,000 for the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1947, as may be necessary to pay the expenses incident to participation by the United States in the activities of the Organization. The amendment agreed to in conference follows the House provision except that (1) the amount authorized to be appropriated for the payment by the United States of its share of the expenses of the Organization is limited to $1,091,739 per annum in conformity with the appropriation bill recently passed by both Houses and this limitation is made applicable to all fiscal years, (2) the requirement quoted above as to quote of contribution is eliminated, and (3) the limitation of $95,000 on the authorization for the payment of expenses incident to participation by the United States in the activities of the Organization is made applicable to each fiscal

The House amendment provided that no citizen of, or resident in, the United States shall participate in any session, conference, or meeting, or other work of the International Labor Organization or of any subordinate committee or organization thereof, without the consent of the Secretary of State. The amendment agreed to in conference omits this provision. However, the House provision requiring investigation as to loyalty and security by the Federal Bureau of Investigation of any person serving as representative, delegate, or alternate from the United States has been retained.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.
A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

MARITAL DEDUCTION, FOR ESTATE-TAX PURPOSES, IN CASE OF LIFE INSURANCE OR ANNUITY PAYMENTS

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the resolution (H. J. Res. 429) relating to the marital deduction, for estate-tax purposes, in the case of life insurance or annuity payments.

The Clerk read the title of the reso-

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. Reed]?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That section 812 (e) (1) (G) of the Internal Revenue Code (relating to life insurance with power of appointment in surviving spouse) is hereby amended to read as follows:

"(G) Life insurance or annuity payments with power of appointment in surviving spouse: In the case of an interest in property passing from the decedent consisting of proceeds under a life insurance, endowment, or annuity contract, if under the terms of the contract such proceeds are payable in install-ments or are held by the insurer subject to an agreement to pay interest thereon (whether the proceeds, upon the termination of any interest payments, are payable in a lump sum or in annual or more frequent installments), and such installment or interest payments are payable annually or at more frequent intervals, commencing not later than 13 months after the decedent's death, and all amounts payable during the life of the surviving spouse are payable only to such spouse, and such spouse has the power to appoint all amounts payable under such contract (exercisable in favor of such surviving spouse, or of the estate of such surviving spouse, or in favor of either, whether or not in each case the power is exercisable in favor of others), with no power in any other person to appoint to any person other than the surviving spouse any part of the amounts payable under such con-

"(ii) no part of such proceeds shall, for the purposes of subparagraph (B) (i), be considered as passing to any person other than the surviving spouse.

"This subparagraph shall be applicable only if, under the terms of the contract, such power in the surviving spouse to appoint, whether exercisable by will or during life, is exercisable by such spouse alone and in all events."

SEC. 2. The amendment made by this joint resolution shall be applicable with respect to estates of decedents dying after December 31, 1947.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, this proposal is intended to correct an inequity in the Revenue Act of 1948 whereby insurance proceeds left with the insurer at interest, or settlement under endowment and annuity contracts are denied the marital deduction. Insurers have received requests from a large number of policy holders to rearrange their insurance proceeds to comply with the law, and it is causing confusion among millions of policy holders.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF TIME FOR CLAIMING CREDIT OR REFUND WITH RESPECT TO WAR LOSSES

Mr. MARTIN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the resolution (H. J. Res. 428) providing an extension of time for claiming credit or refund with respect to war losses.

The Clerk read the title of the joint resolution.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. MARTIN]?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That if a claim for credit or refund under the internal-revenue laws relates to an overpayment on account of the deductibility by the taxpayer of a loss in respect of property considered destroyed or seized under section 127 (a) of the Internal Revenue Code, relating to war losses, for a taxable year beginning in 1941 or 1942, the 3-year period of limitation prescribed in section 322 (b) (1) of the Internal Revenue Code shall in no event expire prior to December 31, 1949. In the case of such a claim filed on or before December 31, 1949, the amount of the credit or refund may exceed the portion of the tax paid within the period provided in section 322 (b) (2) or (3) of the Internal Revenue Code, whichever is applicable, to the extent of the amount of the overpayment attributable to the deductibility of the loss described in this section.

The resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

CALL OF THE HOUSE

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, I make point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and eighty-three Members are present, not a quorum.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk called the roll and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

[Roll No. 117]

O'Toole Andresen. Kee Kefauver August H. Bell Peden Keogh Blackney Kerr Plumley Rains Regan Bland King Brown, Ohio Byrne, N. Y. Celler Kirwan Rivers Robertson Shafer Lane Lewis, Ohio Combs Ludlow Smathers Smith, Maine Fellows Fogarty Lyle Lynch McMahon Stigler Thomas, N. J. Welch Granger Macy Meade, Md. Jennings Johnson, Okla. Michener Johnson, Tex. Morton Wilson, Ind.

The SPEAKER. On this roll call, 380 Members have answered to their names, a quorum.

By unanimous consent, further proceedings under the call were dispensed with.

INCREASING COMPENSATION FOR CERTAIN VETERANS

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's desk the bill (S. 2821) to provide increases of compensation for certain veterans with service-connected disabilities who have dependents, with amendments of the House thereto, insist on the House amendments, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Massachusetts. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none and appoints the following conferees: Mrs. Rogers of Massachusetts, Messrs. Kearney, Mathews, Allen of Louisiana and Rankin.

INCREASING RATES OF SERVICE-CON-NECTED DEATH COMPENSATION

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (S. 2825) to increase the rates of service-connected death compensation payable to certain widows, children, and dependent parents of persons who served in the active military or naval service, and for other purposes, with amendments of the House thereto, insist on the House amendments, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Massachusetts? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none and appoints the following conferees: Mrs. Rogers of Massachusetts, Messis. Kearney, Mathews, Rankin, and Allen of Louisiana.

SELECTIVE SERVICE ACT OF 1948

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 6401) to provide for the common defense by increasing the strength of the armed forces of the United States and for other purposes.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present, and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Two hundred and eighteen Members, including the Speaker, are present, a quorum.

So the motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 6401, with Mr. Case of South Dakota in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Section 4 of the bill is still pending. Are there any further amendments?

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, it seems best to make a short announcement for the possible information of a great many of the Members of the House.

In the first place, I would like to say that I quite understand the situation. I have been in the House long enough, I think, to at least have a reasonable understanding of the present situation and the views of both those in favor of this bill and those opposed to it.

It is not my doing that this bill comes up on the closing days of the Congress. If I had had my way, it would have been up a month ago, with ample time, 2 or 3 days, for debate. I would not be disposed to rush the consideration of this bill under the 5-minute rule, were it not for the fact that it comes up at the very close of the Congress.

As chairman of the Armed Services Committee, I have tried to conduct it in a way that was fair to all Members on the majority side. I think even though some of them have opposed me on this measure, they will say that they have been reasonably fairly treated. I think the same is true, if you would ask the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. VINSON], on the minority side. It has been my disposition to be that way in the House under the 5-minute rule.

This is a very important bill. It is not a pleasant bill for Members to vote on, but it is a bill that has a great deal to do with the security of this Nation, looking to the future, as we see it, for the next 2 years.

Thirty-three members of the Armed Services Committee heard all the testimony. They are informed, and a preponderant majority of that committee having heard all the testimony, reported this bill favorably. I do not say that they are more correct in their viewpoint than you, but at least they are better informed in the premises than the average Member of the House.

It is true that on yesterday, on an amendment providing for 1 year, a great many men, who were opposed to the bill completely, spoke for the 1-year amendment. They spoke of how fine it would be for the young men of this country to have 1 year's training in the Army—the very gentlemen who opposed universal military training and assisted in blocking the consideration of that bill by the Congress.

I hold nothing against anybody. Personally, I am not concerned with the views of anybody here. It is a fact that this large committee reported this bill favorably, and the Senate of the United States has acted upon it. The President of the United States suggested it. It is true that one of the candidates on the Republican ticket, the gentleman from Ohio, Mr. Taft, voted for this bill. It is true that the Governor of New York, Mr. Dewey, in a press release—and I congratulate him upon the guts it took to do it—stated that he was in favor of the bill; and so is the young former Governor of Minnesota, Mr. Stassen.

Mr. LANDIS. Mr. Chairman, will the

gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. I yield. Mr. LANDIS. Has the President of the United States said anything about the draft on his trip out West?

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. Whether he has or has not, he made a speech for it. I think the public generally expects the Congress to vote on this issue.

This morning, the Speaker of the House who has been a long-time friend of mine, a man in whom I have confidence, asked me to hurry this bill as fast as I could, to go as long as I could, and try to pass this bill tonight. That is my intention. If in attempting to do that I seem to ride over somebody it is not ANDREWS personally that does it. chairman of a committee charged with consideration of an important measure for the security of this country whether you believe it or not. There is my friend, and he has been a friend of mine, who at this time opposes this bill, the gentleman from New York [Mr. MARC-ANTONIO]. You would not think it, but I campaigned at his invitation in his district although I will admit he did not allow me to speak at the meeting, but it was a very pleasant evening I spent with the gentleman from New York [Mr. MARCANTONIO]. Now he may attempt to do all sorts of things. He may try to block a vote on this bill, as he represents a party which is diametrically opposed to this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. KILDAY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Chairman, I offer a preferential motion.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report it.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw it. Let the gentleman from Texas proceed.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. Kilday] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. KILDAY. Mr. Chairman, we went through an experience last night. I know exactly what happened. I know that I was ignominiously defeated; but I do not believe it was in accordance with the majority view of the House. To those of you who found it convenient or comfortable to be in your homes or in your offices last night when we were voting on a most important issue, I say to you, I hope that you enjoyed the diversions in which you were interested.

I do not regard this bill as just an-

I do not regard this bill as just another bill. I do not think that this is like adding a few million or subtracting a few million from an appropriation bill;

I think that this bill is one of the fundamental things involving the security of this Nation. I voted for the Marshall plan, for ERP or ECA, whichever you want to call it, and I think this is just as important as that.

I know there is a filibuster on here. I admire the gentleman from New York [Mr. Marcantonio] and the gentleman from New York [Mr. Powell] because they are unalterably opposed to this bill and say so. I cannot say that I admire those of you who resort to the expediency of gutting amendments in order to defeat

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, will the

gentleman yield?

Mr. KILDAY. No. I know the gentleman is opposed to the bill, that he thought when he voted for the 70-group air force that he would avoid the necessity of voting on this. I am sorry; I cannot yield.

I realize we have just had a roll call to develop a quorum, but I doubt very sincerely if there is a quorum present since the Speaker counted last.

There is here an effort to prevent the consideration of this bill. Let every Member of this House atone to his own conscience. I think that this is a necessity. I think that it is entitled to consideration on its merits; and those of you who will resort to devices to avoid that vote, may your conscience not trouble you.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. VAN ZANDT:
Pages 6 and 7, strike out all of subsection
(e) beginning on line 22, page 6, and extending through line 23, page 7.
Page 8, line 19, after the number "1940", strike out the remainder of the line and the word "more" in line 20.

Page 28, line 24, strike out the words "prior to September 2, 1945."

Page 9, strike lines 4 through 23, inclusive.

Strike out all of page 10.
Strike out lines 1 through 4, page 11.
Page 13, line 20, strike out the words "less than ninety" and insert in lieu thereof the words "no prior."

Page 13, line 21, strike out the words "days' continuous."

Page 13, line 22, strike out the comma after the word "States" and the words "exclusive of periods of active training duty."

Page 48, strike out lines 8 through 11,

Mr. VAN ZANDT (interrupting reading of the amendment). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the remainder of the amendment be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is designed to exempt veterans of World War II. If the Clerk had read the entire amendment, he would have read a combination of deletions, and it is for that reason I asked unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The language of the bill before us provides that those veterans of World War II who had up to 12 months of service would be included in the draft, except the holders of the Purple Heart, citations, members of Reserve components. and those who are not physically qualified, and so forth.

Let us keep in mind yesterday we spent hours talking about doctors, also students between the ages of 19 and 25. This amendment concerns 613,000 young men who left their homes, their jobs, and their education-some volunteered. while others were drafted into the service. When you deduct the number of veterans of World War II who hold the Purple Heart, also citations, and the number who are physically disqualified, you shrink the number of 613,000 to a mere 50,000. Therefore this amendment will exempt only 50,000 veterans of World War II who are not at the moment exempt under the language of the bill.

I ask you, is it fair for us, the Congress of the United States, to apply another draft to a veteran who has been drafted already or to one who volunteered in the last war? The responsibility of fighting this country's wars, the responsibility of military service, is a responsibility that belongs to every young man who is physically qualified. By exempting the vet-erans of World War II you will simply be passing the responsibility of military service to the shoulders of those who have not served their country already.

The American Legion and the Veterans of Foreign Wars appeared before our committee in support of this amendment. The committee by a marginal vote defeated it and it is for that reason that the amendment is offered at this time.

In conclusion let me mention again there are only 50,000 veterans of World War II involved. Let us exempt them by adopting this amendment.

Mr. KILDAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VAN ZANDT. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. KILDAY. As I understand the gentleman's amendment, it would eliminate from the bill those provisions requiring veterans with limited service to serve in Reserve components?

Mr. VAN ZANDT. The veterans of World War II.

Mr. KILDAY. World War II, yes. Mr. VAN ZANDT. Who have less than 12 months of service.

Mr. KILDAY. The bill as drawn would require one with less than 12 months service to enter a Reserve component. Were the gentleman's amendment adopted those men would be totally exempt under the bill. Is that correct?

Mr. VAN ZANDT. That is correct.

Mr. KILDAY. Of course, the gentleman's argument in support of his amendment was not in consonance with the terms of the amendment. The gentleman will agree that what we are attempting to do here is to channel into the reserve components those men who have served more than 90 days and less than 12 months. Do I understand the gentleman to mean if one has served more than 90 days and less than 12 months that he is to be exempt entirely?

Mr. VAN ZANDT. My amendment provides that all men of World War II who had less than 12 months' service shall be exempt from the provisions of this bill.

Mr. KILDAY. In other words, as to those who were in the service, but had no combat service-in very rare instances they may have had combat service-the gentleman would exempt all of

Mr. VAN ZANDT. That is correct. Mr. KILDAY. Then what would become of our reserve components?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Chair-man, I rise at this time to make reply to the genial gentleman from New York [Mr. Andrews]. I have nothing but the fondest regard for him and I have a great deal of respect for him. I think that he has been working for this kind of legislation most assiduously and in all earnestness. I disagree with him, but nevertheless I respect him.

However, I do not think that the gentleman from New York [Mr. Andrews] was playing fair with this House when he sought to arouse the political prejudices of the membership on both sides of the House in order to corral votes in support of this measure. His attempt was so obvious that even a blind man could see it when he tried to lump together the opposition of the gentlemen on his side of the aisle and the opposition of some gentlemen on this side of the aisle with my opposition and that of the gentleman from New York [Mr. Powell] and the gentleman from New York [Mr. ISACSON].

Mr. KILDAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARCANTONIO. I prefer to complete my statement and then I shall yield.

Then the gentleman from New York went a step further and in order to arouse political prejudice, he stated that this measure is being diametrically opposed by the party which I have the honor and the distinction to represent in this House. We have been here long enough, gentlemen, and we know that time and time again that Members, who have an extremely opposed political philosophy may vote for or against a proposition for different reasons. There are some Members of this House who oppose this measure for pacific reasons. There are other Members of this House who oppose this measure because they feel that it is not necessary. There are others who oppose this measure because they conscientiously believe that if a system of voluntary enlistment were properly encouraged, that it would fulfill the alleged need. Those gentleman are just as much in earnest in their opposition to this measure as the gentleman from New York is in earnest in support of this measure, and those gentlemen are just as sincere in the reasons that they attribute in opposition to this measure as the gentleman from New York is in support of this measure.

As for me and as for the party I represent, we have no apology to make for our opposition. We oppose it because it is another step in the direction of war for profits and resultant depressions. How ironical it is that on the very day when this Congress has placed the seal of doom on public housing you open the flood gates of militarism in support of an imperialist foreign policy. Yes; in support of Wall Street domination of the world. Today, you refused to house the veterans and you refused to house the youth of this country, and now, on this very same day, you announce here a program of rushing through legislation to house them in the Army.

Mr. KILDAY. Mr. Chairman, will the

gentleman yield?

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Not at this time.

Mr. KILDAY. The gentleman does not intend to yield?

Mr. MARCANTONIO. I do intend to yield, but the gentleman knows I want to complete my statement. Then I shall ask unanimous consent to proceed for an additional minute for the purpose of yielding to the gentleman from Texas. I am not trying to evade any question.

We look upon this legislation as part of a program, a program that has carried this Nation of ours into Europe, in support of reaction in Turkey and fascism in Greece, and into China in support of its Hitler and I say that that program is not in defense of the interests of the American people, it is in defense not of America, but of an expansionism of the same monopoly capital that has today ruthlessly crushed all hopes of housing legislation in this House. This conscription is part of a program that is in the interest of the exploitation of the people of the world, not in the interest of the common people who reside in your districts but in the interest of those who have made war time and time again in this world. I repeat again that we are in no danger of attack from the Soviet Union. We are under attack from the big trusts that are raising prices daily, refuse Americans housing, that are enslaving and exploiting labor, destroying the liberties of our people and now seek to militarize cur youth.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired. Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Chairman,

I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one additional minute.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. I say this before I yield to the gentleman: That if I believed, and the new party which I represent believed, that this were not in the interest of imperialism, that it were really in the interest of the defense of the common people of this Nation, particularly that one-third that you refuse to house today by your action, then I would support it.

Now I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. KILDAY. In enumerating those who are opposed to the bill, I notice the. gentleman did not refer to the Wallacites and those who are for appeasing Russia. The gentleman agrees that they are opposed to the bill, does he?

Mr. MARCANTONIO. I do not know where the gentleman has been, but I have been speaking of the position of the new party. We do not agree that we are appeasing anyone. We say that those who support this legislation are appeasing those elements in this country that are driving this Nation to war for profits and depression. Appeasement comes from them and not from us. In opposing this bill we are defending the best interest of our Nation and we are fighting in the very defense of the common people of this Nation.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word

Mr. Chairman, it is very ironical also that, as the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Cox] said, there is before the Committee on Rules today an extremely fine housing measure just for veterans alone, the best housing measure for veterans that I have ever seen. I refer, of course, to the veterans' homestead housing bill (H. R. 4488) which was reported unanimously from the Committee on Veterans' Affairs. I am hopeful that we will get a rule or a suspension to pass that bill. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT] said that before the Rules Committee yesterday it was a fine measure, that it did not interfere in any way with his bill or with any other bill. He told me the same thing; 29 Members introduced the bill with me. It was reported unanimously out of the Committee on Veterans' Affairs.

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentlewoman from Massachusetts is not talking about the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentlewoman will proceed in order.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I will proceed to talk about the bill, and the gentleman may like what I have to say regarding the bill or regarding some 50 disabled veterans who are here in the gallery and outside the House Chamber, single amputees and double-leg-andarm amputees, some in wheel chairs. Many are sitting on the floor. There are no chairs. They cannot stand. Not one of those men said anything about the draft today. I believe firmly all those men would rather have a draft if it is going to save more men from being disabled and be a protection to the United States. Grievously disabled as they are, they are not complaining today about their disabilities. Most of them are dis-charged. Some of them now have auto-mobiles. It is a matter of rehabilitation. Those who now have cars came from different parts of the United States to help others to secure this legislation. They know what cars have done for them in rehabilitation, in enabling them to secure jobs, and to get them GI training in schools and colleges.

They are here asking for a bill which includes the blind and other amputees, and those who are not included in the bill which passed 2 years ago and was enacted again last year. Similar groups in hospitals cannot get cars because they must be discharged before they can apply for cars. That bill expires June 30.

Mr. Chairman, I was never so shocked in all my experience in Washington since 1913 as when there was an Independent Offices appropriation bill being considered, including appropriations for the Veterans' Administration. A rule was secured in order to waive all points of There was much legislation in that appropriation bill. There were provisions contained in that bill affecting civilians. Yet, when I tried to offer an amendment inserting the provisions of the Senate bill, S. 1391, providing automobiles, a point of order was made against it as being legislation in an appropriation bill. That provision would have helped badly disabled combat casualties

Mr. Chairman, I am asking the Rules Committee for a rule. I have asked the Speaker and floor leaders to allow the bill to come up under suspension of the rules. I do not believe there is a Member who would vote against the measure if once it gets to the floor. During that debate that day, Member after Member said in speaking, "There is nothing we would not do for the disabled." They did not live up to those brave words. This is a small thing to do for the combat disabled. It is a bill that the Senate passed unanimously over a year ago, a bill that our Committee reported over a year ago, and which is ready for action. I am positive, Mr. Chairman, that this Congress cannot adjourn without taking care of these amputees and these blind men who are not protesting against the draft. It may mean that there will be even more disabled, but in the minds of some, and in their minds, it means that if we did not have a large enough Army and Navy, there would probably be more disabled men in the end. You all do honor to the disabled, as I do, and I know that you will all act for them. This Congress which has spent billions for foreign relief and rehabilitation cannot refuse to authorize the comparatively small sum of $8,000,000 to provide cars for these grievously disabled veterans who are our first and primary charge.

During the frantic war days we promised to rehabilitate them. See that we fulfill that promise before adjournment 2 days off-before it is too late after adjournment

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on the so-called Van Zandt amendment close in 17 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

POWELL. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. Mr. Chairman, I move that debate on the so-called Van Zandt amendment close in 17 minutes.

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. FOLGER].

Mr. FOLGER. Mr. Chairman, it has been difficult for me to understand exactly the purport or import of the gentleman's amendment.

Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Under subsection (2) on page 5, in inducting persons, pursuant to paragraph 1 of this subsection, the President shall induct in the following order of priority:

The first deals with the Medical and Dental Corps; the second with those who participate in Army specialty training; and the third those who are less than 35 years of age

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Mr. Chairman, will

the gentleman yield? Mr. FOLGER. I yield.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Yesterday the House struck from the bill the entire provision that applies to doctors.

Mr. FOLGER. I understand that, but what change does your amendment make with respect to 3, 4, 5, and 6 on page 6?

Mr. VAN ZANDT. I might reply to the gentleman that all of page 6, down through line 17, has been deleted from the bill.

Mr. FOLGER. Does that mean that none of these people who have been in the service are exempt from the draft?

Mr. VAN ZANDT. It means that no doctors

Mr. FOLGER. I am not talking about doctors, but others who have been in the service, who are less than 35 and have had less than 90 days' service.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. The language the gentleman refers to relates only to doctors and no one else.

Mr. FOLGER. Now, what about your amendment?

Mr. VAN ZANDT. My amendment affects the language beginning on page 6, line 22, and deletes throughout the remainder of the bill all requirements of draft on the part of honorably discharged veterans of World War II, who had 12 months', or less, service. In other words, they cannot be drafted in accordance with the provisions of this bill.

Mr. FOLGER. Your amendment, then, takes them out from under the authority of this bill?

Mr. VAN ZANDT. That is correct. Mr. KILDAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOLGER. I yield. Mr. KILDAY. Of course, it means that they will have no obligation, no matter how short their service may have been, to enter the National Guard or the organized Reserves?

Mr. VAN ZANDY. That is correct.

Mr. KILDAY. In other words, a man who served 60 days would be exempt from all liability for service. A man who served less than 12 months would be exempt from further liability, whereas our bill provides that if he had had less than 12 months he must go into the Reserves or the National Guard. The bill passed by the Senate, if he had less than 18 months. It would eliminate from the bill all of those provisions which we had hoped would accelerate enlistments in the Reserve components. Is that correct?

Mr. VAN ZANDT. That is correct. The CHAIRMAN. The time of The time of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. Folgerl has expired.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH].

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, as I interpret the intent of the Committee on Armed Services in writing in this language as it now stands, it is to help build up the citizen Organized Reserves in the country who, in the last analysis, in the face of any major emergency, must be relied upon to defend the ccuntry. We cannot in a major emergency, rely upon a standing army or a standing professional air force or a starding professional navy. We must go to citizens, as we have done in every contest in which we have taken part.

The purpose here, to my mind, is perfectly legitimate. It does not inflict a hardship upon these veterans of World War II who had less than 12 months' service. It does not compel them to go into active service; rather it invites them, instead of going into active service, to join a unit of the National Guard or the Naval Reserve or the Marine Reserve or the Air Force Reserve and thus build up those elements with men who already have had some training in World War II. A man might have had only 2 or 3 months' service in World War II and never have left the training camp. They are good men. It is no reflection on them at all. They are now in their early twenties. It is fair to say that they have not suffered, but they can be of great use to the country if they are encouraged to go into the Organized Reserves. The gentleman from Pennsylvania says, I recollect, that there are 50,000 of them. That is a very important number for the Reserves. It would greatly help the National Guard if some of these World War veterans of short service would join up. It would be a great incentive for others to join and would help recruiting and help the efficiency of the National Guard.

Mr. GOFF. Mr. Chairman, will the

gentleman yield?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield.

Mr. GOFF. I heartily agree with what the gentleman says regarding the Reserves and National Guard. It is true also that these men of short service have received substantial benefits from the Government.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Indeed they have. They have enjoyed the GI bill of rights if they had over 90 days of service.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Also, it should be pointed out that in the case of the veterans covered by the gentleman's discussion it would not interfere with their vocation or education. It would just be extracurricular service.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Not at all; not at all. They could live at home-live like ordinary citizens.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. This would supplement the short period of service they had in the Army.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Certainly. Mr. KEARNEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield.

Mr. KEARNEY. Does the gentleman feel that by the passage of this amendment it would supplement enlistments in the National Guard?

Mr. WADSWORTH. It would be very helpful to the National Guard if this provision were retained, in my judgment.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired. The gentleman from New York [Mr. Powell is recognized for 31/2 minutes.

Mr. POWELL. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of this amendment because I am supporting anything that will strike from this bill any of those parts which together comprise the biggest tissue of lies ever forced upon the American people in peacetime. On Saturday I made a public statement that this bill was so important, regardless of what happened to other legislation, I was determined that we were going to have free and ample time to discuss it; and when the committee brought out a 3-hour-debate limitation I again, day before yesterday, emphasized that if there was any gag placed on the 5-minute rule I would oppose it even if it meant that no other business would be transacted in this Congress during this session.

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. POWELL. I will not.

The gentleman from New York has limited 7 speakers to 17 minutes. That is gagging this legislation.

Therefore, as of this minute I will object to every unanimous consent for the balance of this Congress. As of this minute there will be no unanimous-consent requests agreed to on this floor. You might as well pack your bags up and go

Also I am very happy to say-

Mr. KILDAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. POWELL. Not unless I get extra

Mr. KILDAY. Time has been fixed. It is not under my control.

Mr. POWELL. That is right.

I would like to say that the saying that the opposers of this bill are members of a party diametrically opposed to the bill marks another cheap subterfuge, another cheap trick to brand those of us who are not members of the American Labor Party, but who are honestly opposed to this bill.

The gentleman from New York, chairman of the Armed Services Committee, knows better than anyone else here, because the witnesses appeared before him, that the vast majority of the religious leaders of this Nation, Protestant and Catholic, are opposed to this bill. does not call Cardinal Daugherty a Wallaceite, does he? Does he mean to imply that the Reverend Ralph Sockman, of the Methodist Church, must be an American Labor Party member because he is opposed to this bill? Does he mean to imply that Chancelor Graham, of the University of North Carolina, who is the national president of the Council Against Conscription, is a leftwinger because he is opposed to this bill? No.

There are plenty of us on both sides of this House opposed to this bill who take our place along with Communists or pacifists, or anyone opposing this slavery. Thank God, we recaptured enough of our manhood late yesterday to rise up and defeat the brass-hat dictatorship of this House and put into this bill some things that we believed was honest by reducing the draft to 1 year. I have faith enough in this recaptured manhood to believe that when the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Shafer], brings his amendment before us we are going to pass it and, therefore, kill this Army-Fascist-dictatorship control of our national life.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Crow].

Mr. CROW. Mr. Chairman, I am quite surprised to hear for the first time someone expressing an interest in the Reserves. The gentleman from New York says that if we strike this out of the bill it will vitally affect the Reserves. Now, I do not believe that remark, because I have been a part of the Reserves since 1925. Anyone who is a veteran of World War II will gladly join the Reserves if the Regular Army will make it available to him.

We have been out of this war for over 2 years, almost 3 years, as a matter of fact, and the handling of the Reserve organization by the Army is a crime.

May I call your attention to the minority report. General Evans, head of the Reserve Officers' Association, testified before the committee that he had been working for 3 years trying to get somebody to do something for the Reserves. He testified further that he had been told by a member of the Regular Army that they were not interested in building up either the Organized Reserves or the National Guard, because they were going to get UMT and the draft.

Mr. Chairman, may I say as a member of the Reserve organization, as one man who served during the last war, and I am still a colonel in the Ordnance Reserve, that if we were to run into an emergency I assure you I would be ready to go tomorrow. I say that all members who are eligible for the Reserve will be glad to join if it is available, if the Army will take an interest in it and build it up.

Mr. Chairman, I do not think any man should be subject to two drafts. The first draft was on account of an emergency. There is no question about that. No one can claim differently.

Now, in connection with this draft I would like to know what the emergency is. Has anyone told us on this floor yet what it is?

Mr. Chairman, I am heartily in favor of the amendment to strike out the veterans of World War II from this draft and I hope it will pass.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired. All time has expired.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Van Zandt].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I have listened to the attacks of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Kilday] on Members who are opposed to this bill. Those insulting insinuations cannot intimidate an honest man.

Today is the anniversary of the Battle of Bunker Hill where American patriots started this Nation on its road to glorious achievements. I wonder if on that anniversary we are going to pass a bill that will fasten militarism upon the American people for all time to come?

I want to say to the gentleman from Texas and all the rest of you that no man in this House has fought communism any harder than I have. No man in this Congress has done more to turn the spotlight of merciless publicity onto Communist activities in this country than I have.

No man has taken more of their abuse than I am taking even today, because I am opposed to communism and everything for which communism stands. It is atheistic anarchy dedicated to the destruction of our Christian civilization. I am opposed to it and will do everything in my power to prevent its fastening itself upon the American people.

Is any Member of the Committee on Foreign Affairs present? If so, were you present and did you hear General Marshall this morning make the statement that there was no danger of war at this time, or words to that effect? If so, why do you not stand up here and give us General Marshall's statement? Why do you not tell the American Congress what General Marshall said?

The sponsors of this legislation are carrying on the same old tactics that were carried on after World War I. I was here then, and I heard that debate. They attempted then to fasten militarism upon the American people; and that is what this means. You will never live to see us get rid of it if this bill is passed and becomes law.

Not only that, but you are getting ready to draft these men to fight the battle of the UN, that unpredictable, international organization congregated up here in New York that is trying to get rid of the United States and force upon us a world government. Do not forget that. And, do not forget that the mothers and the fathers and the young men of this country are going to know that and they are going to ask you why when you go home.

Yesterday the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. Barden] made one of the most intelligent statements I have heard on this measure.

on this measure.

Oh, they say, "You voted for the 70-unit air force."

Certainly we did. But you want to subordinate that air force to a vast army dominated by men who probably are more interested in promotion than anything else.

If you want to defend this Nation, put that 70-unit air force into effect and, as the gentleman from North Carolina said, promote these men in the Air Force, raise their pay to where they can afford it, give them the power to employ the technicians necessary, and with the atomic bomb they will not only protect this Nation, but I dare say with America in that condition no world power would start a war in which we would likely be involved.

I have on my wall today a picture of a steel mill in Nagasaki after the atomic bomb was dropped on that city. It is simply a twisted mass of steel girders.

But they say, "Oh, we have to have ground forces." Yoy did not have to have ground forces in Nagasaki or Hiroshima, because it was even dangerous for anybody to go there for days and weeks and probably months after the bomb was dropped. But this young man, this soldier boy from my home county, took a picture of a steel mill a mile from where the bomb fell. As I said, it is a twisted mass of steel girders. No, we are living in an atomic age, and if we will take advantage of it, build and maintain the 70-group air force we have voted, and provide it with the funds to employ the necessary technicians, we will not need to wreck the Republic in this way.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to cover just about two points in regard to this matter that I think are rather significant so that you may consider them for what if anything you might think they are worth.

I will read hurriedly here, and then make a comment concerning the same, a statement that was made by the minority in the committee report, as follows:

General Evans, the executive director of the Reserve Officers' Association, told the Armed Services Committee that the Army had done "very little" to help the Reserves, had done "nothing" to furnish equipment, and did not contact or "put in units" the members of the Reserve. General Evans said—

"I am not talking about procurement. All I am urging and begging and what I have been doing for 3 years is to have somebody do something with what we have now."

General Evans agreed that, "there would be no need for a draft, UMT, or anything else if the Army had done its duty and supported the Guard and the Reserves, having made a sincere, earnest, and determined effort to build them up."

In the Senate hearings, General Evans said:

"There is an apparent policy which exists in the Pentagon today which says we will do very little with the Reserve program until the National Guard program is 100-percent organized. It cannot be 100-percent organized in the manner in which it is supposed to be, completely, until the passage of universal military training."

General Reckord of the National Guard told our House committee that General Marshall in 1944 directed him, as chairman of the Joint General Staff Committee, to set up the National Guard and the Reserves "based on the fact that Congress would give us UMT."

General Evans backed this up by saying he had heard the statement made that the Army leaders "felt that they need not build up either the Organized Reserves or the National Guard because they were going to get UMT or the draft."

The situation is simply this. It is as plain as the nose on your face, and here is the record showing it, that the Army has made no real effort to try to bring the Army up to the standard necessary, by the voluntary system. They just have made no effort along that line, yet they ask us to depart from the traditions of this country and to become a military conscription Nation like the European nations, before having done their part in attempting to get what they say is necessary by the voluntary method.

Let us examine another statement. I am a member of a Protestant church but I am not a Baptist. In my thinking, however, the Baptists are good folk. The Northern Baptists passed a resolution not long ago in their convention, meeting in Milwaukee, Wis., May 28, 1948, and in the resolution they said this significant thing, and I believe they are telling the truth because they are good people:

Whereas the determination of our international relations is now so much in the hands of military men that the Army and Navy Bulletin of January 18, 1947, stated, "Today the Army has virtual control of foreign affairs * * * the chain of control in diplomatic hot spots both in the execution of basic policy and in the formulation of ad hoc arrangements lies almost totally in the hands of the military authorities."

The Army and Navy Bulletin has the audacity to tell us that. Everybody knows it, it is as plain as day what is going on, but here they publish the fact that the foreign policy of our Government has been turned over to the Army. Are we going to go a step further and make it a cinch that you and I as representatives of the people no longer represent their interests along that line? I am afraid that is what we are doing today, if we take this step, and perhaps some others that will follow it. We cannot continue to do these things and properly represent our people and protect our people, in my judgment.

You may say that we need this program to have a big backlog of men. I tell you that if we get into another war all of us will have to get into it, every one of us. The civilians will be in it, and those who served in the last war will be in again. We already have a backlog of about 10,000,000 trained men. There is no crisis at this time the proponents do not even claim there is. These gentlemen, honest and sincere men, good American citizens, brainy men, who sit back here on both sides on the committee have made no showing that there is any such crisis in this country as would justify this kind of legislation. They just have not made such a showing. So let us defeat this bill. It just is not any good. All right, let us kill it.

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. Will the Chairman advise the Committee how many amendments are proposed to be offered to section 4?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair can advise the gentleman from New York that there are 14 amendments to section 4 at the Clerk's desk.

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that debate on section 4 and all amendments thereto close at 4 o'clock.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. Mr. Chairman, I want to be generous, as I know that some of these amendments are going to be accepted by the Committee. Therefore, I move that debate on section 4 and all amendments thereto close at 3:30.

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Gross].

Mr. FOWELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GROSS. I yield.

Mr. POWELL. I just want to say I am very happy that the chairman of the Committee on Armed Services has become magnanimous.

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Chairman, this is quite a devastating week, as I heard some Member say. We have to make decisions here that call for considerable courage. I have prayed a little bit about this bill and about this decision that I have to make. The conclusion I have come to is definite and clear, and I want everybody to know it. I am against this bill. Why am I against this bill? I will tell you. A little over 50 years ago when I was just a young fellow, the Standard Oil Co. laid a pipe line through our farm. In those days the ditches were all dug by hand, and hundreds of men slept in our barns and our sheds. For weeks and weeks and for a good while after that, those fellows went through there from time to time attending to their jobs and inspecting the line and one thing or other. Foreign immigration was at high tide in those days. I talked with some of those men over a period of years, as did my father. There was one reason why nearly every man had come to America, and that was to escape militarism in Europe. I am afraid that we are embarking here on a program in which our young people, my grandchildren and your grandchildren, will have nothing to look forward to but the military in the years to come. By the gods, I will not be a party to anything like that until I am convinced that an honest effort has been made to keep our armed forces properly filled by other means or until an emergency arises that makes it necessary. I do not believe it is right from any angle. I want to suggest something else. In computing our manpower, I find that in the age group from 19 through $25, we have an esti-mated pool of only 1,300,000 qualified physically fit men. At the same time we have a pool in that same age group of 1,686,000 physically unfit men who I think ought to be taken into consideration. I have heard a great many remarks made about Russia and China and their great war pool, and the great manpower pool that they have. I wonder why this Government which wants to do everything for everybody in the world does not take this IV-F group, these physically unfit people and put those, at least who are redeemable and can be made strong, into camps and give them a year's training or a year of physical building up? Has it ever occurred to you that those fellows stay at home and that they are the ones who get married and raise families that many of them are physically unfit to raise and physically not qualified to support those families after they have brought them into the world. I believe we could make a definite contribution to our manpower, to our strength, and be a greater potential threat to any aggressor nation if that is what we want to do, by building up our own manpower rather than creating a situation here where maybe some day our sons and daughters will try to go to another country to get away from the military here. When that time comes, they will have no country to go to, just as the millions who came to this country fifty and more years ago, had no other country to go to.

I am giving you some food for thought. I am going to everlastingly be against it until I am convinced that the Army is dealing honestly with us and that there is an emergency arising that makes it necessary.

So far, even the proponents of this legislation have not claimed that an emergency exists that would warrant putting the selective service act into operation in peacetime. The whole program is something new and unheard of during our long history.

The fact is that the Army is the only branch of our armed service which has urged the passage of this bill. The Army has created a scarcity of manpower by raising the physical requirements to the point that many men who would volunteer for service cannot pass the physical tests. The recruiting service, on the other hand, has admittedly made little or no effort to maintain the required number of men in the Army.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GRoss] has expired.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HOFFMAN. When the time for debate was limited, were not those on their feet at the time to be given time? The CHAIRMAN. There was no such

The CHAIRMAN. It was not done in The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Poage].

Mr. POAGE. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which is at the Clerk's desk. The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Poags: Page 4, line 21, after the word "birth", strike out the period, and insert the following: "Provided further. That no person who, after he has attained the twenty-first anniversary of the date of his birth, and who subsequent to July 1, 1949, becomes a member of a Reserve component mentioned in subsection (D) of this act, shall thereafter, without his consent, be inducted for service under this act, so long as he remains a member of such Reserve component."

Mr. POAGE. Mr. Chairman, at the outset I want to say it is my expectation to vote for this bill. I do not offer this amendment with any idea of destroying the legislation, defeating it, or delaying it. I believe that this amendment, if adopted, will strengthen the defense of America, because I have a great deal more confidence in the component Reserve units than some of the members of the committee seem to have. I believe that our National Guard is a very effective and a very important part of our national defense. I fear that we have not given enough attention to this important element of our armed forces. I also fear that this bill does not give enough attention to the rights of the individual young man who is called upon to make sacrifices for his country.

I think it is the unquestionable right of the Government and the people collectively to call upon any citizen to make sacrifices to see that his country is perpetuated, and that, as I understand it, is the purpose of this legislation. But it seems to me that any necessary sacri-fice should be divided as equitably as possible.

Under this bill, as it is now written, any young man is subject to draft for seven long years. Any young man who becomes 19 years of age may be drafted that year. He may be drafted when he is 20, when he is 21, but it may happen that he will not be drafted. He may be 24, and he is still subject to draft. He may be 25 and still be subject to the Until he attains the age of 26 years, he is still subject to being taken by the scruff of the neck and haled from his civilian avocation and placed in the armed services of the United States. With that prospect confronting him, how can he expect to establish a home? How can he expect to establish a business? How can he expect to receive the kind of consideration for employment at the hands of private industry or at the hands of the United States Government, if you please, to which he is entitled?

It seems to me that in all fairness to these boys whom we are calling upon to protect us, that we should in turn make some sacrifices in order to give them a square deal. Why should we hold a sword of Damocles over their heads for seven long years? Why should we not say to the armed forces of the United States: "When Johnny Jones becomes 19 years of age, if you need him, go out and take him. We give you that power. When he is 19 or 20, or until he is 21, you may still go out and grab him, no matter what he is doing, but when he has held himself in readiness for 2 years, and you have not called him, he shall have the opportunity to secure his future by joining and serving in a Reserve unit.

We say that it is the duty of that boy to serve his country, if he is needed. The amendment recognizes that duty, but surely if he is not needed there should be no desire to impose any useless burden on anyone. If the Army does not call a boy for two full years, it is pretty plain that they do not need him. If he is not needed, let him go with no strings on his future. When that boy gets to be 21 years old we should at least be fair enough to that boy to say that if he is still willing to serve his country, although his country has not called him, if he is willing to join a Reserve unit, if he is willing to join a National Guard unit, where he will probably do the Nation just as much good as he would in the standing Army, then he could be sure that he was not going to be called out unless we went to war. Then he could found a home, he could safely go into business or seek a job without any handicap. At least then he can have some security, at least when he is 21 he will not then be faced with an uncertainty as to his future if he makes a home or establishes himself in business.

The amendment provides very carefully that he cannot join this Reserve component during the next year. The purpose of that is to give the armed services a year in which to get those 330,000 young men who the committee told us did not serve in World War II but who were subject to draft and who were never called. This makes it certain that the Army shall have the opportunity to go out and get those boys that it did not call during World War II who were eligi-Under this amendment you still have the opportunity to call these boys who were not called during the recent war. On the contrary, all of these men would be subject to the draft unconditionally for the next year, and if they did not join the Guard, they would remain subject to draft until they reached 26. It would, however, give the younger boys a little protection and security so that they will not be tied up with uncertainty for a very important part of their lives. The young men of America should and will cooperate with their Government and with the armed services, but just as surely the Government and the armed services owe a high duty to cooperate with the young men who are asked to sacrifice a part of their lives. The Government should not ask for useless sacrifices

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. Andrews] is recognized.

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word in order that I may calmly ask the gentleman from Texas a question or two.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Chairman, I have a preferential motion at the desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has already recognized the gentleman from New York [Mr. ANDREWS].

Mr. HOFFMAN. If I stay on my feet will I get recognition?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan will be recognized in due

The gentleman from New York will proceed.

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. Mr. Chairman, I merely want to ask the gentleman from Texas, does his amendment defer induction?

Mr. POAGE. Not at all; it leaves induction just as it is at present in the bill until the boys are 21. When they become 21 they may join a Reserve component or they may at their option remain subject to the draft. It is recognized under the amendment that if a man joins a Reserve component after he becomes 21, and as long as he remains in that Reserve component he is deferred.

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. The Reserves are deferred under the provisions of the bill: also the National Guard.

Mr. POAGE. Except a boy has to join up before he is  $18\frac{1}{2}$ . He gets no protection under the bill by joining the National Guard after he is 21.

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. Eighteen and one-half years is the figure. Mr. POAGE. That is right.

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. The gentleman from Texas says that if the young man joins the National Guard or the Reserve Corps he should be deferred. We are giving the young man up until the time he is 181/2 years to join the National Guard of his own State, or the Reserve Corps up until that age, and following that age, he is deferred under this act up to the ceiling limits of the Reserve or the National Guard.

I think there is no one single feature that will do more to build up the National Guard and the Reserve Corps than that one thing.

Mr. POAGE. You give the boy a 6month period of time while he is still a high-school boy, while he is 18 to 18½, before he has felt the responsibilities of life, before he has been faced with the realities of making a living for himselfyou give him that 6 months during which to make up his mind; but after he is 21 and takes on responsibilities you give him no such opportunity.

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. After he is 17. He can come into the Guard at 17.

Mr. POAGE. But that is still younger. You require him at those tender years to make a vital decision that will involve his whole life. I am asking that you give him the same opportunity after he has assumed the responsibilities of manhood at 21. Surely there is little to be gained for the country to keep every man between 21 and 26 in a state of uncertainty, and especially when that uncertainty can be removed and the National Guard can be strengthened at the same time. Surely the chairman of the committee would want to create as little hardship as possible.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word and rise in favor of the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I was very much interested this morning in picking up the paper to find in big, black headlines, Left-Wing Filibuster Aims to Kill the Draft." I want to know if there is anyone in this House who would ever say that I was a left-winger? I have never known the time when I felt that anybody could say that I was anything but a right-winger and so far to the right they thought I could not even get in the middle of the road. If there are any leftwingers here who are against this bill. they cannot be against it any more than I am. So the fellow who wrote that big newspaper headline is just off the beam.

Mr. HOLIFIELD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. I yield to the gentleman,

Mr. HOLIFIELD. I thank the gentleman. I just want to say to the gentleman he is suffering from guilt by association as contained in the Mundt bill.

Mr. RICH. Oh, no. I have never been a New Dealer and I hope that I never will be. I have been against the New Deal and the squandering that has been going on under the New Deal ever since it started. Just look at the mess they got the Nation into.

Mr. Chairman, this bill will get this Nation into a very bad situation. If this bill is passed, we will have a military Government for a certainty. This is only the beginning of completing the wedge that is going to cause our country to suffer the ills of a military dictatorship.

Now, let us see what happened to countries that had a military dictatorship

Ask yourself the following questions: First. Did military training in Germany keep Germany from going to war?

Second. Did conscript military training keep Hitler from invading Poland, Holland, Denmark, Belgium, Norway, France, Russia, north Africa, and so forth?

Third. Did conscript military training in Japan keep Japan out of war?

Fourth. Did conscript military training keep Japan from attacking Pearl Harbor?

Fifth. Did conscript military training help Germany and Japan to win World War II?

Sixth. Did conscript military training in France keep France from being in-Seventh. Has conscript military training in Europe kept the peace, prevented wars, and saved lives?

Eighth. Did the countries having conscript military training lose less men than the United States without military

Our military leaders admit there is no defense against the atomic bomb and little against chemical warfare except a powerful air force.

I have read a very fine editorial in the February 14 issue of Labor, part of which follows:

This newspaper is for defense which will insure our land against any attack, but believes peacetime conscription will weaken in-stead of strengthen us.

In that opinion, we are supported by all history, and by many able army and navy officers who dare not speak out publicly, be-cause they have been "muzzled" by a few

"brass hats" at the top, and by the administration.

No one can point to any country which was ever saved by conscription. On the con-trary, France, Germany, Japan and other countries which long had it have gone down to ignominious defeat. Free Uncle Sam has emerged the victor in every clash with nations which regimented their citizens in time of peace.

Labor believes this country should maintain the strongest Air Force and Navy in the world, and an adequate professional Army, trained to perfection in the use of modern weapons, instead of a "mass Army" of ill-trained conscripts.

Peacetime conscription has destroyed democracy in every land where it was tried. It starts with drafting boys, but inevitably expands to conscription of workers and women, until the whole nation is militarized.

All these steps are already being proposed. The whole program will come "as sure as shooting," once we take the first step.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Poage].

The question was taken; and the Chair being in doubt, the Committee divided, and there were-ayes 6, noes 30.

So the amendment was rejected. Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Bates of Massachusetts: Page 6, line 17, after letter "(d)", insert the number "(1)" in parentheses, and after line 21 insert the following new paragraph:

"(2) Any enlisted member of any Reserve component of the armed forces, may during the effective period of this act, apply for a period of service equal to that prescribed in subsection (b) of this section and his application shall be accepted: Provided, That his physical and mental fitness for such service t the standard prescribed by the head of the department concerned; and Provided further. That active service performed pursuant to this section shall not prejudice his status as such member of such Reserve com-ponent."

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, this amendment simply provides that any man in the Organized Reserve who may wish to volunteer, whether he be in the Navy, Marine Corps or any other Reserve, may apply to serve the same period of time prescribed within the provisions of the act, and that his application shall be accepted. In other words, it just gives a man an opportunity to volunteer. There are tens of thousands of young men in the Organized Unless this amendment is Reserves. passed, where they want to volunteer, there is no certainty of their application being accepted. I have talked to the members of the committee and the committee is in favor of this amendment.

Mr. VINSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. VINSON. There is no objection on this side to the amendment.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RICH. If you had passed some of the amendments you are now putting on this bill and told the War Department about it a year ago, you would have had all the men you wanted, and you would not have to go out and conscript anybody. The trouble with the Army is that they have just prohibited the people from enlisting, and now you want to go out and do the thing in this country that was never done before, and that is, taking young men and throwing them into the Army against their will. It is about time that the members of the military committee woke up to see just what the Army has been doing.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, this amendment provides that any man serving in the Organized Reserve may volunteer for service, and if he does, that his application must be accepted.

Mr. CROW. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. CROW. Is it not a fact that, under the present law, he can enlist in the Organized Reserve?

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Under the present law, he may enlist in the Organized Reserve, and under the provisions of this bill, he may do so, but if he is a member of the Naval Organized Reserve or the Marine Organized Reserve and makes application for active duty, his application shall be approved if he meets the physical qualifications.

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. I will say to my good friend from Massachusetts that there has never been a time when he could not volunteer. This could be accomplished without his amendment. However, there is some question about the Navy and the Marine Corps, and the committee will be glad to accept the gentleman's amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BATES].

The amendment was agreed to. Mr. SHAFER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SHAFER:

On page 4, line 3, after the word "act", insert a colon in lieu of the period and insert the following proviso: "Provided, That no person shall be inducted under this act before January 31, 1949: Provided further, That no person shall be inducted under this act on or after January 31, 1949, unless the President shall first find that the requisite manpower strengths of the armed forces have not been attained or maintained by an intensified voluntary enlistment campaign: And provided further, That the Secretary of the Army, the Secretary of the Navy, and the Secretary of the Air Force are hereby authorized and directed to initiate and carry forward an intensified voluntary enlistment For the purposes of such campaign and notwithstanding any other provisions of law (a) original enlistments in the armed forces for periods of 2 years shall be accepted from among all age groups suitable for military service, with such enlistment privileges as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Army, the Secretary of the Navy, and the Secretary of the Air Force, as the case may be, which shall be the same or similar to the flar to the enlistment privileges now pro-vided for enlistments for periods of more than 2 years, and (b) reenlistments in the armed forces for periods of 1 or 2 years, at the option of the person so enlisted, shall be accepted with such reenlistment privileges as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Army, the Secretary of the Navy, and the Secretary of the Air Force, as the case may be, which shall be the same or similar to the enlistment privileges now provided for reenlistments for longer periods, and the Secretary of the Army, Secretary of the Navy, and Secretary of the Air Force are further directed to report to the Congress before January 31,

Mr. VINSON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the amendment is not germane.

Mr. SHAFER. Will the gentleman withhold the point of order?

Mr. VINSON. I will reserve the point of order, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. Mr. Chairman, may I say that the chairman would have made no point of making a point of order against the amendment. He has discussed the amendment with the gentleman from Michigan and made it perfectly clear that he did not intend to make a point of order against it.

I call the attention of the Clerk to the fact that the amendment should now be offered to the proviso adopted by the committee yesterday deferring the induction for 75 days. It is the proviso at the top of page 4.

Mr. KILDAY. I do not understand that any statement was made that the gentleman is opposed to the point of Mr. ANDREWS of New York. I make no point of order against the amendment.

KILDAY. But the gentleman from Georgia has made a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia has reserved the point of Mr. SHAFER. Mr. Chairman, I am sure my good friend and colleague from Georgia [Mr. VINSON] will not insist on his point of order after I have explained my amendment. In fact, I do not believe his point of order would hold.

What this amendment does is to postpone the induction of youths under this bill until January 31, 1949, in order to provide the armed services with sufficient time to attain manpower objectives through voluntary enlistments rather than by conscription.

The proposed amendment has the virtue of directing the secretaries of the respective services to initiate an intensified voluntary enlistment campaign, specifying that during such campaign the services shall accept 2-year enlistments and 1- and 2-year reenlistments. The amendment further provides that the services must report the results of such a campaign to the Congress by January 31, 1949. Then if the President determines that manpower requirements have not been attained he shall proclaim such and order the induction of men if he deems the situation requires such action.

Many members feel that an intensifled recruiting campaign, such as provided in this amendment, will provide sufficient manpower without resorting to conscription. The provision allowing 1-and 2-year reenlistments would be especially beneficial, it is thought. Many Members feel that the services should have concentrated on reenlistments in the past. It costs nothing to train men who desire to reenlist. If such men are accepted for less than 3 years, as has been required, it is believed, that thousands and thousands of dollars in training costs would have been saved.

This amendment, Mr. Chairman, extends the time for the enactment of this legislation only a few short weeks beyond the date the committee has recommended. The fact that the committee unanimously decided to amend this bill to extend the enactment date 90 days is adequate evidence that this is not an emergency measure. In fact, nowhere in the hearings can anyone find testimony of any of our defense officers to the effect that there is an emergency or that war is imminent. That being true. let us use conscription as we have in the past-as the last resort. My amendment will provide this.

Mr. VINSON. Mr. Chairman, upon further examination of the amendment. I withdraw my point of order against the amendment

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is withdrawn.

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, as I said, I have no intention of making a point of order against the amendment. I want to be reasonable and calm in the busy, closing days of this session. I want to make factual statements to you. I do not believe the majority of the Members on my side of the aisle want to throw this subject open to the new Congress in January with all the hurly-burly. Admitting also that there may be a Re-publican President, I do not think they want him to deal with that at the out-

So far as the recruiting program is concerned with reference to the point system of qualification, 170 points are the maximum and 80 points is the passing mark showing the young man's adaptability to learning. It is not a question of intelligence, you will realize. As you have possibly heard, I failed in the test given to me in the Committee on Rules by the distinguished gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Brown]. Of course, he only gave me the 6 most difficult questions out of the 150 questions. There was very little choice. He failed to give me the other questions. The average man coming into the service only has to get 31 of those 150 questions correct to qualify. If the 80 point mark were low-ered to 70 in the last 2 or 3 years of an enlistment, the Army would only get 1,000 more men per month. That is all they would get by lowering it to 70. Statistics showed all during the war, and have shown since the war, that within this group, when they did lower it from 80 to 70, were most of the courts-martial cases, most of the cases of men getting hurt, and most of the cases of those who were not good soldiers.

The gentleman from Michigan IMr. SHAFER] is a good newspaperman. They get the kind of men that are not good in your print shop.

I do not believe this amendment should be adopted.

Yesterday the House, by an overwhelming vote, showed that it was in favor of deferring the action on this bill, assuming it is passed, for 75 days. All this amendment provides is to throw it into January, to a new Congress, at the first start-off of business, to a new President, with something more about the recruiting question. One million three hundred thousand men have been enlisted since the war-the most remarkable record of enlistments in the history of any country.
Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, will the

gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. I yield. Mr. RICH. If you leave this to the new Congress, you will not need to worry about what the new Congress will do. If you pass this bill, you will have a new Congress. Just remember what the peo-ple of this country will do. That is one reason why you do not want to run again.

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. Now, I understand the gentleman's point of

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York [Mr. An-DREWS] has expired.

Mr. HAVENNER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, in the time allotted to me during general debate, I endeavored to assemble consecutively from the record of the committee hearings the evidence which has convinced me, as a member of the committee, that this bill is not necessary. But I was unable to complete my statement, and I have taken this time in order to recapitulate my arguments.

All of the Members of this House ought to be familiar with the reports made by the publicity and propaganda subcommittee of the House Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, following their investigation of the participation of Federal officials of the War Department in publicity and propaganda relating to universal military training. For the purpose of this Rec-ORD, I want to read the subcommittee report which was transmitted to the Atorney General with a letter. The report ends with the following statement:

Your committee reports its firm conclusion that, on the basis of the evidence at hand, the War Department, its personnel, and civilian employees have gone beyond the limits of their proper duty of providing fac-tual information to the people and the Congress, and have engaged in propaganda supported by taxpayers' money to influence legislation now pending in the Congress.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAVENNER. I cannot yield. My time is short.

Mr. HOFFMAN. That was a unanimous report.

Mr. HAVENNER. That report was unanimous, and it was signed by the following Members: Hon. FOREST A. HAR-NESS, Hon. JAMES W. WADSWORTH, Hon. HENRY J. LATHAM, Hon. CARTER MANASCO. and Hon. J. FRANK WILSON.

Mr. NICHOLSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAVENNER. I cannot yield now.

I do not have time.

To sum up my previous statements, Mr. Chairman, I submit that the failure of the National Military Establishment to make any adequate provision for an efficient Reserve and National Guard in the postwar period, the arbitrary restrictions imposed by the Department of the Army upon the voluntary recruitment system, the amazing refusal of the military high command to comply with the mandate of Congress to transfer millions of men to a Reserve status after World War II-and, mind you, the specific direction of Congress was deliberately evaded and disobeyed by the Army in that respect-and the improper expenditure of tax funds by the War Department on propaganda in support of universal military training, clearly demonstrate that the insistent demand from military sources for the enactment of this bill is not based upon any grave emergency which imperils our national security, but is the culmination of a long-term, carefully conceived campaign to compel the Congress to approve some kind of compulsory military service at this time.

Mr. Chairman, the real purpose of this bill is not our national defense. If I believed that such a fateful step were necessary for that purpose I would vote for it willingly, as I voted for the Selective Service Act of 1940; but I am convinced that the purpose of this legislation is to transform the traditional free democratic society of America into a disciplined state and to impose upon our liberty-loving people a system of military control for all time in the

And I want to point out again what said the other day, Mr. Chairman, that the American people have been deceived into the belief that this is a temporary measure and yet the record is full of forthright statements from every spokesman for the National Military Establishment that the purpose is to continue this draft, if it is enacted, indefinitely until we have universal military training.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word and ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan is recognized.

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. We have a number of amendments at the desk. I want to be fair to those who have offered the amendments. At my suggestion debate was limited on this section to 3:30. In fairness to those who offered the amendment I believe it would be well for the Chair first to recognize proponents and opponents of real amendments. There should be an opportunity afforded to consider the amendments.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from New York that he is in a position to close debate on any amendment any time he so wishes.

Mr. POWELL. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Michigan yield to the gentleman from New York for a parliamentary inquiry?

Mr. HOFFMAN. I do not.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan will proceed.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Chairman, I have here several of these posters that were given to me by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Shafer]. They are at the desk. I hope the Members will look at them. They indicate that the Army has never made a worth-while effort to get men to enlist. We know very well that during the war General Hershey paid no attention whatever to the Tydings amendment. He admitted to me personally that he wanted the men and he was going to get the men, and we all know that he was doing it regardless of any law the Congress wrote.

The Army can get the men they want if they go about it the right way but not when they put out things like this. Here is a picture of a desert scene with the words "Ready, Aim, Fry" on it. Now, who is going to enlist when promised that he will "fry" if he does.

That might well be the impression that the average young man, taking a glance at the poster as he walked by, would get.

True enough, there is a lot of small print on it that tells a different story, but they put it in small print and a fellow comes along, takes a look at the picture, he does not stop to read the print.

But let me tell you another reason I believe the Army is not following a course to encourage enlistments. officers and the men of the Army are just as honest and just as moral as those of any other group, but let me give you a little sidelight on what they do sometimes and how the high command stands back of some of their practices. Just a few years ago there came down from the Midwest a young lady and, like tourists who come here on a sight-seeing trip, she went down to the War College. There she met one of those handsome officers all dressed up in his fine clothes and brass buttons and he courted her as Army officers sometimes do, impetuously and vigorously, and they got married. And later on, lo and behold, she discovered that he had a wife in Washington, and so it was necessary for her Congressman to do what he could. The result-the first wife down here obtained a divorce so that the second marriage-and they were remarried. That situation was called to the attention of the officers down here, and what was their answer? "Oh, well, we do not try to regulate the private morals of our officers." Fine, was it not? Nor is that the whole story.

The second wife finally obtained a divorce. In the meantime she had learned, and the Army officers had been advised, that the officer she married, in addition to having a wife when he entered into the second marriage, had stolen the papers and the medals which he was wearing from a brother officer who had been lost in the First World War. He was parading under an assumed name. He was carried on the Army rolls under an assumed name, but the Army did nothing about it. He finally left the service.

There is a provision in the statutes which states than an officer may be disciplined for conduct unbecoming a gentleman, but it seems, in some instances at least, in two of which I have personal knowledge and the records, to be a dead letter.

Now, there is a certain group of, shall we say, old-fashioned mothers who are not anxious to see their boys put under what they term "evil influence." have little, if any, patience with instructors who ridicule and poke fun at boys and young men who have respect for women and treat them as they want their mothers and sisters to be treated.

Let me give you a little story of the record of an officer who is here at Fort Belvoir and who is acting as an instructor for the youth of our land.

He was married; his wife had a child. She obtained a divorce. He married again, and again there was a divorce or annulment. Then shortly thereafterand he is still a young man-he concluded he would get married again. His second divorce was obtained in October of 1943-on the 14th I think it was. On the 15th of October he made application for a marriage license in the Ninth District Court at Rapides Parish, La., and took oath that he had not been previously married. Now the young lady he was marrying for his third wife was a Catholic, and on the 16th day of October 1943, he was united in marriage by Chaplain L. J. Matuszewski, reputed to be a Catholic priest.

On the 11th day of October 1943, in his deposition to obtain a divorce from his second wife, he testified positively that he had been married on September 27, 1938. On the 15th day of October he subscribed and swore to a statement that he had not been previously married. He admitted that that statement was not true, but states that the clerk who granted the license filled it in hastily and so the inspector general concludes that there is no basis for the assumption that the officer deliberately made a false

The situation was called to the attention of those in command and to the attention of the personnel officer and of General Royall. What was the answer? The answer, in substance, was that inasmuch as the third wife, who is a Catholic, learned prior to her marriage to the officer that he had been married before there really was no harm done. The fact that he deceived the priest and that he lied under oaths seems not to have been considered as anything reprehensible.

The officer's Army record shows that he claimed legal residence in Alabama, but that having lived in Indiana for a little more than a year he thought himself justified, when he wanted to obtain a divorce in Indiana, in giving Indiana as his place of residence, and so the inspector general concludes that no onus is attached to this officer who, according to the record, lied on two occasions, and that there is nothing to indicate that his conduct was unbecoming that of an officer.

Well, that may be the view of the inspector general, but the old-fashioned mothers of America just do not condone that kind of conduct and they just do not think that that kind of an officer is one who should instruct their boys as to Army life.

No one would condemn the Army or any group or class for the misdeeds of a very few. On the other hand, when specific instances, substantiated by indisputable evidence, are called to the attention of the Army officers, they are in duty bound to clean up the bad spots.

The Army knew about General Meyers, but it did nothing about it until the mess became so bad that something had to be done

The officer in Michigan who, while drunk, shot his chauffeur, was demoted, but he was never adequately punished.

The Navy had a stinking mess down at Annapolis, but it promptly cleaned it up.

Just why those in charge at Fort Belvoir should continue to cover up repeated infractions of their own rules, as in this particular case they have, and why they should assign to instruct young men an officer who does not deny that he did, under oath, fail to tell the truth, whose only defense, according to his own statement, is that he did it inadvertently, is something the average citizen cannot understand.

There are other reasons why the Army is not getting the number of enlistments that it desires. American boys are subject to a peculiar disease—if it may be termed a disease. Sometime between the years of 15 and 20 many of them have an attack of what is known as big head. Some of us never get over it. The Army seems to have a larger percentage of those who never recovered than some other groups. The charge has often been made that altogether too many Army officers are snobs. Of the merit of that charge I know nothing. During the war I do know that General Hershey's group, charged with the conscription of men, paid little attention to the law-I refer now to the Tydings amendments-the Congressional Record carries plenty of evidence showing specific violations of the intent of Congress and the law as written.

I do know that many a fine young man, desirous of enlisting and fighting for his country, was grievously disappointed, disillusioned by the petty, unnecessary duties imposed upon enlisted men. The young men of America, convinced of the need, will enlist, fight, and if need be, die, in defense of their homes and their country. They are, however, impatient—and thank God for that—of needless arbitrary discipline imposed merely to keep a man busy. Strange as it may seem to those in high authority, the average young man cannot, without necessity, be molded like a piece of clay or putty into a machine which snaps to attention, salutes and bows the head to an individual whose only claim to obedience and respect is that he has rank.

If those in charge of recruiting men for the Army will take a few lessons in human nature; will get out in civilian life for say 6 months; earn a livelihood as do millions of other Americans; familiarize themselves with the thoughts and the ways of civilians, they will be more than successful in their efforts to get the youth of America into the Army of which, after all, we are all extremely proud.

It is disheartening and discouraging to see a few who, for want of a better name, may be called "brass hats," do so much to injure the service in the eyes of the people who furnish them food, clothing, and shelter.

I would suggest to the Committee on Military Affairs, either revise that definition of gentlemanly conduct or take some action in reference to some of these fellows who are teaching these young boys

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired, Mr. KILDAY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I was very much interested in the remarks of the gentleman from Michigan about the morals and what not of the officers of the Regular Army. I would like to pose the question, How did they become officers of the Regular Army? The vast majority of them became officers because some Congressman nominated them to West Point.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. KILDAY. I imagine that you have appointed some of those who are in trouble. Mine are not in trouble.

Mr. HOFFMAN. No. I never did appoint any of those, and thank God I have not been that unlucky. But these are old gray-haired men passing upon their conduct. Does the gentleman contend that they were not all right when they went in? They are what they are now because your institutions made them that Mr. ANDERSON of California. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KILDAY. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. ANDERSON of California. May I point out those officers did a whale of a good job in winning the war.

Mr. KILDAY. Why, certainly they did. There is no question about that, Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Chairman, will

Mr KILDAY. I do not yield.

the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOFFMAN. I will tell you about those officers.

Mr. KILDAY. The gentleman is not interested in perfecting this bill, he is not interested in whether there is a necessity existing in the United States today for this sort of proposal. The gentleman is interested in talking about such things as he spoke about a while ago. I am not interested in the extrasexual affairs of Army officers. Maybe the gentleman is. I am a family man.

Now, to get back to the amendment. What does it do? It provides that there shall be no inductions before January 31, 1949. I congratulate those of you who are opposed to this bill; but those of you who are seeking an easy way out, just vote for this amendment.

There has been a great deal of talk here about things which are not included in this amendment. They were included in the amendment offered yesterday.

Let us get an idea of the thinking of the gentleman from Michigan who offered this amendment. On yesterday he had in the amendment that the pay of the enlisted personnel of the Army shall be increased 10 percent. What would that have meant? In the last appropriation bill for the pay for the enlisted personnel of the Army there was $2,300,000,-000. If you increase that 10 percent. then you would have an increase of $230,000,000 based on the present personnel of the Army. An incentive? course not. They are in the Army. They are bound by contract to stay in the Army, and under the thinking that he had at that time you would have had here an additional $230,000,000 for the people already in the Army.

Mr. SHAFER. Mr. Chairman, will the

gentleman yield?

Mr. KILDAY. I yield to the gentlemen from Michigan.

Mr. SHAFER. I observe at this point that that is not included in the amendment that I have offered today.

Mr. KILDAY. I so stated.

Mr. SHAFER. And I see no reason why the gentleman should discuss the amendment that I offered yesterday which I explained to the House was offered hurriedly because I did not have a chance to give it much study.

Mr. KILDAY. I so stated when I began to discuss the amendment. But it shows the knowledge that the gentleman has, the research that he has made, and how firmly implanted he is on the situation which exists in the armed forces.

You are either for the bill or you are against the bill, and postponing it until January 31 serves no purpose. Now, the committee came in here yesterday and offered an amendment which took everything out of this amendment that would be of any substance. Somebody here wanted to place the responsibility on the President, and we did that yesterday, so that the substance of the amendment is gone.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last three words. Mr. Chairman, I am not going to take 5 minutes at this time, because I hope

Mr. Chairman, I am not going to take 5 minutes at this time, because I hope to speak briefly before we close the debate on this measure. But, I rise at this moment to corroborate the testimony that has been given here by the very able gentleman from California [Mr. HAVENNER]. Only day before yesterday, in Denver, Colo., Brig. Gen. E. A. Evans, of Washington, D. C., director of the Reserve Officers Association, gathering in annual convention, said in this interview—and I want you all to listen closely:

Our military leaders have been sitting for 3 years watching a highly trained, combathardened reserve force disintegrate. The Navy has done something but not enough. They all have lost the cream of the enlisted men of World War II who joined the Reserves for a 3-year hitch. The average R3-serve officer is disgusted, his morale is way down. We have no real Reserve force which could be rallied for national defense in an emergency.

That is not a pacifist talking. That is a general who is the director of the Reserve Officers' Association of this country. Listen further to this article. Melvin Maas who for 18 years served in this House, the ranking minority member of the Committee on Naval Affairs, and a colonel in the Marine Corps in this last war, a great American speaks:

Melvin Maas, former Minnesota House Member and a colonel in the Marine Corps Reserve, declared, "In the last war, 98 percent of the fighting was done by civilians. Yet in peacetime today, less than 2 percent of the armed forces' budget is devoted to civilian defense activities."

Mr. Chairman, I repeat, these are only one of the objections to this bill:

First, the shameful and disgraceful treatment the Army has dealt out to the Reserve Corps.

Second, the way they have ignored our National Guard, which the major general who is director of the National Guard, says the enactment of this bill will annihilate and destroy. And remember, these are generals speaking to you.

Third, their refusal or unwillingness to provide proper and adequate housing for old sergeants and enlisted men with Fourth, their refusal to accept enlistments for 1 year or 18 months, insisting on taking men for only 3, 4, or 5 years.

on taking men for only 3, 4, or 5 years. Fifth, their raising the standard, or the points, from 59 in wartime to 80 now, where, I repeat, only a classical scholar in Greek and Latin or a Philadelphia lawyer could pass.

The Army has been turning down a third of all applications for enlistment. The Navy and the Air Corps have been turning down more than 50 percent, because they can get all they need through the volunteer system.

These five things are sufficient proof that this bill is totally unnecessary, yet here we are seriously contemplating saddling upon the American people control of the youth of this country, the old European creed of peacetime conscription, outworn, outmoded, and discredited, which has led every Nation that has followed it down the road to war and inevitable ruin. Shall we now transplant the Prussian philosophy from Potsdam to the Pentagon?

What in the world is the matter with us? We passed the 70-group air force recently and we passed two other bills 2 months ago in this body. We have not had time enough yet to feel the effects of that legislation, that is, the legislation for inactive duty pay and secondly for retirement. Both those acts will stimulate volunteer enlistments.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New York [Mr. Andrews].

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. Mr. Chairman, regardless of what my good friend the gentleman from Missouri has just stated, an examination of the hearings will disclose that Major General Reckord, the Chief of the National Guard, representing the National Guard in a full and open statement before the Committee on Armed Services said that the passage of this bill would be the passage of the single greatest measure ever passed through Congress for the benefit of the National Guard.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. I hold in my hand a letter signed by Milton A. Reckord, who is the Adjutant General for the State of Maryland and the head of the National Guards of the United States, in which he approves the draft bill.

Mr. VINSON. Mr. Chairman, will the

gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. I yield to the distinguished minority leader.

Mr. VINSON. Will the gentleman from New York try to fix some time when we can vote on the Shafer amendment?

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Shafer] suggested that the sooner his amendment was voted on the better it would be.

Mr. Chairman, for the benefit of other Members who have amendments here and wish to be heard on them, I move that all debate on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Shafer] close in 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion.

The question was taken; and the Chair being in doubt, the Committee divided and there were—ayes 65, noes 53.

Mr. BUSBEY, Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

mand teners.

Tellers were refused.

So the motion was agreed to.

Mr. CROW. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAÎRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CROW. Mr. Chairman, I understand there are 19 amendments on the Clerk's desk. This one amendment has taken so much time, I would like to ask whether we will be allowed to be heard on our amendments.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that he sincerely hopes that the Committee will get to all the amendments in time so that Members may be heard.

Mr. CROW. Mr. Chairman, I understand that debate will close at 3:30 o'clock.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. CROW. The 10 minutes allowed on this amendment will expire at 20 minutes after 3, and that will give us 10 minutes to consider 19 amendments?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. SIKES. Mr. Chairman, inasmuch as a number of Members have sought to speak on the so-called Shafer amendment, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may extend their remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

There was no objection.

Mr. VURSELL. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the Shafer amendment. It simply provides that when this draft bill is enacted, that it does not go into effect before January 31, 1949, and not then unless the Congress and the President approves it.

This delay will give the Army officials about 6 months' time to see if by putting on a real drive they can get the extra 230,000 men they need as volunteers. If they fail and world conditions get worse we can then in the next session quickly, if necessary, put the act into effect.

If world conditions during this time grow suddenly worse the President can call the Congress to meet in a special session and we can in a few days approve the legislation and quickly begin inductions.

During the 6 months two things can and may happen to make it unnecessary: They may be able to secure enough volunteers; more important, more peaceful world conditions may develop, making it entirely unnecessary to fasten military conscription on this country.

It would be unwise and a great mistake to enact the draft in peacetime unless it is absolutely necessary for the defense of our country.

I hope the House will approve this amendment: I do not believe world conditions are such that we cannot delay the actual operation of the draft for these few months. It may save billions of dollars and will prevent the disturbing of the plans of our young men, their schooling, and so forth.

I do not believe the Members of the House are justified in defeating this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New York [Mr. Keating].

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Chairman, I shall support the Shafer amendment.

Opposition to any measure relating to selective service stems from three groups with which I can find little common ground on which to meet.

First, of course, are those misguided—indeed, thoroughly reprehensible—Americans, who, from ulterior motives, are opposed to any effort to strengthen our national defenses, and, in fact, seek to weaken them. Their subservience to a foreign power and venal subordination of the interests of their own country subjects them to the justified condemnation of every patriotic American. To find one's self in agreement with them on any issue is abhorrent to one's better instincts.

A second group who opposes the measure are sincere pacifists who do not believe in war, even when a country is attacked by an aggressor, and who therefore contend that no step whatever should be taken to protect our Nation militarily, that international disarmament is the only solution to the ills which beset the world, and that our Nation should set a good example by taking the first step toward such disarmament. While entirely distinguishable from the first category and thoroughly patriotic in their motives, the proponents of this position are, my mind, utterly unrealistic in this, perhaps, wicked world.

All who sincerely desire peace pray that the day may come when men may be made to realize the utter futility of war as a method of settling international disputes and may resolve, by joint action, that all nations should embark upon a systematic program of disarmament. But so long as naked aggression stalks the world, so long as there are those in high places in governments, who, through wicked lust for power, seek to dominate less powerful nations, it seems but simple common sense that our country maintain a strong national defense.

A third group which I have observed opposes any such legislation, is composed of those who look upon any effort to secure and train additional military personnel as part of a pattern for a greater participation by this country in world affairs. They argue that we should withdraw into our shell, attend to our own knitting, abandon the position of world leadership which, by choice or chance, is ours, and that thereby we can dispense with a large part of our military and naval forces and, as a corollary, will need not more, but fewer men. Conceding to this group also the utmost sincerity and devotion to their country's welfare, I feel them likewise to be misguided in their objective and shortsighted in their viewpoint. With their position, my conception of national responsibility and ultimate welfare does

Nevertheless, in addition to these groups of our citizens, finding, mayhap, their spokesmen in this body, there are many others who have what might be called a conditional opposition to any form of compulsory peacetime conscription. For myself, it is my firm belief in a strong national defense and my deep conviction that only therein lies the surest road to an enduring and just peace, which raises in my mind a conflict, in the face of an inherent revolusion against attaining this objective through the imposition of a compulsion on our youth, our family life, our economy, and our innate sense of freedom.

A difficult decision is before us. I have wrestled with the problem. I have prayed to God for guidance in its solu-

Having voted for a large number of defense measures, having supported various foreign-aid programs, having enjoyed the high privilege of voluntarily serving my country in the armed forces for several years, I approached the problem before us sympathetically, and certainly with an open mind. My mind is still open, though my sympathy with this legislation considerably dimmed.

A basic premise in my thinking on the issues before us is my emphatic conviction that every possible effort to secure the required strength for our forces by voluntary means should first be exhausted before we resort to compulsion. Generally speaking, volunteers make better soldiers. That, however, is secondary. My primary objection is based upon a fundamental belief that the conscription of our youth as soldiers in peacetime is foreign to American traditions and has never led to anything but grief, and frequently, ruin, where tried.

Parenthetically, it should be pointed out that these remarks are directed toward the drafting of soldiers, not necessarily a mere training program for our youth. We must not lose sight of the fact that we are not here considering a universal military training bill, but a peacetime draft of young men for general military duties.

Many of the sincere proponents of this measure will say that we are not now at peace; that a "cold war" is going on, waged against our country with relentless fury and great resourcefulness. I cannot accept the concept that we are at war. Indeed, in the testimony of these hearings our leaders in government were asked several times whether we are confronted with a situation of national emergency. They disclaimed it. They termed the present a "period of great international tension." No doubt it is that.

We all hope and pray that this tension may be speedily and permanently relieved. In the international picture, however, with the claims and counterclaims of one nation against another and with clashes of creed and race raising ugly heads from one end of the world to the other, it seems almost too much to hope that there will not continue what may properly be described as a "period of great tension" for an indefinite length of time in the future. I seriously question whether, unless this rises to the dignity of a true emergency, our Government is justified in using it as a basis for imposing a program of compulsion upon the youth of our land.

This is not to say that a draft law should never be enacted unless this Nation is at war. Much has been said in the debate about a parallel to the year 1940, when a draft was instituted for the first time in our peacetime history, and in the year 1941 when, by a margin of one vote, this draft law was extended. have searched this record in vain for a statement on the part of any of our national defense leaders to the effect that we are now faced with a crisis comparable to that then presented. If I were convinced by anything in this record or in the debate-indeed, if the chairman or any members of the Armed Services Committee, or any other Member, can produce satisfactory evidence that my Nation stands in immediate peril, that a true emergency now exists, I shall have no hesitancy in voting for immediate Upon evidence, however, conscription. not generalities nor hysteria, I shall make my decision.

To a large extent, of course, we must rely upon our military and naval advisers for an estimate of the requirements of our national defense. We are told that the Army on March 1 was about 129,000 below its authorized strength and that it was losing men in the first months of this year at a rate of 6,000 to 8,000 a month above its enlistments. Unless this tendency is checked, it will result in a shortage at the end of the year of around 200,000 men, we are informed.

There is no pressure on the part of the Navy or the Air Force for the passage of this bill. They have been able to keep up their strength through voluntary methods. In this connection a strange sentence appears in the majority report, at page 3, where it says:

The Air Force expects to meet all of its needs through voluntary recruitment but this expectation appears optimistic to the committee—at least, in the absence of a selective-service law.

One wonders whether an equal degree of skepticism existed in the minds of the committee regarding the confidence on the part of the Army that it could not obtain its requisite strength through voluntary methods.

We are asked here today to embark upon a radical departure from fundamental American traditions. There are those who sincerely and ably argue that this is a course which we should have long since pursued. I should not want to close my mind to the possibility of being convinced regarding the soundness of that argument. To date, however, I remain unconvinced.

Until I am completely satisfied that every effort has been made by the Army to obtain voluntary recruits sufficient to provide reasonable military strength, I am not prepared to place in the hands of the military the weapon of compulsion. It is my belief that by the amendment now before us, buttressed by other amendments which I hope will be offered and passed, a sincere, intensified effort may be made to met the necessary manpower requirements of the Army.

The amendment contemplates that new enlistments be taken for a 2-year period, which should draw many men now unwilling to sign up for 3 years. Reenlistments must be accepted for a 1-or 2-year period, which I know, from several personal experiences in my own congressional district, will cause many men to decide to continue on, whereas they would be unwilling to do so under the rigid 3-year requirement now in force.

It is my hope that an amendment will be adopted later to require the Army to reduce the unnecessarily high aptitude qualifications. I favor an increase in basic pay, at least for enlisted personnel. Steps should be taken to implement our legislation to provide better housing for married enlisted men.

Nor should the Secretaries of the Army, Navy, and Air Force consider this amendment, if written into law, as limiting them to the specific steps outlined therein, to obtain voluntary enlistments. They are directed by it to initiate and carry forward an intensified voluntary enlistment campaign. That means action, not lip service. It means pursuit of this objective indicating the will of Congress, with the same devotion to duty and to their country which our military leaders so eloquently displayed in time of

I share the regret voiced by my good neighbor, the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH], over wholesale and indiscriminate criticism of the great soldiers who now occupy high position in military and naval circles. Only a short time ago they were national heroes. Their achievements in the recent war are perhaps unmatched in all military history. Although no more nor less infallible than Congressmen, they are men of great ability and unswerving loyalty. If they will sincerely devote their unusual energy and talents to a program to obtain voluntary enlistments, calling upon the civilian population for aid in this intensified campaign, there is every reason to anticipate that it may never be necessary to put into actual effect the provisions of such a law as that now before us.

Only if the Army fails in the successful pursuit of this mission, should we recruit a conscript force. That is the motivating purpose of this amendment.

It is so vital to the crucial issue before us that there are many, I am sure, who feel as I do, that we will support it and will find great difficulty in voting for the measure, without such a provision incorporated in it.

In providing for the adequate defense of our Nation, we must not weaken the central pillar of our strength, which is our freedom.

Let us, by the passage of this amendment, first exercise compulsion on the United States Army to acquire volunteers, before employing compulsion to force conscripts into the Army.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recog-

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from California [Mr. HINSHAW].

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Chairman, as has been stated here, neither the Navy nor the Air Force have any particular direct need for this bill. However, just as the Army is in favor of it, so are the Navy and the Air Force in favor of it as a matter of mutual support. Why does the Army need men? It needs them because our boys do not like to serve in Korea or in Europe. They dislike that service very much indeed. But more than that, I do not believe the Army has put on a satisfactory recruiting program. I have looked at these copies of recruiting posters which have been presented to us informally on this floor. They are made to frighten a boy from enlisting in the United States Army instead of encouraging enlistment. It seems to me that the public-relations section of the recruiting service could do a great deal better than that. I believe in view of the lack of emergency, as has been stated, that the so-called Shafer amendment has merit.

Mr. TIBBOTT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. TIBBOTT. Mr. Chairman, during the past several months I have received many letters from constituents on the draft bill. I know this is true of other Members of Congress, too.

There are those who favor the draft and there are those who are opposed to it. Frankly, I respect the opinions of all on this important legislation.

Those who say that we should not pass the bill during peacetime have a good argument; however, we are still technically at war. The President has not asked Congress to declare the war officially over. It is obvious, then, that the Chief Executive has evidence that the international situation is rather perilous.

We cannot ignore the possibilities of a third world war. We cannot then say we just do not want to do anything about it. We most certainly are a big part of this world. I am of the opinion that Russia is still reaching out for world domination. This makes the international situation more critical.

As a nation which is involved in perilous world conditions, what are we going to do about it from a protection standpoint? The answer, as I see it, is to remain strong as a nation, which after all we must be if we are to sustain our liberty and freedom.

I am a firm believer in the volunteer enlistment system for a strong Air Force, Army, and Navy. I favor the proper appeals from the volunteer angle to those interested in joining our defense forces. We must fight to preserve our democratic way of life. There should be no doubt in any nation's mind that we will fight to protect it.

It comes down to this, then, that our best line of action is one of preparedness. We should, in the face of this, train our boys for self-defense as we teach our children to protect themselves against danger. At the same time there should be safeguards in this act against evil. There should also be in the law a provision to protect our youth against the loss of educational opportunities. I am supporting every amendment offered for such. I am supporting the Shafer amendment, which to all purposes provides for an intensified volunteer enlistment campaign before this bill becomes effective.

The needs of the armed forces demand the kind of action contained in this measure.

We do not want to witness another Pearl Harbor, but we must be prepared against such an attack. It is an unpleasant thing to think of, but should another Pearl Harbor come to our shores we must have more security than we had on December 3, 1941.

For these compelling reasons I shall cast my vote in support of this measure with the amendments which I have previously mentioned.

It is not legislation of aggression, but that of security.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Crow].

Mr. CROW. Mr. Chairman, I am only taking this minute so that I can talk on one amendment which is at the desk, It looks as though I will not get to say anything at all.

I am asking to add a new paragraph on page 4, between lines 8 and 9. This paragraph appears in the bill that was passed by the other body. It simply requires that before any man can be inducted they must furnish proper shelter, sanitary facilities, water supply, heating and lighting facilities, medical care, and hospital accommodations.

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. The committee will accept the amendment. Mr. CROW. I thank the gentleman very much.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California [Mr. HOLIFIELD].

Mr. HOLIFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I offer a preferential motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. HOLIFIELD moves that the committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with the enacting clause deleted.

Mr. HOLIFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I have waited on this floor now for 3 days and since 10 o'clock this morning in order to be allowed to speak for 5 minutes on this bill. I believe that the Shafer amendment should be agreed to. In view of the fact that we are being precluded from full debate on the important matter which is before us; in view of the fact that the Shafer amendment has not been adequately discussed. I have offered a preferential motion so that I might be recognized by the Chairman for 5 minutes. The Shafer amendment is the most important amendment that can be presented to this bill, in that it allows the American tradition which has been established for 165 years to be extended for 7 more months. That is what it amounts to. For 165 years this Nation has grown and prospered on the theory of volunteer armament and no conscription in peacetime. It is true we have resorted to conscription in wartime, and I have voted for such a bill. I am not a pacifist, although I hate war with all my heart. I have voted for every defense measure that has been presented in this House in the last 6 years. I am not a Wallaceite. The Wallace party is running a candidate for Congress against me in my district, trying to defeat me. I consider that I am a traditional American; an American who believes in the Constitution and the principles thereof; the principles which, once established, caused the greatest wave of immigration to this country that the world has ever known, from countries which employed the method of peacetime conscription; countries which have gone to rack and ruin and to defeat in military competition with free nations, because they depended upon conscription of their military personnel.

I call to your attention, and I challenge the committee to show me a Nation, which has been able to perpetuate itself, which employed peacetime conscription. As an example, I point to Germany in World War I. Peacetime conscription brought Germany to her knees, defeated by free nations. She failed. Conscripted soldiers did not defend her borders. When the battle became hot the German conscripts wilted and surrended to free troops.

In World War II, Italy, Japan, and Germany had had 25 years of peacetime conscription to build up their defenses, to militarize their nations; to goosestep their nations; to regiment their industries. Yet they fell before the onslaught of free men from free democracies, who outproduced, who outworked, and who outfought these slave labor and slave soldiers of the nations which practiced peacetime conscription.

Mr. KILDAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOLIFIELD. I will not yield now. Mr. KILDAY. The gentleman does not intend to yield?

Mr. HOLIFIELD. That is right. The gentleman has had unlimited time on this floor, due to the fact that he is a member of the committee. This is the first time that I have been able to obtain 5 minutes during this day's debate.

The Army has not proved its good faith in trying to get volunteers. The Navy embarked on a volunteer program and in March of this year it had to stop its volunteer program because it received in March 19,000 applications and its quota was only 15,000. The Air Force is turning men down every day.

I have letters on my desk of boys wanting to go back into the Army, having served in World War II, and they are being refused.

The Shafer amendment insures that the armed forces will make an honest attempt to obtain volunteer enlistments for the Army in the next 7 months and then the President, can inaugurate the draft.

The Shafer amendment would supersede the amendment that was adopted with committee approval, which puts upon the President of the United States 2 weeks before the November election the political handicap of pulling the trigger on the draft.

I maintain that such cowardice on the part of Congress is inexcusable. Congress should have the nerve to take the responsibility of deciding whether we need a draft or not.

The original Shafer amendment put the responsibility on the President and Congress jointly. The pending Shafer amendment removes the responsibility of Congress concurring with the President.

I regret that this deletion occured and although I shall support the pending amendment, I regret this return to the political cowardice I have mentioned. The present amendment postpones the action of the President from 90 days to 7 months.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.
Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Mr.

Chairman, I rise in opposition to the motion.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to this motion made by the gentleman from California to report the bill back to the House with the recommendation that the enacting clause be stricken out. In substance what this motion does is kill the bill.

I can well understand the viewpoint, the honest viewpoint of the ones who do not approve this bill, but my mind goes back a few years, back to 1938, as a member of the Naval Affairs Committee, when we saw the specter arising across the sea of Hitler, Mussolini, and the war lords of Japan, and we saw Admiral Leahy appear before the Committee on Naval Affairs and recommend an expansion in the fleet of only 20 percent. We saw immediately an outburst of opposition in the committee and all over the country. After many many days of hearings we reported out a bill recommending this 20 percent expansion. That bill was reported on the floor of the House and when the vote was counted, 100 votes had been cast against that bill even though it had been 16 years since we had built any battleships of any size or number; and yet, Mr. Chairman, it was these very ships that were authorized on the floor of the House as a result of the recommendation of the Naval Affairs Committee in 1938 that won the battle of the Philippines in the recent war.

Then we come into the year of 1940 after Hitler had overrun northern France and the Lowlands and had reached Dunkerque and the Channel ports, before we had risen to the point where we felt that in the interest of our own security we ought to enact the draft. The Selective Service Act was passed late in that year.

Then we come to September of 1941 and the question before the House then was whether we should extend the draft giving those boys a better training who were already in and to build up a stronger Army. We had already called the National Guard in; and, Mr. Chairman, we heard then as we are hearing today the same voices in opposition to the extension of the draft that we are hearing in opposition to this bill today; and the bill passed by only one vote.

Mr. Chairman, we are in a similar situation today insofar as our future security is concerned, that demands action. Why do I say that? As a member of the Committee on the Armed Services I inquired of some of the witnesses, of course, as to how they felt about world conditions. Let me just repeat the question that was asked of Dr. Karl J. Compton, of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, who was a member of the President's Committee To Investigate the Need of a Universal Military Training Program, whether or not in his opinion the situation today is as critical insofar as our own future security is concerned as it was in 1938, 1940, and 1941. And what was his answer?

"In many ways," Dr. Compton says, "I think the situation may be more serious now than it was then."

Then Dr. Walsh, another member of the President's committee, had something to say. He said that the menace is greater today than it was in the periods I mentioned before.

The Committee on the Armed Services of the House has given this matter very thorough consideration. We are interested, of course, in the security of our country and in the peace of the world. If it were not for that feeling on our part we certainly would not recommend the passage of this legislation today. We know the specter of communism that exists throughout the world. We know that it is a world movement and sooner or later it may involve the security of this great Nation of ours.

I hope the motion will be rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the preferential motion offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. Holi-FIELD].

The question was taken; and the Chair being in doubt, the Committee divided, and there were—ayes 22, noes

So the motion was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Cunningham].

Mr. CUNNINGHAM. Mr. Chairman, in support of the Shafer amendment, I desire to read from page 2 of the committee report:

The Navy is able to maintain its present strength of 397,000 by voluntary enlistment.

The Navy modified its physical standards for both the Navy and Marine Corps during fiscal year 1948.

Mr. Chairman, no one can say that the Navy and Marine Corps are now or ever have been inferior to the Army in fighting ability. Yet they have gotten their quota by voluntary enlistments through reducing the physical requirements. If the Army had done the same thing this bill would not now be before us.

In adopting the Shafer amendment it will compel the Army to do what the Navy has done and is now doing and by next year we will know whether or not we will need this.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from California [Mr. Johnson].

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. Chairman, a moment ago the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Short] told us of three Reserve generals who are, he claims, opposed to this legislation. Every one of those men support this bill. They did criticize the activities of the War Department with reference to the National Guard and the Reserves, but they are for this bill.

Mr. Chairman, I have made a study of the recruiting efforts of the Army and I am convinced that the Army has made an honest and intelligent effort to recruit men during the last year; yet with the money at its command and considering its widespread activities in recruiting all over the United States, the Army lost 135,000 men between July 1, 1947, and March 1, 1948.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. MILLER]

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, the committee itself offered an amendment to extend the period of induction of men for 90 days after the passage of this bill. Now, that is evidence in my mind that no emergency does exist. Secretary Marshall said, I believe, today, that there is no real immediate danger of war. There is no emergency existing. Now, why should we not extend this until January 31, 1949, so that the Congress can again investigate the matter? If the armed forces, after a real effort to get men, fail, then the Congress can review the situation and take proper action. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. SHAFER] is constructive; it requires the armed forces to put on an intensive recruiting program, something they have not done. I shall offer an amendment to reduce the examination point to 70—it is 80 now, and during the draft it was 56 points. I sincerely feel that these amendments will make for a better bill. It will draw support to the bill. I urge the committee to adopt both amendments.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Rich].

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, 1 minute to discuss the amendment now pending is not enough. Certainly there has been no reason given why this amendment should not be adopted. The greatest reason why it should not be adopted is the attitude taken by the leaders of this committee to have this law passed. I want to tell you that we are in bad shape in this country and we are in bad shape because the Army has got such a hold on a lot of people in this Congress that they are afraid to do anything that the Army does not want them to do, and you wait until they get the same hold on the people of this country that they have on some of the members of this committee, and then this country is going to be in the grip of the United States Army.

Mr. NICHOLSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. NICHOLSON. I would like to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania if he wants to send my boy and girl and my family to war without any reason?

Mr. RICH. I do not want to send your boy to war. I do not want to conscript anybody's boy. I think it is un-American. I think you will get all the boys you need if the country is in danger, and you will not have to worry about that. The boys will volunteer when they know that the United States is in danger. That is the reason I am against the bill. It is not necessary—this bill in particular is not necessary. Our people will join our Army to protect our Nation when the Nation is in danger. They always have done so and they always will do just that. No one has stated we are in such danger. Let the United Nations do their work in preventing war; you set them up for that purpose. You have given billions of dollars to prevent war. This is a red flag in front of a wild bull trying to start the third world war. Stop, think, pray, look, listen.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from North Carolina

[Mr. DURHAM].

Mr. DURHAM. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Missouri raises a question in regard to the National Guard and the Army recruiting program. We spent last year $35,000,000 for a recruiting program, and I suppose we could have spent more if we could have gotten it out of this Congress. It was probably our fault. It cost $140 per man to get those recruits. Now, that is the picture. Now the picture with regard to amount expended for Reserve components 1948 and for request for 1949. The estimated expendi-ture in 1948 for the National Guard was $104,000,000, for the Air National Guard $45,000,000, for the Army Organized Reserves $277,301,000, for the Air Force $4,014,000, and for the Navy, including Marines, $159,530,000.

This year, fiscal 1949, the budget requests are $154,216,000 for the National Guard, for the Air National Guard, $70,- 784,000.

Organized Reserves: Army, $52,000,-000; Air Force, $73,000,000; Navy, including Marines, $364,146,000. Sure we have not done enough but it is not altogether the Army's fault.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Shafer].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. Holifield) there were—ayes 123, noes 72.

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chairman appointed as tellers Mr. Shafer and Mr. Andrews of New York.

The Committee again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 135, noes 90.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. REES. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment which is at the Clerk's desk. Amendment to H. R. 6401 offered by Mr. REES: On page 6, following subsection (d) insert:

"(e) The passing requirement for the general classification test shall be fixed at 70 points or less. The monthly requisitions on the President under this act by the Secretary of Defense, the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Navy, or the Secretary of the Air Force shall not exceed the number of men required after consideration of the actual number of voluntary enlistments during the 3 months preceding that month in which the requisition is made."

Mr. VINSON. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. VINSON. Mr. Chairman, by direction of the Committee, debate ceases at 3:30 o'clock on section 4, is that correct?

The CHAIRMAN. That is correct.

Mr. REES. Mr. Chairman, the intent of this amendment is to fix the ceiling at 70 points on general classification tests and limiting the draft to the number needed over voluntary enlistments. One of the things that has been discussed during the debate on this measure is that the Army has been fixing these points too the Army has been fixing these points too high. I call attention to the fact that the recent war was fought on a basis of passing grade of 59 in the classification text. Furthermore, our Army prior to the war was smaller than the Army that is being asked for today. It was passed on a 59 mark for entrance.

reason to believe that the Army has injured the volunteer system because of the requirements now being made. The reason there are so many rejections is because the Army requires a mark of 80 points. The passing test of 80 is unnecessarily high. General Eisenhower, in testifying before the Senate Armed Services Committee, at page 1001 of the

It has been charged and there is good

Senate hearings on universal military training, said, and I quote:

My memory is sometimes tricky, but I thought I had directed, before I left as Chief of Staff, to drop, for the Ground Forces at least, the figure back to 70, and I thought there is where it was, so we could fill up certain places where we could do this.

If the passing mark were lowered to the figure where General Eisenhower thought it should be fixed, at 70, the Army, in my judgment, could get the additional 300,000 men required under this legislation by voluntary enlistment. If not, they can come a whole lot nearer doing it than now, and thereby cut down the demand for draft legislation. Even at 70 the requirements are so much higher for a so-called peace army than the military required for an active fighting force.

The last draft bill passed by Congress contained the provision:

And provided further, That the monthly requisitions on the President under this Act by the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy shall not exceed the nun ber of men required after consideration of the actual number of voluntary enlistments during the 3 months preceding that month in which the requisition is made (title 50, U. S. Code No. 303 (a)).

The purpose was to prevent unnecessary drafting of men. If the Army's requirements were filled by voluntary enlistment, it was not necessary for them to draft men, and it was not the intent of Congress that men should be drafted unnecessarily. The language of the proposed amendment's taken from this act.

Coupled with a required ceiling of 70, I believe it would be effective in materially reducing the need for the drafting of any men. It seems to me that courses of training in our colleges and the extension of the Reserve Corps and the expansion of the National Guard would further relieve the demand on the part of the Army for the drafting of men.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kansas has expired.

All time has expired on this section.
The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. Rees].

The amendment was agreed to.
Mr. CROW. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which is at the Clerk's desk.
The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Crow: On page 4, between lines 8 and 9, add the following paragraph:

"No person shall be inducted for cuch training and service until adequate provision shall have been made for such shelter, sanitary facilities, water supplies, heating and lighting arrangements, medical care, and hospital accommodations, for such persons, as may be determined by the Secretary of Defense to be essential to public and personal health."

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. Mr. Chairman, the committee will accept the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which is at the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Miller of Nebraska: On page 6, line 21, after the section, strike the period and insert "Provided, That during the life of this act there shall be in the Army, including the Air Force, and in the Navy, including the Marine Corps, a ratio to total active strength of not to exceed 2 doctors of medicine and 2 dentists per 1,000 men; 1 osteopath per 5,000 men; 1 veterinarian per 2,000 men; and 1 pharmacist and 1 optometrist per 3,000 men."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. MILLER].

The amendment was rejected.
Mr. FOLGER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment which is at the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Folger:
On page 3, line 17, after "between the ages of", strike out "nineteen" and insert "twenty-one";

And in line 19, strike out "nineteen" and insert "twenty-one."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Carlina [Mr. Folger].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. Chairman, selective service in time of peace is in direct conflict with the philosophy of our American democracy. This is the sec-ond time in the life of our Nation this Congress has considered selective service when we were at peace.

In 1940, after Hitler had successfully annexed Austria, by force, taken over Czechoslovakia, Poland, the Lowlands, and France and we could see the war clouds shifting in our direction a selective service and training act was passed by this Congress. In the face of loud complaints from many of the pacifist groups the country recognized the danger which threatened our very lives. The war has been fought and won at a terrible sacrifice, but technically, Mr. Chairman, we are still at war, the national emergency not having yet been terminated, and even more important, the peace has not been achieved.

I do not like selective service. I do not believe any militaristic government can long prevail. I do not like to have to vote for selective service, in time of peace or war, but we must recognize the cold facts and act accordingly.

This is a selective-service act to provide the personnel necessary to win the peace as we have won the war. It is not a selective training program. It is not a universal military program. It is a program, I repeat, to provide adequate personnel to assure this Nation that we intend to back up the peace in an effort that we believe will avoid another terrible and devastating world conflict. It is a program for a period of 2 years, a time in which we fervently hope that peace will come to a troubled world.

If this legislation is needed at all, it is needed now. Postponing it until January 31 is further endangering the peace.

in my opinion.

It makes little difference whether it becomes necessary for the President to declare a day within a certain time for it to become effective. It is a responsibility that must be accepted by both the legislative and executive branches of our Government.

It is not so important from the national welfare whether we have the personnel inducted for a period of 1 year, 18 months, or 2 years. The question before the Nation today is: Are we willing to show the world that we are going to stand solidly on a program for peace or will we relegate ourselves into a pacifist and hopeful attitude as we did after World War T?

This amendment postponing the effectiveness of this act to January 31 is allimportant. We have heard the old adage that "Nero fiddled while Rome burned." Mutilating this legislation to make it wholly ineffective is worse if it is possible than its actual defeat. If we fail to back up our program for peace, we are sowing the seed of world war III.

How easy it is to lapse into a coma. How easy it is to become complacent. It was so after the First World War. We demobilized after this world war in good faith and the forces that would ally themselves with Russia are joining with forces who fail in my opinion to recognize the truth to defeat this program as all other programs, if we win the cold war and ultimately have a durable and just peace.

Why is it necessary to have selective service? We only have to go back to the actions of this country for the past three years for testimony as to our intentions. We have a lot of action in the interest of peace unparalleled in history. On the other hand, Russia has deliberately failed to cooperate in reaching a peaceful settlement but on the other hand through aggression not only thwarted the peace but has actually taken over many nations and endeavoring to force its own totalitarianism on other freedom-loving peoples.

It is a recognized fact that the international situation over the past several months has seriously deteriorated. Specific, aggressive, and dangerous action on the part of the Soviet Union makes it mandatory that we respond to these dangers.

We only have to look to their actions in Greece and threats on Turkey, the Communist coup d'état in Czechoslovakia, the excessive pressure on Finland immediately thereafter, the threat in Scandinavia and the severe and annoying restrictions on our American occupation forces in Berlin, Vienna, and Therefore, we have given the Army an assignment. We have given it a mission to carry out. It cannot adequately carry out this mission unless it has adequate personnel. When I was in Europe with our committee last year, the Army was undermanned in every occupation zone. I say we should bring about our giving them sufficient strength and personnel to carry out the mission to which we have assigned them.

This mission, I repeat, is to bring about peace, the kind of peace that will endure. Without it, it will be only a few years, I believe, until we would be called upon again to expend our resources, our economy and millions of youth again.

Let us not sell the Nation short. We have been given by divine providence a position of leadership. Let us not by inaction permit our own house to be destroyed. If this were a permanent program it would be an entirely different question at this time. It is a limited program for a specific purpose. We are facing today and will for the next few years and until the peace is attained the fears that I have entertained during these hectic years we have gone through, and that is we were willing to sacrifice, produce, and fight to preserve freedom, but are we willing to pay the price to preserve the peace that will sustain the

The CHAIRMAN. Are there further amendments to section 4? If not, the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 5. (a) Commissioned officers, warrant officers, pay clerks, enlisted men, and aviation cadets of the Regular Army, the Navy, the Air Force, the Marine Corps, the Coast Guard, the Coast and Geodetic Survey, and the Public Health Service; cadets, United States Military Academy; midshipmen, United States Navy; cadets, United States Coast Guard Academy; members of the Reserve components of the armed forces, the Coast Guard, and the Public Health Service, while on active duty; and foreign diplomatic representatives, technical attachés of for-eign embassies and legations, consuls general, consuls, vice consuls, and other consular agents of foreign countries who are not citizens of the United States, and members of their families, and persons in other categories to be specified by the President, residing in the United States, and who have not declared their intention to become citizens of the United States, shall not be required to be registered under section 3 and shall be relieved from liability for service under section 4 (b).

(b) (1) No person who has been awarded the Purple Heart or who has served honor ably on active duty after September 16, 1940, for a period of 12 months or more in the Army, the Air Force, the Navy, the Marine Corps, the Coast Guard, or the Public Health Service on active duty with the armed forces or the Coast Guard, or in the armed forces of any country allied with the United States in World War II prior to September 2, 1945, shall without his consent be liable for induction for service under this act, except after a declaration of war or national emergency made by Congress subsequent to the date of enactment of this act.

(2) No person who, for service in the armed forces between December 7, 1941, and September 2, 1945, has been authorized to wear any badge, award, or decoration, or other authorized evidence of exceptional valor in the face of the enemy, bravery in combat, or continued service in combat, as determined under regulations prescribed by the President, shall without his consent be liable for induction for service under this act, but shall be required to register under section 3.

(3) No person who has served honorably on active duty after September 16, 1940, for a period of 90 days or more but less than 12 months in the Army, the Air Force, the Navy, the Marine Corps, the Coast Guard, or the Public Health Service on active duty with the armed forces or the Coast Guard, or in the armed forces of any country allied with the United States in World War II prior to September 2, 1945, shall without his consent be liable for induction for service under this act, except after a declaration of war or national emergency made by Congress subsequent to the date of enactment of this act, if-

(A) the local board determines that he is regularly enlisted or commissioned in an organized unit of a Reserve component of the armed force in which he served, or in a Re-serve component (other than in an organized unit) of the armed forces in which he served in any case in which enlistment or commission in such organized unit is not available to him; or

(B) the local board determines that enlistment or commission in a Reserve component of the armed force in which he served is not available to him.

(c) For the purposes of computation of the periods of active duty referred to in subsec-tion (b) of this section, no credit shall be allowed for-

(A) periods of active duty for training purposes;

(B) periods of active duty in which the service consisted solely of training under the Army specialized training program, the Army Air Force college training program, or any similar program under the jurisdiction of the Navy, Marine Corps, or Coast Guard;

(C) periods of active duty as a cadet at the United States Military Academy or United States Coast Guard Academy, or as a midshipman at the United States Naval Academy, or in a preparatory school after nomination as a principal, alternate, or candidate for admission to any of such Academies: or

(D) periods of active duty in any of the armed forces while being processed for entry into or separation from any educational program or institution referred to in paragraphs (B) or (C).

(d) (1) Persons who, on the effective date of this act, are members of the federally recognized National Guard, the federally recognized Air National Guard, the Officers' Reserve Corps, the Regular Army Reserve, the Air Force Reserve, the Enlisted Reserve Corps, the Naval Reserve, the Marine Corps Re-serve, the Coast Guard Reserve, and the Public Health Service Reserve, and are not on active duty, shall, so long as they continue to be such members, and perform service for which they are entitled to receive pay throughout the year for attendance at drill or equivalent duty, be exempt from service by induction or call to active duty under the provisions of this act, but not from registration.

(2) Except as provided in subsection (b) and except as hereinafter provided, no person who shall become a member of a Reserve component after the effective date of this act shall thereby be exempt from registra-tion or service by induction or call to active duty under the provisions of this act: Provided, That persons who, prior to attaining the age of 18 years and 6 months, are appointed to or enlisted in an organized unit of any of the Reserve components of the armed forces mentioned in paragraph (1) of this subsection, which participate in sched-uled drills and training periods throughout the year, shall, so long as they continue to be members of any of such components, be exempt from service by induction under the provisions of this act, but not from registration.

(e) (1) Any person who, on the effective date of this act, is enrolled in the advanced course, senior division, Reserve Officers' Training Corps or the Air Reserve Officers' Training Corps, or is a member of the Naval Reserve Officers' Training Corps and has entered upon the junior or senior year, or is a midshipman, United States Naval Reserve, shall be deferred from induction for service under this act until the completion or termination of the course of instruction and so long thereafter as he continues in a regular or reserve status upon being commissloned, but shall be required to register under section 3, but after completion or termination of the course of instruction may be ordered to active duty without his consent as provided in paragraph (3) of this subsection. (2) Within such number as may be pre scribed by the Secretary of Defense any person who, on or after the effective date of this act, is selected for enrollment or continuance in the senior division, Reserve Officers Training Corps or Air Reserve Officers' Training Corps, or who is appointed a midshipman, United States Naval Reserve, or is a member of the Naval Reserve Officers' Training Corps and who is selected for enrollment or continuance in the course after the effective date of this act, and who agrees, in writing, to accept a commission if tendered and to serve, subject to call by the Secretary of the Army, the Secretary of the Air Force, or the Secretary of the Navy, respectively, not less than 3 years on active duty after receipt of a commission, shall be deferred from induction for service under this act until after completion or termination of the course of instruction and so long thereafter as he continues in a regular or reserve status upon being commissioned, but shall be required to register under section 3.

(3) Notwithstanding any other provision of law or of this act except paragraphs (1) and (2) of subsection (d) of this section, the President is hereby authorized to order into the active service of the armed forces of the United States, for a period not to exceed 24 consecutive months each, members of any or all reserve components of the armed forces of the United States without their consent who prior to the effective date of this act have had less than 90 days' continuous active service in the armed forces of the United States, exclusive of periods of active training duty: Provided, That with respect to ordering members of the National Guard of the United States into the active service of the United States, the consent of the Governor of the State or Territory concerned, in each case, and for the District of Columbia, the consent of the Commanding General of the District of Columbia National Guard, shall first be secured: Provided further, That this subsection shall not be construed as repealing or abridging any existing law which authorizes the ordering of members of reserve components into active service.

(f) Fully qualified and accepted aviation cadet applicants of the Army, Navy, and Air Force who have signed an agreement of service shall, in such numbers as may be designated by the Secretary of Defense, be deferred, during the period covered by the agreement but not to exceed 4 months, from induction for service under this act, but shall be required to register under section 3.

(g) The Vice President of the United States; the governors of the several States, Territories, and possessions, and all other officials chosen by the voters of the entire State, Territory, or possession; members of the legislative bodies of the United States and of the several States, Territories, and possessions; judges of the courts of record of the United States and of the several States, Territories, possessions, and the District of Columbia shall, while holding such offices, be deferred from service under this act in the armed forces of the United States.

(h) Regular or duly ordained ministers of religion and students preparing for the ministry under the direction of recognized churches or religious organizations, who are satisfactorily pursuing full-time courses of instruction in recognized theological or divinity schools or who are satisfactorily pursuing full-time courses of instruction leading to their entrance into recognized theological or divinity schools in which they have been preenrolled, shall be exempt from service (but not from registration) under this act

(i) (1) The President is authorized, under such rules and regulations as he may pre-scribe, to provide for the deferment from service under this act in the armed forces of the United States of any or all categories of persons whose employment in industry, agriculture, or other occupations or employment, or whose continued service in an office (other than an office described in subsection (g) under the United States or any State, Territory, or possession, or the District of Columbia, or whose activity in other endeavors is found to be necessary to the maintenance of the national health, safety, or interest: Provided, That no person within any such category shall be deferred except upon the basis of his individual status. The President is also authorized, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, to provide for the deferment from service under this act in the armed forces of the United States (1) of any or all categories of persons in a status with respect to persons dependent upon them for support which renders their deferment advisable, and (2) of any or all categories of those persons found to be physically, mentally, or morally deficient or defective. For the purpose of determining whether or not the deferment of any person is advisable, because of his status with respect to persons dependent upon him for support, any payments of allowances which are payable by the United States to the dependents of per-sons serving in the armed forces of the United States shall be taken into consideration, but States shall be taken into consideration, but the fact that such payments of allowances are payable shall not be deemed conclusively to remove the grounds for deferment when the dependency is based upon financial considerations and shall not be deemed to remove the grounds for deferment when the de-pendency is based upon other than financial considerations and cannot be eliminated by financial assistance to the dependents. President is also authorized, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, to pro-vide for the deferment from service under this act in the armed forces of the United States of any or all categories of persons who have wives or children, or wives and children, with whom they maintain a bona fide family relationship in their homes. No deferment from such service shall be made in the case of any individual except upon the basis of the status of such individual. There shall be posted in a conspicuous place at the office of each local board a list setting forth the names and classifications of those persons who have been classified by such local board.

(2) Anything in this act to the contrary notwithstanding, the President is authorized, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, to provide for the deferment, by age group or groups, from service under this act in the armed forces of the United States, of those persons whose age or ages are such that he finds their deferment to be advisable in the national interest: Provided, That the President may, upon finding that it is in the national interest, terminate the deferment by age group or groups of any or all of the persons so deferred.

(j) (1) Any person who, while satisfactor-ily pursuing a full-time course of instruction at a high school or similar institution of learning, is ordered to report for induction under this act prior to his graduation from such school or institution, shall, upon his request, have his induction under this act postponed (A) until the time of his graduation therefrom, or (B) until he attains the twentieth anniversary of his birth, or (C) until he ceases to satisfactorily pursue such course of instruction, whichever is the earliest. The induction of any such person shall not be postponed under this subsection beyond the date so determined.

(2) Any person who, while satisfactorily pursuing a full-time course of instruction at a college, university, or similar institution of higher learning, is ordered to report for induction under this act after the beginning and prior to the end of one of his academic years, shall, upon his request, have his induction under this act postponed (A) until the end of such academic year or (B) until he ceases to satisfactorily pursue such course of instruction, whichever is the earlier.

(k) Nothing contained in this act shall be construed to require any person to be subject to combatant service (which for the purposes hereof includes training for combatant duties) in the armed forces of the United States who, by reason of religious training and belief, is conscientiously opposed to participation in war in any form. Religious training and belief in this connection means an individual's belief in a relation to a Supreme Being involving duties superior to those arising from any human relation, but does not include essentially sociological or philosophical views or a merely personal moral code. Any such person claiming such exemption from combatant service because cf such conscientious objections whose claim is sustained by the local board shall, if he is inducted into the armed forces under this act, be assigned to noncombatant service as defined by the President, or shall, if he is found to be conscienticusly opposed to participation in such noncombatant service, be deferred. Any such person claiming such exemption from combatant service because of such conscientious objections shall, if such conscientious objections shall, if such claim is not sustained by the local board, be entitled to an appeal to the appropriate appeal board. Upon the filing of such appeal, the appeal board shall refer any such claim to the Department of Justice for inquiry and hearing. The Department of Justice shall hold a hearing with respect to the character and good faith of the objections of the persons concerned, and such person shall be notified of the time and place of such hearing. The Department of Jus-tice shall, after such hearing, if the objections are found to be sustained, recommend to the appeal board that (1) if the objector is inducted into the armed forces under this act, he shall be assigned to noncombatant service as defined by the President, or (2) if the objector is found to be conscientiously opposed to participation in such noncombatant service, he shall be deferred. If after such hearing the Department of Justice finds that his objections are not sustained, it shall recommend to the appeal board that such objections be not sustained. The appeal board shall, in making its decision, give consideration to, but shall not be bound to follow, the recommendation of the Department of Justice together with the record on appeal from the local board. Each person whose claim for exemption from combatant service because of conscientious objections is sustained shall be listed by the local board on a register of conscientious objectors.

(1) No exception from registration, or exemption or deferment from service, under this act, shall continue after the cause therefor ceases to exist.

(m) No person shall be relieved from service under this act by reason of conviction for a criminal offense, except where the offense for which he has been convicted may be punished by death or by imprisonment for a term exceeding 1 year.

(n) In the case of any registrant whose principal place of employment is located outside the appeal board area in which the local board having jurisdiction over the registrant is located, any occupational defer-ment made or denied under subsection (i) of this section may, within 10 days after deferment is made or denied, be submitted for review and decision to the appeal board having jurisdiction over the area in which is located the principal place of employment of the registrant. Such decision of the ap-peal board shall be final unless modified or changed by the President, and such decision shall be made public.

(o) When one or more members of a family were killed in action or died in line of duty while serving in the armed forces of the United States between September 8, 1939, and September 2, 1945, or subsequently died as a result of injuries received or disease incurred during such service, and the sole surviving son of such family is inducted for service under the terms of this act, he shall be assigned to noncombatant service, as defined by the President, and shall not be assigned to service outside the United States

(as defined in this act).

Mr. COLE of New York (interrupting the reading). Mr. Chairman, in order to save time, I ask unanimous consent that section 5 be considered as read and open to amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from

New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. GAVIN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Gavin: On page 21, after line 23, insert the following new section 6, and renumber the following existing sections accordingly:

"SEC. 6. (a) Under policies established by the Secretary of Defense, the Secretary of the Army, the Secretary of the Navy, and the Secretary of the Air Force are authorized to accept original enlistments in the Regular Army, the United States Navy (including the Marine Corps), and the United States Air Force from among qualified aliens not less than 18 years of age for enlistment periods of not less than 3 years: Provided, That the total number of aliens who may be enlisted pursuant to this section shall not exceed 100,000 at any one time. Persons enlisted pursuant to this section shall, upon completion of 3 years' honorable service in one or more of the armed forces of the United States, be eligible, subject to such qualifications and examinations as may be prescribed, for naturalization in accordance with the provisions of section 324 of the act approved October 14, 1940 (54 Stat. 1149; 8 U. S. C. 724), and other provisions of applicable law.

"(b) Provisions of law prohibiting the pay ment of any person not a citizen of the United States shall neither apply to aliens who enlist in the Regular Army, the United States Navy (including the Marine Corps) or the Air Force, under the provisions of sub section (a) of this section nor to their de-pendents or beneficiaries,

'(c) So much of section 2 of the act approved August 1, 1894 (28 Stat. ch. 179, 216; 10 U. S. C. 625), as amended, as reads '; an lin time of peace no person (except an Indian) who is not a citizen of the United States, or who has not made legal declaration of his intention to become a citizen of the United States, shall be enlisted for the first enlistment in the Army,' is hereby repealed."

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the amendment on the ground that it is not germane and call attention to the fact that it proposes to amend the naturalization laws

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. GAVIN. Yes, Mr. Chairman. The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will be glad to hear the gentleman.

Mr. GAVIN. Mr. Chairman, I cannot understand why my distinguished friend the gentleman from New York would make a point of order against this amendment. I point out the fact that a similar amendment has been accepted by the upper body. If it is in order in the upper body, it certainly should be in order in the House.

It might be interesting to the gentleman to know that from 1941 to 1945 approximately 117,000 noncitizens were accepted into the armed services, which, I believe, established a precedent for accepting aliens into the armed services.

With my amendment, and under policies established by the Secretary of Defense, the Secretary of the Army, the Secretary of the Navy, and the Secretary of the Air Force, would be authorized to accept original enlistments in the Regular Army, the United States Navy—including the Marine Corps—and the United States Air Force from among qualified aliens not less than 18 years of age for enlistment periods of not less than 3 years, provided that the total number of aliens who were enlisted pursuant to this section would not exceed 100,000 at any one time. Persons enlisted pursuant to this section would, upon completion of 3 years' honorable service in one or more of the armed forces of the United States, be eligible, subject to such qualifications and examinations as would be prescribed, for naturalization in accordance with the provisions of section 342 of the act approved October 14, 1940, Fifty-fourth Statutes, page 1149, Eighth United States Code, page 724, and other provisions of applicable law. Therefore, I contend that this amendment is in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is prepared to rule.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Chairman, I would like to point out that all the gentleman's amendment does is add another way of getting men for the armed forces of the United States: therefore it is pertinent.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania has suggested that in view of the fact a similar amendment was adopted in another body it should be permitted here. The Chair calls attention to the fact that the House of Representatives has a rule on germaneness which does not apply to a certain other body. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania includes a proviso which affects the naturalization laws by establishing a new basis for eligibility to citizenship. A bill proposing to amend the naturalization laws would be beyond the jurisdiction of the Committee on the Armed Services. Under the rule which has been adopted no immunity was granted to Members to offer amend-ments which are not germane; consequently, the Chair is constrained to sustain the point of order.

Mr. COLE of New York. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Cole of New York: On page 14, line 24, insert after "re-ligion" the words "Christian Science readers and practitioners."

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. Mr. Chairman, so far as I am concerned, and on behalf of the committee, I accept the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr., Cole].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Record immediately prior to the reading of section 5.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arkansas?

There was no objection.

Mr. . JOHNSON of California. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I should like at this time to discuss one matter that has been repeated here many times today. I refer to the question. What is the emergency, if any, that calls for this legis-

The words used by witnesses who appeared before the committee were that there was international tension. In my humble opinion there is a distinct emergency in which the United States of America is involved today.

What is it? The war ended in August 1945. Three years have gone by, yet in that period only one treaty of peace has been signed. Why?

cause one power, one of our allies in the late war, has continuously obstructed all efforts at peace.

Furthermore, that country has overrun 10 or 12 countries by penetration, by subversive methods, and by all kinds of means contrary to the will of the people in those small countries. We do not know but what this is going to continue, and the result is that there is fear, terror, uncertainty, and hopelessness on the part of most every country in the world which was affected by the war. We are the one country, I believe, that has the capacity and the leadership to help bring stability to the world. We are the ones that pioneered and carried through the organization of the United Nations, though it has been feeble and ineffective to date. I believe that the American public is thoroughly sold on the idea that we must find some way to have selective security or the world will lapse back into the days of the Dark Ages. That is why I am so disappointed in what has been going on here today in emasculating this bill. Twenty-eight or twenty-nine members of our committee listened diligently to the testimony of the various witnesses. It appealed to our judgment that the bill before us today, which was supported by the executive department, was a step moving in the direction of world stability. In other words, if we show a determination that we are going to have peace if we have to fight for it, then perhaps we will bring peace about. You know, you can drift into a war, and if we drift along the way we are drifting, that is exactly what we might do. But you cannot drift into peace. You must have a program. You must work it out diligently. You must use every conceivable effort, including your military strength, to bring about the peace that the soldiers of the war fought for and that the people of the United States and the world want and are entitled to.
